Toronto, Jan. 2.—Local option was voted upon in 62 municipalities in Ontario yesterday. Out of 40 places heard from, 30 have given good majorities in favor of the bylaws, including the City of Owen Sound, the first city in Ontario to accept local option. But it was not won without a big fight. Against local option are Petrolea, Barton Township, each with six licenses, and Acton and Drayton, with three. License reduction carried in London, Oshawa and Peterboro, and votes to raise hotel licenses carried in Oshawa and Parry Sound.

The following is the result of the local option votes:

Local Option Council

Owen Sound, Jan. 2.—The local option bylaw carried in Owen Sound yesterday by a majority of 468. The "cold water" mayoralty candidate, Joseph T. Joyce, was elected by 195, defeating one of the most prominent business men in town, Samuel Lloyd. All the local option candidates, seven in number, were elected with good majorities, and one of the anti-local option candidates, W. H. McClarty, was elected at the end of the list.

At Oshawa—A plebiscite for raising hotel license fee to $100 carried by a majority of 389; and for the reduction of the number of hotels.

At Parry Sound—A bylaw to raise the hotel and shop license to $750 a year was carried by a large majority.

At London—A reduction bylaw carried by 552.

THE FIGHT IN TORONTO.

F. S. Spence Defeated by Coatsworth by an Overwhelming Majority.

Toronto, Jan. 2.—In a total vote cast of 28,751, according to returns as compiled last night, Emmerson Coatsworth is elected mayor over F. S. Spence by a majority of 4,106. Every one of the six wards contributes to this result. The vote is the largest ever polled in Toronto, excepting only that of last year, when it ran as high as 29,382, while the winner's margin is almost a record breaker, being second only to that of 4,500 given the late Warring Kennedy, when he first offered himself for election.

The controllers elected were: Messrs. W. P. Hubbard, S. Alfred Jones, J. J. Ward, and John Shaw.

Thirteen Conservatives are elected to council, and ten Liberals.

Majority against license reduction of taverns 1,580; against reduction of shops 2,154.

Miss Clara Brett Martin was at the head of the poll for the Board of Education, with 11,999 votes.

Conservatives Win Hamilton.

Hamilton, Jan. 2.—The Conservatives made a clean sweep at the municipal elections yesterday, electing 16 out of 21 members of the City Council, and six out of the seven members of the School Board.

Use Armour's Extract of Beef in the Right Way.

Those accustomed to ordinary beef extracts and fluid beef usually use three or four times too much of Armour's. If a recipe called for one spoonful of salt and you put in 4, the dish would be briney.

ARMOUR'S is pure Extract of Beef—highly concentrated. One-quarter teaspoonful is sufficient to make a cup of beef broth, bouillon, etc., etc.

By the addition of a small quantity of Armour's Extract of beef you can restore the juices to yesterday's roast or give a rich, beefy flavor and color to gravies, sauces and left-overs that will make them appetizing and attractive. Sold by all Druggists and Grocers.

The Toronto License Inspector.

The Toronto News is very much exercised over the removal of the Toronto License Inspector from office, and demands from the Mail and Empire evidence of the truth of its statement that that gentleman "was dismissed from office for neglect of duty."

The Mail and Empire might with great propriety refer the News to the editorial columns of the Globe of a few days ago, where the News will find ample evidence of "neglect of duty" on the part of its pet Inspector.

The Globe, after commending the present License Commissioners, under the caption of "The New Commissioners' Manifesto," says:

> "Everyone who is solicitous that the liquor laws should be strictly enforced and the evils of the traffic diminished as far as the law and the powers of the License Commissioners allow will be pleased at the text and tone of the document addressed to the trade by Mr. McNaught and his fellow-commissioners. They will be especially pleased that a rational standard for the continuance of licenses has been adopted. • • • "In their opinion," the Commissioners say, "the selling of liquor should be made subsidiary to the provision of ample and proper hotel accommodation for the housing and comfort of guests, and they therefore propose to make every licensee in the city of Toronto live up to the requirements of the act. In other words, they must keep an hotel and not a drinking saloon."

Was this done under the management of the late Inspector? Let the Globe reply. It asks this pertinent question:

> "How many licensed places are there where people can apply on the Sabbath for a well-cooked, well-served meal? There are certainly many in which any such application would be received with quite apparent disfavor, and where, if acceded to, it would be marked by circumstances tending to discourage such applications for the future. Let any bold person make the experiment and report his experience. The average tavern is the last place where one would think of applying for a meal."

And the Globe adds in confirmation of its statement, that—

> "Not long ago a gentleman and his wife desired to get accommodation in the district east of Church street, but not on that thoroughfare. Their experience was that of the licensed houses in the east there was actually only one place where tolerable board and lodging could be secured, and in the great majority of places no pretence was made of trying to furnish accommodation."

Is this not proof positive of the truth of the Mail's charge that Inspector Hastings "neglected his duty." What are Inspectors appointed for, but to see that the provisions of the law is carried out? Had Inspector Hastings, for whom the News is so solicitous, done his duty, the Globe could have made no such complaint as is contained in the above extract.

The fact is, the News' editor has not yet been sufficiently long removed from the evil party surroundings, which used to influence him, to see things through a non-party telescope. It takes time to shake off the evil shackles which bound him so long in the past. Time may remove the incubus.

TIMELY TOPICS.

• • •

The new year is off to a good start.

• • •

The weather man was good to the boys. He gave them a little skating yesterday.

• • •

Another old boys' and girls reunion is over. Auf wiedersehen!

• • •

Rev. Dr. Potts is a fine lecturer, but it took our own Mr. William Johnson to send interesting wireless messages while on the trip to Jerusalem.

• • •

That smooth old hypocrite, the Globe, got its bumps in Toronto yesterday. After shouting "No politics" for a couple of weeks, and all the time doing its best to knife the Conservative candidate, the Rev. editor had the pleasure of seeing his candidate get it "good and proper," as the boys would say. Banzai!

• • •

An interesting fact is noted in the Toronto despatch in another column, namely, that York Loan sufferers can deposit their books with the local branch of the Canadian Bank of Commerce in this city, which institution will forward them to the liquidators. This will greatly simplify matters for local sufferers.

DESTROY THE CAUSE.

You Cannot Cure Dandruff Without Destroying the Cause.

Many people wash their scalps Saturday night or Sunday to try to keep the dandruff down for the week, but on Monday night the scalp has begun to itch, and Tuesday morning will find a good supply of dandruff when the hair is brushed. There is but one real scientific way of curing dandruff; and that is to kill the germ that causes it, and falling hair, and finally baldness. There is only one preparation that will destroy the germ, and that is Newbro's Herpicide. It is an entirely new discovery and the only hair preparation that is based on the new scientific principle. In addition Herpicide is a very refreshing hair dressing for regular toilet use. Sold by leading druggists Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Toronto Star. Sir Mackenzie Bowell is eighty-two years old, and somehow or other it seems an oversight that he wasn't one of the Fathers of Confederation.

• • •

License reduction was defeated in Toronto. The water wagon is not yet a popular conveyance in the Queen City.

• • •

A number of Canadian politicians and journals have objection to Canada's expressions of sympathy with Mr. Chamberlain's programme. They have protested against Canadian interference with Imperial politics. But it will be observed that some of these same persons have taken part in Mr. Devlin's meeting in favor of Irish home rule. This appears to be more exclusively a question belonging to the United Kingdom than the mutual preference programme.

• • •

The Members of Parliament and Senators of the Montreal district, supporting the Government, are trying to relieve the Premier of the task of choosing a colleague in the place of Mr. Prefontaine. What they have they propose to hold, but they are willing that the Interior Department should be divided to make a new portfolio for the West. The proposal to increase the already excessive number of ministers approaches the height of the ridiculous.

• • •

Regina has been so recounted that it now gives a majority of three to the government candidate. The Haultain man claims that some "switching" has been done since the vote was cast. From all that can be learned there was no scarcity of the kind of men who had switched ballots in other elections.

• • •

The people of Toronto have given their answer to the Grit semi-Grit and nondescript press of that city, by electing Coatsworth Mayor of the city, by the handsome majority of 4097. As to the Globe, its support of anyone, as a rule, is a sure forerunner of defeat. The News has received a blow it were well for it not to forget. To the small fry, their defeat is of little consequence. The Mail and Empire has cause to congratulate itself on the success of its advocacy of Coatsworth.

• • •

The fact that the Thurlow Cement Works by-law was carried by a very handsome majority is a matter for congratulation. The wonder is, however, that eight men in the Township should have voted against it.

• • •

That deplorable drowning accident which happened yesterday should be a warning to the boys of this city. Skating on the bay is a dangerous pastime, and many a life has been lost through it.

• • •

There is danger ahead. The Mail and Empire says: In Belleville it has been discovered that when elections go by acclamation the bars need not be closed. This will tend to make contests unpopular in some districts.

Died at Rossmore.

Mrs. Sarah A. Babcock, widow of the late Mr. James R. Babcock, died last night at Rossmore village. Deceased was 72 years of age and for 36 years had lived at Rossmore. She had been ill for some time, suffering from a cancer. Mrs. Babcock was a member of the Methodist church and a lady respected by all who knew her. Two sons, Chas. W. and James R., and one daughter, Mrs. E. Joyce, all of Rossmore, survive.

THEIR GOLDEN WEDDING.

PLEASANT AND BRIGHT INCIDENT AT AVONDALE YESTERDAY AFTERNOON.

We mentioned some days ago, in these columns, the approaching fiftieth anniversary of the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. D. N. De Mill, of Avondale. They were at home yesterday afternoon to receive the congratulations of their numerous friends, and from two o'clock until the evening they were kept busy receiving evidences of the esteem in which they were held, not only by their neighbors, but by residents of the city. Amongst other callers was the Rev. Dr. Potts, of Toronto, who, having learnt of the many years that Mr. DeMill has been an official of the Methodist church in Shannonville and Belleville, called to pay his respects. Looking at Mr. and Mrs. DeMill it would appear that an error of at least ten years had been made somewhere, for although they allege that they are seventy-eight and seventy-two years old respectively, they do not look like it. Miss DeMill was aided in the reception of the guests by Mrs V. P. Hunt, of this city, and her children, Harry and Helen. The Intelligencer joins in congratulations and hopes the worthy couple may live beyond their diamond wedding.

MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS.

SIDNEY.

In this Township a spirited contest for Reeve and Councillors was waged Mr. Clem Ketcheson, who was Reeve for a portion of 1905, was defeated by Mr. M. Sullivan. The vote was as follows:

Reeve — Mr. Sullivan 425, Ketcheson 403.

Councillors — S. White 432, Chas. Ketcheson 430, F. Knight 417, C. Scott 398, J. Farrell 320. The latter announced his retirement from the contest, but not before the ballots had been printed.

THURLOW.

In this township the only issue at stake was the exemption by-law for the proposed new cement works. As it required a three-fifths vote to carry the by-law, it was feared by some that, as there was no municipal election, it would be difficult to secure the required number of votes. Such, however, proved not to be the case, as an exceptionally heavy vote was polled, as the following figures show:

	For.	Against

AMELIASBURG.

Whilst we were unable to secure the figures from this township, we learned that Mr. W. E. Anderson was elected Reeve over Mr. Willoughby Anderson, and the local option by-law was carried by a substantial majority.

Address and Presentation.

Miss Florence Moynes had a pleasant "surprise party" yesterday, when she was made the recipient of a beautiful pearl sunburst and gold chain. Miss Helen Hunt made the presentation and Master Pat Yeomans read the following address:

Miss Florence Moynes:

Dear Miss Moynes,—The teachers and scholars of the Primary Class of Bridge St. Methodist Sunday school, in bidding you good-bye, want to tell you how much we love you. We have admired your "sunshiny" face and wondered at your patience. It has been a joy to us to come to Sunday school to meet you, for you made the place so happy for us. You have told us how God loves us and you told that "old, old story" in such a way that we wanted to be like God and you. We shall miss you very much, but know that wherever you go you will, like Jesus, be ever going about doing good. Please accept this pearl sunburst as a tribute to your goodness.

Belleville, 1st January, 1906.

Mr. Geo. H. Pope and Mr. Wm. Johnson, who were invited to be present, added their meed of praise to the beauty of Miss Moynes' character, and the influence of her life upon those who had the privilege of knowing her.

MARRIAGES.

HYMAN—PHIPPEN. — On January 1st, 1906, at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. J. A. Phippen, Bridge St., Belleville, by the Rev. R. S. Laidlaw, pastor of St. Andrew's Church, Mr. B. Levin Hyman to Miss Edith Katherine Phippen.

Prices For Butterflies.

Butterfly collectors are seldom able to estimate with any confidence the value of their collections, since the prices for specimens so constantly vary. A case in point is that of the blue butterfly of Brazil, specimens of which were originally sold for from $50 to $75. Afterward some collectors who supplied the London market ran into a perfect swarm of these butterflies and shipped to England such quantities that better specimens than the original insects sold for $1 each. It not infrequently happens that two or three specimens of a certain family are discovered by collectors, who, encouraged by the high prices received for their finds, are tempted to prosecute their search for this particular variety without result for several years. Suddenly they or some other collector finds the insects grown plentiful, and the cherished varieties of the cabinet become among the commonest specimens

Sociable Spiders.

Spiders have been observed in Madras which live in a sponge-like nest of branching network, penetrated internally by canals of communication and furnished with a number of external apertures. The nests, which may be attached either to the tips of branches or to leaves of the prickly pear, are ashy gray in color and constructed of leaves, with an external covering of the usual sticky threads. The spiders are similar in color to their nests. Their inconspicuous, sheet-like webs radiate in all directions, and as many as five or six nests, connected by intermediate webs, may be found on a single plant. The connecting webs, which are very strong, often form tubular bridges between the nests. From forty to a hundred spiders may be found in a single nest, and males and females inhabit the same nest in the proportion of about seven to one.

I had seen your ad. in different newspapers, so I got a 50-cent box and began using them. From the very first I got quick relief and by the time I was starting on my third box I saw I was cured. THE HOT WATER CURE.

When the world looks dark and dreary
And in heart and brain you're weary,
When you cannot see a prospect that invites you or is cheery,
Don't sit down and sadly mumble,
Don't let others hear you grumble.
Take a good hot bath.

When you think that all who meet you
Are evolving schemes to cheat you
And are practicing deceptions as with friendly words they greet you,
Do not stay to frown or fret there,
But go home and when you get there
Take a good hot bath.

Few men have the wish to hurt you;
Sin keeps yielding ground to virtue,
And you weaken your defenses when you let your hopes desert you.
Do not, nursing anger, frown—it
Doesn't pay; go home and drown it
In a good hot bath.

Beginning Early.

"There's the master and missus quarreling again, and they've only been married a month!"

"They are uncommonly eloquent for the little practice they've had, aren't they?"

A Modern Family.

"Where's Edythe?"

"She's up in her studio hand paintin' a snow shovel."

"Where's Gladys?"

"In the library writin' po'try."

"Where's Clarice?"

"She's in the parlor playin' the pianner."

"Where's Gwendoline?"

"Up in her boudoir curlin' her hair."

"And where's ma?"

"Maw? Oh, maw's down in the kitchen gettin' dinner for the bunch!"

Stale and Unprofitable.

One day a football player appeared in the class room during football season. The students were deeply shocked, yet they managed to preserve the outward forms of respect. But when, presently, it turned out that the fellow knew his lesson there was none so poor to do him reverence.

"He's gone stale!" was the sneering whisper which ran from lip to lip.

Trade Secret.

"Are you the little boy whose papa writes so many cute sayings of children?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"I suppose your papa is always encouraging you to talk."

"No, ma'am. He threatens to whip me if I even whisper when he is writing his bright things the children have said."

Foxy Scheme.

Towne—You seemed anxious to pick a quarrel with him.

Browne—Yes; he's to be married next month and—

Towne—Ah, I see. Cut you out, eh?

Browne—Not at all, but I want him to cut me out of his list of friends. I want to save the price of a present.

Drawing the Line.

Young Slopay was courting the daughter of his former tailor.

"Darling," he said, "I hope you will learn to love and trust me."

"Well," returned the fair object of his affections, "I'm sure I can learn to love you all right, but papa says you are not to be trusted."

Dangerous.

Knott Yette—You mean to say that the use of hair dye is dangerous?

Ben Thayer—I do. Let me tell you something. A dear friend of mine, a happy bachelor, found his hair was turning gray at thirty. Well, he had it dyed a deep black. Four weeks later he was married.

Professionally Considered.

"Public opinion is a great power," remarked the earnest citizen.

"Yes," answered Dustin Stax; "a great deal may be done with it. The trouble is that it is so hard to capitalize."

Strong In Death.

Cannibal Chief—Have you any last message that you wish to have sent home?

Stern Looking Female—Yes; I have. Don't let my son-in-law know.

Going Chestnutting.

Mrs. Walker—Has your husband been out chestnutting this season yet?

Mrs. Torker—No, but he's going to a dinner where he is to make a speech next week, I believe.

Saves Life.

"He says his cough has saved his life many times."

"How?"

"By discouraging life insurance agents."

Proof Positive.

"She's no singer."

"No?"

"I should say not! I understood nearly every word she said."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

HAPPINESS.

The Ambition of the Seeker and Where It Led Him.

In the sunrise of life a youth said: "I will attain greatness. I will mount to the high places, above the groveling throng, and wealth, power and happiness shall be added unto me."

In the flush of the morning he strove for all these things. At high noon he had acquired wealth, and in the afternoon power and fame came to him. It was as he had said, save that he, with all the generations of men, found not happiness. There had been friendships and smiles and hand clasps and embraces, but none of these things secured for him the thing he sought.

In the evening he sat by an open grave and pondered. Wayfarers saw him there and wondered much. "He is one of the mighty of earth," they said. "He has lands and tenements and goods. He has friends and servitors and fawning sycophants about him. Though we seek in vain, he must have found happiness."

They could not know that his palaces sheltered blasted hopes, that tares grew in his gardens, that the acclaim of the mob jangled harshly in his ears. They did not see his yearning, the dead dreams within him, the ashes in his heart.

His search had ended at an open grave. He drew his mantle about him and descended into it, while the passing throng swirled by.

At last, and without his knowledge, he had found that happiness which he long had sought.

A POPGUN PLANT.

Witch Hazel Shoots Its Seeds Away Ten or Fifteen Feet.

Do you know that the witch hazel shoots its seeds ten or fifteen feet? If you want a brand new sensation, bring home some branches of witch hazel having both flowers and unopened seed pods on them and put them in vases of water. The pods burst at the most unexpected times, waking you in the night and peppering you with their hard, shiny, black seeds. Branches that are to be used for a party must be selected with care to be sure of having perfectly fresh flowers and seed pods that have not opened. If it is possible to do so, cut them the same day they are needed. If they must be cut the day before they are needed, put them in a cold place in water and wrap a damp cloth around the branches in order to prevent the flowers from withering and to keep the seeds from being expelled too soon.

There will be great excitement when the seed pods open with a snap and the seeds come pattering down. It is well to rehearse this performance, for natural objects often refuse to "show off" when you want them to.

The Fly.

The fly's capacity for crime is extended by its strength, which is relatively nearly seven times that of a horse, for it can lift twenty times its own weight. It can absorb enormous quantities of oxygen and is, in fact, a confirmed oxygen toper.

The reprehensible habit of walking upside down on the ceiling, to which the fly is addicted, is due to its habit of exuding gum from each of the 1,200 hollow hairs in its feet.

The fly, too, has an evil eye, which is divisible into several other eyes. It has also 1,700 or 1,800 parts all connected with the olfactory nerves and therefore possesses complete equipment for detecting unsound meat, such as is given to no other living creature.—Lecture of H. Hill in London.

Novel Desert Bath.

One of the wonders of the California desert is the hot sand bath, famous from the times of the first Spanish pioneers. The surface water is only a few inches deep. Beneath is black sand, constantly in gentle motion. The bather does not touch bottom. His body sinks to the shoulders and with the aid of a crossbar of timber is then sustained in a position of perpendicular flotation. The temperature is just as warm as can be comfortably borne, and the sensation, like that of soft massaging, is delightful.

John Brown's Cottonwood.

One day in 1857 John Brown rode up to the Benton place near Effingham, Atchison county, Kan., and dismounted. He carried in his hand a switch which he had cut from a cottonwood tree. This he tossed aside, and later Mrs. Benton stuck it in the ground at the back door of her little house. It took root and grew. It is now a huge tree and is known in the neighborhood as "the John Brown cottonwood."

Ought to Be Happy.

Towne—I hear Marryat and his bride are no longer living at that boarding house of yours. Browne—No; they've gone to housekeeping. Towne—Ah, their home life now will bring them much closer together, and— Browne—You bet it will! They've taken a flat.

Evil Enough.

There is evil enough in man, God knows. But it is not the mission of every young man and woman to detail and report it all. Keep the atmosphere as pure as possible and fragrant with gentleness and charity.

The Calabash Tree.

Quite a wonderful tree is the calabash of the West Indies, which bears enormous fruits that resemble pumpkins and grow to be nearly two feet in diameter. With the pulp removed they serve various domestic purposes—for carrying water and even as kettles for cooking—having the great advantages of strength and lightness.

A Ditch In Time.

Instances where "a month's work on a piece of road was nearly washed away in one severe storm" have prompted the highway commissioner of an eastern state to suggest that during autumn rainstorms rural roads be patrolled. A trustworthy man watching a given length of highway could turn water into the ditches, remove obstructions from ditches and culverts and frequently relieve such drains when overburdened, thus forestalling danger, inconvenience and expense. A ditch in time saves nine washouts.—

SIR JAMES WATSON'S OPINION.

He says that the commonest of all disorders, and one from which few escape, is catarrh. Sir James firmly believes in local treatment, which is best supplied by "Catarrhozone." No case of catarrh can exist where Catarrhozone is used; it is a miracle worker, relieves almost instantly and cures after other remedies fail. Other treatments can't reach the diseased parts like Catarrhozone, because it goes to the source of the trouble along with the air you breathe. Catarrhozone is free from cocaine, it leaves no bad after-effects; it is simply nature's own cure. Accept no substitute for Catarrhozone, which alone can cure catarrh.

Football Reform.

One of the most serious problems confronting American intercollegiate football, says Walter Camp in Harper's, is that of securing satisfactory officials for contests. He thinks that the desirability of these posts, which net in some cases an honorarium of $100 for about three hours' work, prejudices an official in favor of the management that engages his services. The result of this condition upon the game itself, Mr. Camp points out, is most detrimental, for it is his opinion that the rules as they now stand would be almost ideal if they were only strictly and honorably enforced. "It ought to be an impossibility, for instance, for an umpire who has disqualified two men for slugging to allow both to remain at the request of the captains, thus evening up matters, but doing the very worst possible thing for the sport. And yet this was done in one of the most important matches of the sea t year."

A THOUGHT FOR THE DAY AFTER

Of course the outlook isn't bright
At times and things go all awry;
It's hard to see a ray of light
In all our overclouded sky.
But, after all, just keep in mind,
As you your sum of woes rehearse,
This axiom, and comfort find:
It's bad, but then it might be worse.

It's just as true as true can be:
We've never found the bottom yet,
Though we are low, we're bound to see
Some others still beneath us set,
So make the most of adverse fate
Instead of taking griefs to nurse:
Upon this saying meditate:
It's bad, but then it might be worse.

If you have met with any cross,
If you're not in the best of health,
Or meet with unexpected loss,
Dispelling rosy dreams of wealth:
No matter where the trouble lies—
In blighted love or empty purse—
You will remember, if you're wise:
It's bad, but then it might be worse.

According to the Duluth Herald, last winter $4.50 was considered a good price for a mink pelt, and it wasn't more than a season or two back that $2.50 was the highest paid for a single pelt of this kind. Now a choice raw mink fur will bring $11, and a marten pelt from $18 to $29, where $6 or $7 was paid last winter.

HER LADYSHIP'S DIAMONDS

By C. B. LEWIS

Copyright, 1905, by P. C. Eastment

Her ladyship's extravagance was a subject of general remark, but it was true that his lordship did not stint her in money matters, and so what she threw away was nobody's business after all. It was so for the first five years of their married life, and then his lordship began to feel the pinch. He delayed saying anything to her of the matter as long as possible, but there came a day when he had to tell her that retrenchment must be the watchword for several years to come. He had figured up her bills and found she had spent more money in a given time than any other woman in the kingdom. In a way he was proud of it, but in another way he had to give her a word of caution. She could still be extravagant and reduce her expenses one-half.

His lordship found out something too late. Give a wife rein for the first five years, and she will take the bit in her teeth for the next five. Talk of economy should come before, instead of after. In addition to gratifying her own many whims and caprices her ladyship had a brother in the navy and another in the army, both officers, of course, and both living more or less off her bounty. Only the day before his lordship had asked for a private interview to talk retrenchment she had sent the naval officer a liberal check to straighten up his debts of honor and been informed by letter that the other one must have a much larger amount or throw up his commission in disgrace.

His lordship's news, therefore, came like a douche of cold water. If there was any sort of scene it was kept from the servants and therefore from the public, and things seemed to go on as before. They didn't, however. Her ladyship had her diamonds duplicated in paste and raised a large sum on the real gems to help others and herself. This was done quietly and secretly and was only part of a plan she had in her mind.

After the close of the London season his lordship retired to his country castle and was soon followed by a score of invited guests. The astute English robber is always on the watch for these house gatherings. Every woman guest is certain to bring at least a good part of her jewels to wear at dinner, and there are always chances for a smart thief to get in his work. As an offset the host employs a detective to mix in with the servants or even with the guests for the time being and keep watch over things.

It was so in this case. Scotland Yard had loaned him Inspector McDonald, and there never had been a robbery in a country house he was protecting.

The inspector, under another name, mingled with the guests and made himself at home, but he was given to passing much of his time wandering over the estate and musing in the shade of its forests. One of his musing fits was one day interrupted in a rather singular manner.

He was lying on the moss under a spreading beech when the sound of footfalls disturbed him, and he rolled over on his side, to discover her ladyship making her furtive way through the woods. At a dozen paces from him she stopped and with a stick dug a hole in the ground at the foot of a tree and concealed something. When she had run away the inspector scooped out the dirt until he came to an oiled silk bag containing her ladyship's diamonds. They were all there to her last ring, and the inspector knew enough about precious stones to know that these were paste.

This happened at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. What her ladyship would do without her diamonds at dinner time the inspector could not determine. Her secret burial of them meant to him simply one thing—she was going to be "robbed" of them. She would have to put up a claim of loss by daylight, and there would be a sensation. Either that or she must be "indisposed" at dinner time and not appear among her guests during the evening.

Her ladyship proceeded at once to business. An hour before dinner, and after all the guests, including the inspector, had been indulging in games on the lawn, she went to her room to discover that her diamonds were missing. There was a sensation at once. No one had seen any stranger lurking about, and the robbery must have been perpetrated by some of the servants. Including maids and valets, these numbered over sixty, and each one was obliged to come forward and be investigated. His lordship insisted on the most rigorous examination, and this led to protestations and hard feelings. Within twenty-four hours the house party was broken up and scattered, and Inspector McDonald had to admit that he had no clew. The only thing his lordship could do was to offer a reward, and he made it $25,000.

The inspector did not go with the others. He remained behind to look for clews. He held many interviews with his lordship and her ladyship together, and he had to admire the density of the one and the cunning of the other. It was more than cunning. Her ladyship had more nerve and check than the detective ever before had found in a woman. She was a most convincing liar, and if he hadn't had the paste diamonds in his pocket he would have been inclined to believe that the scene in the woods was a day dream. She could furnish no information as to how her diamonds had disappeared.

She cleared her own maid of suspicion, but would not vouch for the honesty of the others. It was through her advice and insistence that his lordship advertised "No questions asked." The stolen plunder could thus be returned by any one of her choosing. The $25,000 would get the originals out of pawn and save her brother. The inspector held but one interview with her ladyship alone. At that interview, after she had retold her story and looked him as straight in the eye as a woman could, he said:

"I can't believe that the plunder was carried far. I shouldn't wonder if it was buried in the woods."

"That may be," she innocently replied.

"They didn't happen to be your paste diamonds, while the real gems are in a vault in town?"

"Would his lordship advertise such a reward for paste diamonds? Have you ever heard that I have resorted to paste?"

"I did not mean it in that sense. The reason I spoke of the woods was because I was out there that afternoon."

"Well?"

"I thought I saw a woman prowling around."

"Then you have been derelict as a detective. Why didn't you speak of the matter before?"

"The more I think of it the more I believe that this woman buried something at the foot of a tree."

"Then let me call his lordship, and we will go at once."

When it was too late he saw that she wouldn't take a bluff, and he was obliged to accompany the pair to the woods. He walked straight to the tree and showed them the cavity. He looked straight into the eyes of the woman, but she did not falter in the gaze. He saw by her attitude that she was even ready to hear him say that she was the woman he saw and to drag from his pocket the bag of diamonds in corroboration. He dared not put her to the test.

When his lordship criticised his action in not overhauling the unknown woman, the detective could only swallow his chagrin and beg to withdraw from the case. Two hours later he was packed and ready to go. As he was descending the stairs he encountered her ladyship ascending. She gazed straight into his eyes and held out her hand. There was no bribe in her fingers—she knew the inspector to be above that. He took the bag of diamonds from his pocket and passed it over without a word and then, raising his hat to her, he kept on his way out of doors. Two weeks later a London paper said:

"We are glad to hear that her ladyship's diamonds have been restored to her. It is hinted that the person claiming the reward had the manners of the gentleman, though in disguise."

"One of her brothers, maybe," said Inspector McDonald to himself, as he turned to the case in his book and wrote "Closed" at the bottom.

His Religion.

Not long ago a certain clergyman from the west was called to a church in Jersey City. Soon after his arrival the divine's wife made the usual visits to the members of the parish. One of these, a plumber's wife, was asked by the good lady whether the family were regular churchgoers, whereupon the wife of the plumber replied that, while she and her children were attendants at divine service quite regularly, her husband was not.

"Dear me!" said the minister's wife. "That's too bad! Does your husband never go to church?"

"Well, I wouldn't say that he never went," was the reply. "Occasionally Will goes to the Unitarian, now and then to the Methodist, and I have known him to attend the Catholic church."

A look of perplexity came to the face of the visitor. "Perhaps your husband is an agnostic," suggested she.

"Not at all," hastily answered the other; "he's a plumber. When there is nothing for him to do at one church there is very likely something for him at one of the others."—Harper's Weekly.

Where the Sea Disappears.

A girl was recently overtaken and drowned by the incoming tide on the west coast of France. A transplanted Breton said of this fatality:

"Can you, who see your own tides crawl in at the rate of ten feet or so an hour, imagine tides racing like wild white horses up the flat sands at the rate of half a mile a minute? The extraordinary flatness of our Breton coasts gives us these phenomenal tides. The sea does not rise and fall. It appears and disappears. You have a vast and flat plain of sand. At a set hour the sea rushes in, white, wild, submerging this vast plain. At a set hour an unseen hand sucks back the waters—back thirty, forty, fifty miles—and nothing is visible but the plain of pale sand again. Woe unto such as walk on this desolate plain when the tide begins to rise, for they must drown! Nothing can save them."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Experienced Traveler.

"Look here," demanded the irate hotel proprietor, "what did you say to that last guest?"

"Why," replied the waiter, "he didn't pass over a tip, so I said, 'I think you have forgotten something, sir.'"

"That's just it. After you said that he returned to the table and took three oranges and six pears."—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Lust of Hate

BY GUY BOOTHBY

Author of "A Beautiful White Devil," "A Bid For Fortune," "The Marriage of Esther," "Dr. Nikola," Etc., Etc.

of sympathy that went up as we made our appearance. After that all seems a blank, and I can only believe what I am told—namely, that I looked round me in a dazed sort of fashion, and then fell in a dead faint upon the deck.

When I recovered consciousness again, I had to think for a moment before I could understand what had happened. I found myself in a handsomely-furnished cabin that I had never seen before. For an instant I imagined myself back again on the ill-fated Fiji Princess. Then a tall red-bearded man—the same who had carried Miss Maybourne up from the boat—entered, and came towards me. Through the door, which he had left open, I could see the awning-covered promenade-deck outside. As soon as I saw him I tried to sit up on the velvet-cushioned locker upon which I had been placed, but he bade me be content to lie still for a little while.

"You will be far better where you are," he said. "What you want is rest and quiet. Take a few sips of this, and then lie down again and try to get to sleep. You have some arrears to make up in that line, or I'm mistaken."

He handed me a glass from the tray above my couch, and held it for me while I drank. When I had finished I laid myself down again, and, instead of obeying him, began to question him as to where I was. But once more I was forestalled, this time by the entrance of a steward carrying a bowl of broth on a tray.

"You see we're determined, one way or another, to close your mouth," he said, with a laugh. "But this stuff is too hot for you at present. We'll put it down here to cool, and in the meantime I'll answer not more than half-a-dozen questions. Fire away, if you feel inclined."

I took him at his word, and put the one question of all others I was longing to have answered.

"How is the lady who was rescued with me?"

"Doing as well as can be expected, poor soul," he replied. "She's being well looked after, so you need not be anxious about her. You must have had [illegible] terrible time in that boat, to judge [illegible] the effects produced. Now, what [illegible] next question?"

"[illegible] want to know what ship this is, or how far we were from the Salvages when you picked us up?"

"[illegible] vessel is The King of Carthage—Captain Blockman in command. I'm afraid I can't answer your last question offhand, for the reason that, being the doctor, I have nothing to do with the navigation of the ship; but I'll soon find out for you."

He left the cabin, and went to the foot of the ladder that led to the bridge. I heard him call the officer of the watch, and say something to him. Presently he returned.

"The Salvages lie about seventy miles due nor' nor'-east of our present position," he said.

"Nor'-nor'-east?" I cried. "Then I was even further out in my calculations than I expected."

"Why do you ask about the Salvages?"

"Because it was on a rock off those islands that our ship, the Fiji Princess, was lost. We put off from the island to try and catch a sailing vessel that came in sight yesterday morning. A dense fog came on, however, and during the time it lasted we lost both the ship we went out to stop and also our island. Ever since then we have been drifting without food or water."

"You have indeed had a terrible experience. But you've a splendid constitution, and you'll soon get over the effects of it. And now tell me, were no others saved from the wreck?"

"As far as we could tell, with the exception of our three selves, not a single soul."

"You say 'three selves,' but we only rescued the lady and yourself. What, then, became of the third?"

"The third was a child about eight years old. The poor little thing must have been hurt internally when we were sucked under by the sinking ship, and her condition was probably not improved by the long exposure we had to endure on the bottom of the boat from which you rescued us. She scarcely recovered consciousness, and died on the island a short time before we left it in our attempt to catch the vessel I spoke of just now."

"I never heard a sadder case," said the doctor. "You are indeed to be pitied. I wonder the lady, your companion, came through it alive. By the way, the skipper was asking me just now if I knew your names."

"The lady is Miss Maybourne, whose father is a well-known man at the Cape, I believe."

"Surely not Cornelius Maybourne, the mining man?"

"Yes, she is his daughter. He will be in a terrible state when the Fiji Princess is reported missing."

"I expect he will; but, fortunately, we shall be in Cape Town almost as soon as she would have been, and he will find that his daughter, thanks to your care, is safe and sound. Now I am not going to let you talk any more. First, take as much of this broth as you can manage, and then lie down and try to get to sleep again. As I said just now, I prophesy that in a few days you'll be up and about, feeling no ill-affects from your terrible adventure."

I obeyed him, and drank the broth. When I had done so I laid down again, and in a very short time was once more in the Land of Nod. When I opened my eyes again the cabin was almost dark. The doctor was still in attendance, and, as soon as he saw that I was awake, asked me if I would like to get up for a while. I answered that I should be only too glad to do so; and when he had helped me to dress, I took possession of a chair on the promenade deck outside. It was just dinner-time in the saloon, and by orders of the Captain, who came personally to enquire how I was, I was served with a meal on deck. Nothing could have exceeded the kindness and thoughtfulness of the officers and passengers. The latter, though anxious to hear our story from my own lips, refrained from bothering me with questions; and thinking quiet would conduce to my recovery, allowed me to have the use of that end of the deck unmolested. As soon as I could do so, I enquired once more after Miss Maybourne, and was relieved to hear that she was making most satisfactory progress towards recovery. After dinner the Captain came up, and seating himself in a chair beside me, asked a few questions concerning the foundering of the Fiji Princess, which information, I presumed, he required for his log.

"You have placed Mr. Maybourne very deeply in your debt," he said, after a little further conversation; "and I don't doubt but there will be many who will envy your good fortune in having conferred so signal a service upon his daughter. By the way, you have not told us your own name."

My heart gave a great jump, and for the moment I seemed to feel myself blushing to the roots of my hair. After the great kindness I had already received from everyone on board the vessel, it seemed worse than ungrateful to deceive them. But I dared not tell the truth. For all I knew to the contrary, my name might have been proclaimed everywhere in England before they left.

"My name is Wrexford," I said, feeling about as guilty as a man could well do.

"Any relation to the Wrexfords of Shrewsbury?" asked the Captain with mild curiosity.

"Not that I'm aware of," I answered. "I have been living out of England for many years, and have no knowledge of my relations."

"It's not a common name," continued the skipper; "that is why I ask. Sir George Wrexford is one of our directors, and a splendid fellow. I thought it was just possible that you might be some connection of his. Now, if you will excuse me, I'll be off. Take my advice and turn in early. I'm sorry to say we're carrying our full complement of passengers, so that I cannot give you a proper berth; but I've ordered a bed to be made up for you in my chart-room, where you have been all day to-day. If you can manage to make yourself comfortable there it is quite at your service."

"It is very kind of you to put yourself to so much inconvenience," I answered. "I fear by the time we reach Cape Town I shall have caused you a considerable amount of trouble."

"Not at all! Not at all!" the hospitable skipper replied, as he rose to go. "I'm only too glad to have picked you up. It's our duty to do what we can for each other, for we none of us know when we may be placed in a similar plight ourselves."

After he left me, I was not long in following the good advice he had given me; and when I had once reached my couch, fell into a dreamless sleep, from which I did not wake until after eight o'clock next morning. Indeed, I don't know that I should have waked even then, had I not been disturbed by the noise made by someone entering the cabin. It proved to be the doctor.

"How are you feeling this morning?" he asked, when he had felt my pulse.

"Ever so much better," I replied. "In fact, I think I'm quite myself again. How is Miss Maybourne?"

"Still progressing satisfactorily," he answered. "She bids me give you her kind regards. She has been most constant in her enquiries after your welfare."

I don't know whether my face revealed my secret, or whether it was only supposition on his part, but he looked at me pretty hard for a moment, and then laughed outright.

"You may not know it," he said, "but when all's said and done, you're a jolly lucky fellow."

I sighed, and hesitated a moment before I replied.

"I'm afraid you're mistaken," I said. "Luck and I have never been companions. I doubt if there is a man in this world whose career has been more devoid of good fortune than mine. As a boy, I was unlucky in everything I undertook. If I played cricket, I was always either bowled for a duck's egg, or run out just as I was beginning to score. If there was an accident in the football field, when I was playing, I was invariably the sufferer. I left Oxford under a cloud, because I could not explain something that I knew to be a mistake on the part of the authorities. I quarrelled with my family on the same misunderstanding. I was once on the verge of becoming a millionaire, but illness prevented my taking advantage of my opportunity; and while I was thus delayed another man stepped in and forestalled me. I had a legacy, but it brought me nothing but ill-luck, and has finally driven me out of England."

"And since then the tide of ill-fortune has turned," he said. "A beautiful and wealthy girl falls overboard—you dive in, and rescue her. I have heard about that, you see. The ship you are traveling by goes to the bottom—you save your own and the same girl's life. Then, as if that is not enough, you try your luck a third time; and, just as a terrible fate seems to be going to settle you for good and all, we heave in sight and rescue you. Now you have Miss Maybourne's gratitude, which would strike most men as a more than desirable possession, and at the same time you will have her father's."

"And, by the peculiar irony of fate, both come to me when I am quite powerless to take advantage of them."

"Come, come, you mustn't let yourself down like this. You know very well what the end of it all will be, if you spend your life believing yourself to be a marked man."

"You mean that I shall lose my reason? No, no! you needn't be afraid of that. I come of a hard-headed race that has not been in the habit of stocking asylums."

"I am glad of that. Now what do you say to getting up? I'll have your breakfast sent to you in here, and after you've eaten it, I'll introduce you to some of the passengers. On the whole, they are a nice lot, and very much interested in my two patients."

I thanked him, and, to show how very much better I felt, sprang out of bed and began to dress. True to his promise, my breakfast was brought to me by a steward, and I partook of it on the chart-room table. Just as I finished the doctor reappeared, and, after a little conversation, we left the cabin and proceeded out on to the deck together. Here we found the majority of the passengers promenading, or seated in their chairs. Among them I noticed two clergymen, two or three elderly gentlemen of the colonial merchant type, a couple of dapper young fellows whom I set down in my own mind as belonging to the military profession, the usual number of elderly ladies, half a dozen younger ones, of more or less fascinating appearances, and the same number of children. As soon as they saw me several of those seated rose and came to meet us. The doctor performed the necessary introductions, and in a few minutes I found myself seated in a comfortable deck-chair receiving innumerable congratulations on my recovery. Strange to say, I did not dislike their sympathy as much as I had imagined I should do. There was something so spontaneous and unaffected about it that I would have defied even the most sensitive to take offence. To my astonishment, I discovered that no less than three were personal friends of Miss Maybourne's, though all confessed to having failed in recognising her when the boat came alongside. For the greater part of the morning I remained chatting in my chair, and by mid-day felt so much stronger that, on the doctor's suggestion, ventured to accompany him down to the saloon for lunch. The King of Carthage was a finer vessel in every way than the ill-fated Fiji Princess. Her saloon was situated amidships, and could have contained the other twice over comfortably. The appointments generally were on a scale of great magnificence; and, from what I saw at lunch, the living was on a scale to correspond. I sat at a small table presided over by the doctor, and situated near the foot of the companion ladder. In the pauses of the meal I looked round at the fine paintings let into the panels between the ports, at the thick carpet upon the floor, the glass dome overhead, and then at the alley-ways leading to the cabins at either end. In which direction did Miss Maybourne's cabin lie, I wondered. The doctor must have guessed what was passing in my mind, for he nodded his head towards the after-alley on the starboard side, and from that time forward I found my eyes continually reverting to it.

Luncheon over, I returned to the promenade-deck, and, after a smoke—the first in which I had indulged since we left the island—acted on the doctor's advice, and went to my cabin to lie down for an hour or so.

When I returned to the deck, afternoon tea was going forward, and a chair having been found for me, I was invited to take a cup. While I was drinking it, the skipper put in an appearance. He waited until I had finished, and then said he would like to show me something if I would accompany him along the deck to his private cabin. When we reached it, he opened the door and invited me to enter. I did so, and, as I crossed the threshold, gave a little start of surprise, for Miss Maybourne was there, lying upon the locker.

"Why, Miss Maybourne!" I cried, in complete astonishment, "this is a pleasant surprise. I had no idea you were about agin. I hope you are feeling stronger."

"Much stronger," she answered. "I expect I shall soon be quite myself again, now that I have once made a start. Mr. Wrexford, I asked Captain Blockman to let me see you in here for the first time, in order that I might have an opportunity of expressing my gratitude to you before we face the passengers. You cannot imagine how grateful I am to you for all you have done for me since that awful night when the Fiji Princess went down. How can I ever repay you for it?"

"By becoming yourself again as quickly as possible," I answered; "I ask no better payment."

I thought she looked at me in rather a strange way as I said this; but it was not until some time later that I knew the reason of it. At the time I would have given worlds to have spoken the thoughts that were in my mind; but that being impossible, I had to hold my tongue, though my heart should break under the strain. We were both silent for a little while, and then Miss Maybourne took my hand, and I could see that she was steeling herself to ask some question, and was not quite certain what answer she would receive to it.

"Mr. Wrexford," she began, and there was a little falter in her voice as she spoke, "you told me on board the Fiji Princess that you were going to South Africa to try and obtain employment. You must forgive my saying anything about it, but I also gathered from what you told me that you would arrive there without influence of any sort. Now, I want you to promise me that you will let papa help you. I'm sure he will be only too grateful for the chance. It would be a kindness to him, for he will remember that, but for you, he would never have seen me again."

"I did not do it for the sake of reward, Miss Maybourne," I answered, with an outburst of foolish pride that was not very becoming to me.

"Who knows that better than I?" she replied, her face flushing at the thought that she had offended me. "But you must not be angry with me. It would be kind of you to let me show my gratitude in some way. Papa would be so glad to give you letters of introduction, or to introduce you personally to people of influence, and then there is nothing you might not be able to do. You will let him help you, won't you?"

If she could only have known what she was asking of me! To be introduced to the prominent people of the colony was the very last thing in the world I wanted. My desire was to not only attract as little attention as might be, but also to get up country and beyond the reach of civilization as quickly as possible.

However, I was not going to make Miss Maybourne unhappy on the first day of her convalescence, so I promised to consider the matter, and let her know my decision before we reached Cape Town. By this compromise I hoped to be able to hit upon some way out of the difficulty before then.

From that day forward the voyage was as pleasant as it would be possible for one to be. Delicate as was our position on board, we were not allowed for one moment to feel that we were not upon the same footing as those who had paid heavily for their accommodation. The officers and passengers vied with each other in showing us kindnesses, and, as may be imagined, we were not slow to express our gratitude.

Day after day slipped quickly by, and each one brought us nearer and nearer to our destination. As the distance lessened my old fears returned upon me. After all the attention I had received from our fellow-travelers, after Miss Maybourne's gracious behavior towards me, it will be readily imagined how much I dreaded the chance of exposure. How much better, I asked myself, would it not be to drop overboard while my secret was still undiscovered, than to stay on board and be proclaimed a murderer before them all?

On the evening prior to our reaching Cape Town I was leaning on the rails of the promenade deck, just below the bridge, when Miss Maybourne left a lady with whom she had been conversing, and came and stood beside me. The evening was cool, and for this reason she had thrown a lace mantilla, lent her by one of the passengers, over her head, and had draped it round her shapely neck. It gave her an infinitely charming appearance; indeed, in my eyes, she appeared the most beautiful of all God's creatures—a being to be loved and longed for beyond all her sex.

"And so to-morrow, after all our adventures, we shall be in Cape Town," she said. "Have you thought of the promise you gave me a fortnight ago?"

"What promise was that?" I asked, though I knew full well to what she alluded.

"To let papa find you some employment. I do hope you will allow him to do so."

I looked at her as she stood beside me, one little hand resting on the rail and her beautiful eyes gazing across the starlit sea, and thought how hard it was to resist her. But at any cost I could not remain in Cape Town. Every hour I spent there would bring me into greater danger.

"I have been thinking it over as I promised," I said, "and I have come to the conclusion that it would not be wise for me to accept you offer. I have told you repeatedly, Miss Maybourne, that I am not like other men. God knows how heartily I repent my foolish past. But repentance, however sincere, will not take away the stain. I want to get away from civilization as far and as quickly as possible. For this reason immediately we arrive I shall start for the Transvaal, and once there shall endeavor to carve out a new name and a new life for myself. This time, Providence helping me, it shall be a life of honor."

"God grant you may succeed!" she said, but so softly that I could scarcely hear it.

"May I tell myself that I have your good wishes, Miss Maybourne?" I asked, with, I believe, a little tremor in my voice.

"Every good wish I have is yours," she replied. "I should be worse than ungrateful, after all you have done for me, if I did not take an interest in your future."

Then I did a thing for which it was long before I could forgive myself. Heaven alone knows what induced me to do it; but if my life had depended on it I could not have acted otherwise. I took her hand in mine and drew her a little closer to me.

"Agnes," I said, very softly, as she turned her beautiful face towards me, "to-morrow we shall be separated, perhaps never to meet again. After to-night it is possible, if not probable, that we shall not have another opportunity of being alone together. You don't know what your companionship has been to me. Before I met you, I was desperate. My life was not worth living; but you have changed it all—you have made me a better man. You have taught me to love you, and in that love I have found my belief in all that is good—even, I believe, a faith in God. Oh, Agnes, Agnes! I am not worthy to touch the ground you have walked on, but I love you as I shall never love woman again!"

She was trembling violently, but she did not speak. Her silence had the effect, however, of bringing me to myself, and it showed me my conduct in all its naked baseness.

"Forgive me," I whispered; "it was vile of me to have insulted you with this avowal. Forget—and forgive, if you can—that I ever spoke the words. Remember me only as a man, the most miserable in the whole world, who would count it heaven to be allowed to lay down his life for you or those you love. Oh, Agnes! is it possible that you can forgive me?"

"I have nothing to forgive," she said, looking up into my face with those proud, fearless eyes that seemed to hold all the truth in the world; "I am proud beyond measure to think you love me."

When I heard these precious words, I could have fallen at her feet and kissed the hem of her dress; but I dared not speak, lest I should forget myself in my joy, and say something for which I should never be able to atone. Agnes, however, was braver than I.

"Mr. Wrexford," she said, "you have told me that you love me, and now you are reproaching yourself for having done so. Is it because, as you say, you are poor? Do you think so badly of me as to imagine that that could make any difference to me?"

"I could not think so badly of you if I tried," I answered.

"You have said that you love me?"

"And I mean it. I love you as I believe man never loved woman before—certainly as I shall never love again."

Then, lowering her head so that I could not see her face, she whispered—

"Will it make you happier if I say that I love you?"

Her voice was soft as the breath of the evening rustling some tiny leaf, but it made my heart leap with a delight I had never known before, and then sink deeper and deeper down with a greater shame.

"God forbid!" I cried, almost fiercely. "You must not love me. You shall not do so. I am not worthy even that you should think of me."

"You are worthy of a great deal more," she answered. "Oh, why will you so continually reproach yourself?"

"Because, Agnes, my conscience will not let me be silent," I cried. "Because, Agnes, you do not know the shame of my life."

"I will not let you say 'shame,'" she replied. "Have I not grown to know you better than you know yourself?"

How little she knew of me! How little she guessed what I was! We were both silent again, and for nearly five minutes. I was the first to speak. And it took all the pluck of which I was master to say what was in my mind.

"Agnes," I began, "this must be the end of such talk between us. God knows, if I were able in honor to do so, I would take your love, and hold you against the world. But, as things are, to do that would be to proclaim myself the most despicable villain in existence. You must not ask me why. I could not tell you. But some day, if by chance you should hear the world's verdict, try to remember that, whatever I may have been, I did my best to behave like a man of honor to you."

She did not answer, but dropped her head on to her hands and sobbed as if her heart would break. Then, regaining her composure a little, she stood up again and faced me. Holding out her hand, she said:

"You have told me that you love me. I have said that I love you. You say that we must part. Let it be so. You know best. May God have mercy on us both!"

I tried to say "Amen," but my voice refused to serve me, and as I turned and looked across the sea I felt the hot salt tears rolling down my cheeks. By the time I recovered my self-possession she had left me and had gone below.

The One Cure for Catarrh

Japanese Catarrh Cure

Just reason it out for yourself. You can't cure Catarrh of the nose by taking medicine that goes into the stomach. Japanese Catarrh Cure goes up the nostrils. It is a powerful antiseptic, aromatic and pleasant. When the pomade is in the nose, every breath you take carries the healing, soothing medication to every part of the diseased membrane. Now, isn't that the logical treatment? And Japanese Catarrh Cure proves the logic by never failing to cure catarrh, even in its worst form.

"I was troubled with catarrh for years. My head ached, my nose was stopped up; there was a constant dropping in my throat. I was forever hawking and spitting. I used everything—powders, washes, etc., but Japanese Catarrh Cure is the only remedy that ever gave me more than temporary relief, and has absolutely cured me."—E. D. ATKINSON, Advocates Harbor, N.S.

WONDERFUL EFFECT OF FRUIT.

"Fruit-a-tives" (Fruit Liver Tablets) are concentrated fruit juices. And it is these fruit juices that cure Constipation, Biliousness, Headaches, Indigestion, Palpitation of the Heart and all Troubles of the Stomach and Kidneys. A leading Ottawa physician discovered a process by which he could combine the juices of Apples, Oranges, Figs and Prunes and by adding another atom of bitter principle from the Orange peel, completely change the medicinal action of the fruit juices, giving the combination a far more powerful and more beneficial effect on the system. "Fruit-a-tives" are tablets made of this combination of fruit juices—and they have made most wonderful cures of Stomach, Liver and Kidney Troubles and of Blood and Skin Diseases. 50c a box.—Ask your druggist.

LIVING LIFE OVER AGAIN

Not the Best Way to Ease the Discontent of the Human Heart — Last Sermon on Last Sunday of the Year Furnishes Dr. Talmage With Food For Retrospect of Years That Are Gone.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Diver, of Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 31.—In this sermon at the close of the old year the preacher deals with the discontent in the human heart, which often inspires the wish that we might live life over again. The text is Job ii, 4, "All that a man hath will he give for his life."

This question naturally arises on this last Sunday of the year: "Would we like to live our lives over again? Would we like to have the year of 1905 again greet us in the swaddling clothes of a new-born babe? Would we like to make the plea of the old poet, when in rhyme he sang these now familiar lines:

> Backward, turn backward, oh, time in > your flight!
> Make me a child again just for to-night.

Some of us frankly admit that we would like to live our past years over again. Others just as frankly state that they do not so desire. Benjamin Franklin belonged to the first group. In one of his letters to his son he wrote thus: "I should have no objection to a repetition of my life from its beginning, only asking the advantages authors have in a second edition to correct some faults of the first. So I might, besides correcting the faults, change some sinister accidents and events of it for others more favorable. But, though this were denied, I should still accept the offer." But perhaps Benjamin Franklin would not have written thus if he had taken all the possibilities into account. I would like to show you in this sermon that God's way of giving only one earthly life to one man is the best way. May God help us to-day as we, on this last Sunday of the year, take a retrospect of the years that are gone.

No man, in the first place, could take the journey of life over again unless he took with it the dangers that he escaped in his first experience, which might be fatal to him in his second, nor could he be sure of achieving again the successes that he had before. I have been told that when gold was discovered in California every boat in New York harbor that could be bought or rented was drafted into the service to carry to the western shores those who were possessed by the gold fever. So anxious were men to dig in California hills that they were ready to risk their lives in any old hulk. Some three or four hundred crazy crafts in the year 1850 rounded Cape Horn. Some of these tubs were not fit to sail across Lake Michigan on a summer day. One, I have been told, was nothing but a ferryboat. But, strange to say, all those cranky boats reached California in safety. Not one was wrecked that year. Many an iron boat with screw propeller has since been destroyed upon the dangerous rocks of South America. But during the first year of the California gold fever not one boat was lost on the voyage. We know not how we have weathered the financial and the domestic storms, but we have. We know only too well how fierce the cyclones have blown off our Cape Horns. But, having weathered them once and realized what the dangers were, we have grave doubts whether we should ever be able to weather them again.

Do you not remember that awful struggle you had to get established in business? Night after night you used to walk the floor. Then, when you just got a foothold and things seemed to be coming your way, do you not remember those years of panic and hard times? Would you like to live those years over again? Your business partner broke down at that time with nervous prostration. He died in an insane asylum. Your own brain was almost crazed. Your hair is white to-day from those trials. Would you like to live them over again? How do you know you would come through them next time as successfully as you have done? You know that it seemed a mere chance that your father's old friend came to your rescue at that time or that oil was discovered upon your farm land, which land you could never give away before and which land you were almost tempted to let go to liquidate the taxes. Would you like to be caught in in that railroad accident? Perhaps you were on a train that was wrecked, in which many passengers were crushed or mutilated. You do not know how it happened. You were sitting in the car reading. Suddenly the engine gave a shriek; the brakes were jammed hard down. Then you awoke in a dazed condition. You heard groanings and prayers being uttered all about you. You escaped, like Job, by the skin of your teeth. The man who sat within three feet of you was dead or, what is worse, physically mangled for life. If you had to go through that accident again, would you be physically well and whole as you are to-day? Oh, no! Most of us do not wish to run again the risks we ran during our past lives. Financial risks, domestic risks, physical risks! They nearly destroyed us. We could not be sure that we should have the same chances for success ever again if we had to meet the same dangers. Most of our friends who have been destroyed were wrecked by a chance trivial as a hair. Most of us, if not all of us, on the other hand, have been saved by that turning of a hair. Almost were we destroyed, but almost was not quite enough to annihilate us.

We fear to meet our past financial and physical and domestic dangers again. We should also tremble when we look back upon our past spiritual temptations. It is absurd for some of us to say if we had our lives to live over again we would do any differently spiritually than we did in the days that are gone. In all probability we would do just the same as we did in the past if not worse. Why? Because to-day, with all our experiences and shortcomings, we are going ahead sinning all the time.

Does knowledge about the dietary and gastronomic laws make the physician careful about what he eats and how he eats? Oh, no. Doctors can prescribe all right for their patients. But they are proverbial iconoclasts at all the shrines of health when they apply those laws to their own tables. Their doctrine is, "Do not eat as I do, but eat as I say." Let a convention of physicians assemble, and they will have the most intellectual papers read before them upon the proper treatment of dyspepsia. Then they adjourn and go to the table and eat twice as much as they ought to eat and eat that unmasticated food in half the time they ought to eat it. Then they will return to their homes and have their meals at irregular hours. The physician would never let his dyspeptic patients eat as he does. He knows what he ought to do, but he does it not. Now, if we had to live our lives over again in all probability we would do in reference to temptation just as the average physician does in reference to his well known gastronomic laws. We would fall before temptation as he yields to the temptation of the palate. And I for one would be very much surprised if we would turn out again spiritually as well as we have done.

I force myself to this belief for a second reason. We had but little experience in the past. But we did have some experience and knowledge of sin. We did not fall into sin as a trap is sprung upon the unwary bird. We walked straight over the precipice of sin with our eyes wide open. For many years you were addicted to drink. You have been in the past a drunkard. You are a reformed one now. You know all the miseries and horrors of a drunkard's life. But tell me about your first glass. Did you not have just as much a horror of liquor then as you do now? Did you not lie awake all night long, feeling that fiery liquor burning its way down your throat and into your heart after your first drink? Yet did that experience lead you to forswear drink? Did you not return to your tempter again and again? You have been a desecrater of the Sabbath day. You can see the awful results of what a godless Sabbath is upon your present life. Why do you not make Sunday a holy day? Did the sin of a broken Sabbath ever appear to you more heinous than when on the first Sabbath you stayed away from church and went with some sinful boys picnicking in the woods? Ah, Christ was right when in the parable of Dives and Lazarus he represented the rich man in hell who had asked him to send Lazarus back to earth to warn his five brothers "lest they come into this place of torment" as receiving the answer from Abraham, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." If we deliberately sinned when we first went through life we should surely deliberately sin if we went through life a second time. In all probability if we had life to live over again we would not turn out spiritually as well as we have already done.

Then consider another fact. If we were going to live our lives over again we would have to change time. Instead of being seventy, sixty, fifty or forty years of age we would have to become ten, twenty or thirty years of age. What does that mean? Why, it means when we call back our fathers and mothers and sisters and brothers and run around again as a curly-headed child we would have to give up our wives and husbands and children and grandchildren. Would you like to do that? Of course if you were a little girl of eleven years of age you could not have a husband and a lot of babies as you have now. Of course if you were a schoolboy you could not have of couple of other schoolboys running around and calling you "papa" and asking you what they should do. Were you happier when you were young than you are now? I doubt it. I doubt if the opportunity of being ordered around by your teachers and by your parents and by your older brothers and sisters were laid alongside of you present opportunities you would say, "Give me back my youth." I think that you would say: "Let me stay as I am. I would prefer to be a man rather than a boy or a wife and a mother rather than a little child being put to sleep in a trundle bed."

We loved and still do love our fathers and mothers and sisters and brothers. But do we not also love and cling to our wives and husbands and children? We seem to grow a bigger baby about them every day. When we go away from home now we long to get back, just as a little child cries for its mother. How would you like to go back to childhood and live ten, twenty or thirty years before you had the pleasure of domestic life that you have now? Are you sure that you would find a wife as wel adapted to you as she who is now your companion and helper? You know how faithfully she has clung to you. She is like a sapling. She knows how to bend before the angry tornadoes; but, like the sapling, she never loses her anchorage. When the storm of anger subsides she rights herself and compels you to do the same. I do not believe there is another woman in all the world who is more fitted to be the companian of your life than she has been. If I were you I would not ask to go back to childhood and risk losing her. It was hard enough in the beginning to win her. All her school friends were amazed to see her choose you when, from a worldly standpoint, so many suitors had laid siege to her heart and hand.

Then the babies! How could we give them up, even for a little while? I once read of a little girl who, with her brother, was watching a knife grinder sharpening some scissors. Her father, quite nearsighted and deaf, turned to the boy and said: "My son, here is some money. Ask the organ grinder to play another tune." With that the boy began to laugh. His sister turned upon him a look of sharp rebuke as she answered, "Yes, father," we will." Then she turned and gave the organ grinder another pair of scissors to sharpen, and the nearsighted and deaf father turned smilingly away, thinking he had made his children happy, whereas, in fact, it was the daughter who had made the father happy. So when we grow older our children have a habit of covering up our weaknesses. We do not know why it is, but we are growing more and more dependent upon them every day. Ah, yes, those boys and girls of ours, how much they are to us! The hair may be gray upon our heads, the hand may be feeble, but we would not have raven locks and stout limbs if we had to be separated from them even for a year. If we went back to childhood days, could we improve our lot? Could we have any better children than are now blessing our lives?

Our past lives cannot be lived without surrendering the present; but, thank God, we can live out the future with the present and the past to a great extent combined into one. And we can combine the present and the past in the year which is to come by guarding against the most awful mistake we made in past years. We have tried to fight the battle of life alone. We have tried to conquer in our own strength rather than in the strength of the Lord God Almighty, who has always promised to sustain us if we would put our trust in him. We can now grip a hold of the arm of the Almighty God if we will. And oh, my friends, if we put our trust in Christ do you not believe that with his help we could during the coming years overcome many of the mistakes of the past? We can make the past, purified of its evils, live and breathe again in the future. We can! Yes, we can! If we only enter the new year with Christ's help we should be able to undo many of the wrongs of the past, besides taking advantage of the blessed opportunities of the future.

Not only that, but still another blessing may be ours. In Christ we may be able to live again during the years of the coming eternity with those who have made the past years for us so happy. We shall not be at that time like the old lady who lived for many years in the city of Los Angeles. She died there at eighty-four years of age in November, 1905. When she died it was found out that for the last twenty-eight years of her life she had concealed in her attic the dead body of her oldest daughter. This was the body of a young girl of twenty-seven years, who had breathed her last in the far east, and her body had been shipped from Amherst, Mass., to the home of her mother in the far west. For nearly thirty long years this broken-hearted mother had clung to the body of her child and carried it wherever she went. So some of us have been clinging to the dead bodies of our loved ones which were buried many, many years ago. But if we will only give our hearts to Christ here and now on the last Sunday of the year Christ will some day give our loved ones alive back to us. Then we will not have to choose between wife and mother or husband and father or brother and child. Then we shall have them all together again. Then the past and the present and the future shall be united into one. Then father and mother, brother and sister, wife and husband, children and grandchildren shall all assemble together before the throne of God to forever sing the song of Moses and the Lamb. Oh, my friends, will you let your past life live again in Christ?

Thus in closing this sermon on the last Sunday of the year I do not feel a sense of sadness such as I have often felt upon similar occasions in the past. Whenever I have attended the watchnight meetings of previous New Year's eves the ringing of the bell when the clock struck 12 has always sounded to me like the tolling of a dirge. It has been to me a death-knell. It has been like the tolling of the bell when the hearse enters the cemetery. As the clock struck 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, it seemed to call: "Dead and gone! The years of 1900 and 1901 and 1902 and 1903 and 1904 and 1905 are dead and gone! They are dead and gone forever! Hear it, ye living! Dead and gone forever!" But as I hear the clock striking the midnight hour to-night it will not be a dirge, but a promise of reunion. It will ring: "The year of 1905 is not dead and gone forever. Thou shalt meet it with its sanctified joys and sorrows. Thou shalt meet it again smiling with the faces of those who have made thy past twelve months happy and blessed. Thou shalt meet the year of 1905 coming forth to greet thee, O Christian, with the sacred years of 1890 and 1880 and 1870 by its side. All these years shall live again if thou wilt put thy faith in Christ and have him live in thee and thou in him." My friends, on this last Sunday of the year, wilt thou have the midnight bell toll for thee a dirge or ring out for thee a gospel triumph? You can here and now decide if you shall live over again your happy past.

Thou blessed past with our hallowed dear ones? Art thou alive? Shall it come forth to greet us at the day of judgment and, purified of all evil, live with us through all the coming eternities? It will. Thou year of 1905, go forth and assemble for us the dear years that are gone. Assemble them to greet us when, like Christ, we shall rise from our ascension mount, and time for us shall be no longer except as we spend that time with Christ.

The Waiter Brought It.

A Toronto man took a well-known clergyman in to lunch at a well-known buffet, upstairs, a few days ago, and after he had given the order for both of them the clergyman picked up the menu card and began looking at it.

"I'm blind as a bat," he observed on finding that he could not read it.

"Yes, sir," said the waiter, who had been standing by.

In a moment the waiter returned with a pint of Labatt's, which he proceeded to uncork and pour into the glass of the nonplussed clergyman. Then it dawned on him that the waiter had misunderstood his remark about his defective eyesight.

Cages For Grasshoppers.

There is a regular business in Italy of making little wire cages for grasshoppers. The insect is regarded as lucky, and if one can be kept alive in the cage for a month it is believed the year will be prosperous. The superstition arose from this incident: A cardinal of the Medici family invited a bishop to dine with him in his garden. The cardinal handed the bishop a glass of wine. A grasshopper fell from a tree into the wine, and the bishop did not drink it. The wine was afterward found to have been poisoned.

PICKERING COLLEGE BURNED.

Strong Gale Frustrated Firemen's Efforts—Loss $30,000.

Pickering, Jan. 2.—Pickering College one of the best-known scholastic establishments on the American continent, was destroyed by fire on Saturday. The outbreak occurred at about 8.30 a. m. in the northwest corner of the building in the apartments of the Principal, Mr. W. P. Firth, M. A. The pupils were away on their Christmas holidays, and the building was only occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Firth, the matron and servants. Mr. and Mrs. Firth had not long left the college for Pickering station to take train for Toronto, when the fire was first noticed, and they were summoned back by telephone just before the train started.

The wind was blowing a gale from the northwest and drove the flames across the building, and frustrated the firemen's efforts. The fire burned fiercely for several hours, and before noon the whole of the main building had been completely destroyed, the walls and chimneys being all that remain. The gymnasium and other outbuildings are intact.

The loss is estimated at about $30,000, which is partially covered by insurance.

The college, which was erected in 1878, was carried on under the auspices of the Society of Friends and was the only Friends' College in Canada.

Big Fire at Truro, N. S.

Halifax, N. S., Jan. 2.—Gunn's Opera Block at Truro was totally destroyed by fire Sunday morning. A number of firms were burned out. The loss is estimated at $50,000, partly covered by insurance.

Fire In Asylum Cottage.

Mimico, Jan. 2.—Although the building in which they were confined was burning down over their heads, many of the patients in Cottage No. Two at Mimico Asylum, which was destroyed by fire Sunday morning, absolutely refused to be rescued. They finally had to be removed by force. The twenty or more patients in the house were, however, safely carried out. The loss is about $15,000.

Wheatley Block Burned.

Wheatley, Jan. 2.—About 2.30 o'clock Sunday morning fire broke out in the new Jackson block, corner of Erie and Talbot streets, occupied by Stewart Anderson as a general store. The building and stock are a total loss. Loss on building, $2,500; loss on stock, about $6,000.

British Commercial Agents.

London, Jan. 2.—(C. A. P.)—It is probable British commercial agents will be appointed to Colonies. Mr. O'Hara's letter caused the matter to be seriously discussed. On behalf of the Board of Trade it is pointed out that Canada will not be entirely neglected. As to the Colonies in general men have been sent to make inquiries in South Africa and the Australias, with the result that agents have been appointed to Africa, and will apparently be chosen for Australia. The probability is that similar measures will be followed in regard to Canada.

Hamilton Man Killed.

Hamilton, Jan. 2.—Elliott Longley, who resided near the Jockey Club, and was employed by the Imperial Cotton Co., was on his way to work between 6 and 7 o'clock, Saturday night, accompanied by his sister, when he was struck by a G. T. R. train from the east and was killed instantly.

Two Lonely Men Suffocate.

Winnipeg, Jan. 2.—Word has been received of the tragic death of two homesteaders, R. McLaughlin and James Ross, who were living in one shack near Hanley, Sask. They were found dead in bed by neighbors, having been suffocated by coal gas.

Alien Act In Force.

London, Jan. 2.—The Alien Act, passed at the last session of Parliament, came into force yesterday. The first effect of the new law was that the immigration officers refused to permit the landing of 24 of 42 immigrants from Germany.

The Emerald.

The emerald improves in color on exposure to the light. Pearls kept in the dark lose their luster, but regain it on exposure to the sun.

Puddings.

A pudding, whether steamed in a mold or boiled in a bag, must not cease boiling, not even for a minute, or it will certainly be sticky. Keep the water boiling, and if more is needed as it boils away see that what is used to replenish it is boiling.

A Dangerous Orange.

In parts of New Zealand there grows a sort of orange which no one but a native can eat without becoming very ill, while two would probably poison the average European.

Useful Cleansing Fluid.

A very useful cleansing fluid which will remove grease from the finest fabrics without injuring them is made with one quart of rainwater, two ounces of ammonia, one teaspoonful of saltpeter and one ounce of finely shaved white castile soap.

Dandruff.

A preparation of one ounce of flower of sulphur and one quart of soft water if applied thoroughly to the scalp night and morning will remove every trace of dandruff and render the hair rich and glossy.

English Marriages.

In every thousand marriages in England twenty-one are solemnized between first cousins. Among the nobility the rate is much higher, amounting to forty-five in a thousand.

PRUNING THE BRANCHES.

Will not save a diseased tree. Whatever it is that threatens the life of the tree must be discovered and attacked directly. It is the same with rheumatism, which has been considered incurable in advanced stages, because the ordinary remedy, instead of going at the root of the disease, simply prunes the branches. The trouble is in the bone or joint and must be got at there, must be driven out. This is where the pre-eminence of Tuck's Rheumatic Bone Oil comes in over all other remedies. It goes straight at the root of the trouble in the quickest and most direct way, penetrates to the bone and effects a sure, permanent and speedy cure. Here is what one sufferer says of it:

Dear Sirs,—You ask me if Tuck's Bone Oil did me any good. I can tell you that it did. It cured me of rheumatism and nothing ever helped me for neuralgia until I got that. I suffered everything for years from rheumatism and at times I thought it was going to my heart and would kill me. All my neighbors know how I suffered and they all know that Tuck's Bone Oil cured me, because I tell everybody I see. I took small doses of it, about four drops in milk, and I had it thoroughly rubbed into my legs, which were both affected. It seemed to penetrate right to where the pain was and even the first application gave me relief, but the grumbling pain came back in a few hours. I kept on using it and before I had used all of the fourth bottle I was completely free of rheumatism. During this time I had a terrible attack of neuralgia. I used Tuck's Bone Oil, and got almost instant relief. I am willing for you to use this any way you like because I think your Bone Oil should be known of by everyone.

W. H. DEAN,
Farnham, Quebec.

For rheumatism, lame back, neuralgia, sprains, coughs, colds, quinsy or bronchitis, in short for any and all kinds of inflammation there is nothing to equal Tuck's Bone Oil. A bottle should be on the shelf in every home. For sale by all medicine dealers at 50c a bottle or sent prepaid by The Tuck Bone Oil Co., Limited, Smith's Falls, Ont.

HOW TO GET CONSUMPTION.

Ninety per cent. of the "lungers" contract consumption by allowing power of resistance to fall so low that a favorable condition for the development of the bacilli is provided. In a healthy system consumption can't take root. But where there is weakness and debility, there you find tuberculosis. For developing strength and building up the weak, nothing equals Ferrozone. It makes the blood nutritious and the nerves enduring. The way it converts food into nutriment, the appetite it gives is surprising. Just what the man verging on consumption needs—that's Ferrozone. If tired and weak don't put

Sunday School Rally Yesterday Afternoon.

DELIGHTFUL AND INTERESTING AFFAIR IN HOLLOWAY STREET CHURCH — MR. HORACE YEOMANS, A SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKER FOR EIGHTY YEARS, PRESENT — REV. DR. POTTS MADE A MASTERLY ADDRESS.

The Methodist Sunday school rally of 1906, held at Holloway St. Church, on New Year's afternoon, was inaugural and a grand success, and West Belleville Church, in the language of one present, "scored once again in the ample and appropriate decorations, the efficient orchestra and the hearty welcome." At 2.30 the body of the church was but slimly filled, but the music began and so did the stream of Sunday school scholars from the Sunday school rooms, beginning with the little tots with cherubic faces, and ending with aged men and women, made happy in Sunday school associations, and thus the school of the church almost filled the galleries. Sir Mackenzie Bowell, the chairman, was surrounded with ministers and Sunday school superintendents, the orchestra being in the background of a spacious platform. The opening chorus, "Stand up for Jesus," was, like those that followed, well sustained and heartily sung.

The Rev. J. P. Wilson opened with prayer, and the venerable chairman gave the palm to one present who was an older Sunday school scholar than himself, viz., Mr. Horace Yeomans, for 80 years a Sunday school worker. The chairman then congratulated those present on the occasion of this first rally, complimented Belleville upon her efficient staff of Sunday school workers, and bespoke a most hopeful future for this union.

Prof. Osborne presented a list of greetings arranged in committee and forwarded, viz., greetings from Belleville Methodist Sunday schools to King Edward. Here "God Save the King" was spontaneously rendered. Prof. Osborne, continuing, referred to greetings sent to similar rallies held simultaneously in Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg; referring them severally to 2 Thes., 3, 1. This action of the committee was, on motion of Superintendents Magrath and Gordon, adopted by the rally. Prof. Osborne also read the telegram of greetings from the rally at Massey Hall, Toronto, to Belleville:

"The Methodist Sunday schools of Toronto, representing 23,000, send greetings," referring to Ephesians, 3, 17, 19, read by Rev. G. Brown.

Rev. Mr. Leitch was called upon for greetings, which he presented with hearty welcome and best wishes from the church that had given the initiative in this rally.

Supt. Johnson also gave heartiest greetings through Dr. Potts as chairman of the International Sunday School Committee, to 26 millions of Sunday school scholars over the world; through Rev. A. Martin and Mr. H. Yeomans to old scholars, and through other superintendents present, Messrs. W. Gordon, Magrath, Elvins, Doxsee and Miss Watson, to Sunday school scholars of to-day in the City of the Bay.

Mr. and Mrs. M. O. Gordon then sang, most suitably, a duet, "I Heard the Voice of Jesus."

The chairman then introduced the speaker of the occasion, who, he said, needed no introduction to a Belleville audience. Dr. Potts was well known as chairman of the International Sunday School Committee.

On rising the Rev. Dr. congratulated those present because of manifest interest in the Sunday school work. He said he loved children, especially the girls, little and big, and said that the last children's gathering he had addressed was at the inauguration of Alberta, where the children had taken a part, and he would not soon forget the motto over a wagon load of boys, "Men of the north we are." Yes, said the Dr., "the coming men of the no longer Lone Land,' and it was so with this, the fairest country under the stars, where the men of the future are in training in the Sunday school, and only thus is our country safe." Dr. Potts told of meeting Michael Davitt at one time, and said his presence had no charm, but his first words to me won me, "You represent the grandest natural heritage under the sun," and we have in training for its salvation a part of the great army of Sunday school workers, 26 millions, an army larger than the combined armies of the nations. In 1781, said the Dr., a Methodist young woman came to Robert Raikes with a burdened heart about the young, and this was the beginning, as together they organized the first Sunday school, and a shilling was paid for teachers each Sunday. In 1786 Bishop Ashbury began the first Sunday school in America, in Virginia, and behold what God hath wrought! In early Sunday schools the teachers taught from 6 to 10 a.m., and from 2 to 6 p.m., and thus came the eight-hour system. The Sunday school is the mightiest force in the church to-day, and we must direct it against all evil. John Wannamaker, the superintendent of the largest Sunday School in America, found time to teach a class of 1,400 in his Philadelphia Sunday school, where the centurian and captain is employed with military precision. Here, said Dr. Potts, in the Sunday school is the fruitful field for every pastor, as it is estimated that 80 and even 87 per cent. of additions to church membership come by way of the Sunday school, and here teacher and pastor were co-workers. The International Committee had provided the bill of Rome on May 5, 1907, and would be attended by thousands from America. What a sight! The Dr. anticipates an anthem of praise from thousands of voices in the Colosseum, the scene of humiliation and death to thousands of the early Christians. Our purpose, said the speaker, is not to sing hymns and keep up the machinery. No, our motto for this year is "Myself and my class for Christ." Don't you want to come and help us? And the Dr. sat down amid the applause of a delighted audience, and the first rally closed enthusiastically.

Miss Sabra Bonisteel gave a pleasing recitation at the close of Dr. Potts' address.

"A Journey To Jerusalem."

GRAPHIC AND INTERESTING LECTURE BY REV. DR. POTTS ON THE ABOVE SUBJECT LAST NIGHT.

At Bridge Street Church last evening a goodly number assembled to hear the Rev. Dr. Potts, of Toronto, lecture. His subject was "A Trip to Jerusalem," being an account of the voyage of 800 or so Sunday school workers to the World's Sunday School convention at Jerusalem.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell was chairman. Before the lecturer commenced his address, brief devotional exercises were carried out, consisting of the singing of a hymn, prayer by the Pastor, Rev. J. P. Wilson, B.A., and a solo, entitled "Galilee," by Miss M. Vermilyea.

The chairman, in introducing the Rev lecturer, did so without any comments, as Dr. Potts, he said was too well known to need any introduction.

In his opening remarks Dr. Potts referred to the great world's Sunday school convention held in 1903, ocing the centenary. Then it was hinted that the next world's convention should take place at Jerusalem. He (the speaker) thought at first that it was almost foolish to dream of such a proposition, but it was decided to go, and he, after some persuasion, consented to be one of the party. It was a great undertaking, but with such men at the head of the movement as Messrs. E. K. Warren, J. McQuillis and W. Hartsorn, all of the United States, the trip was successfully arranged. It was a most interesting trip from beginning to end. What a grand and glorious privilege it was to visit and walk in places where Jesus had walked! What inspiration was received! The lecturer then gave a minute and concise account of the trip upon the steamer, the doings on board, the services held, etc. The various points of interest visited were noted. Such places as Funschal, Madeira, Athens, Malta and Gibraltar were described. The Rev. gentleman waxed eloquent in referring to the latter place and its Governor, Sir George White, the hero of Ladysmith. Gibraltar represented the solidity of the grand Empire to which we belong. A notable place was Mars Hill, in Athens, where he had the opportunity of preaching on a Sabbath day, and the subject was appropriate to the surroundings, namely, "Jesus and the Resurrection." After a short stop at Joppa, "On to Jerusalem" was the cry, for that was the place prominent in the minds of all on board. That noted city was reached in due time, and a rush of historic memories filled the minds of all. The speaker gave an interesting account of the convention, held in a large tent, which was pitched near Mount Calvary. The visit to the Garden of Gethsemane, the field called the Field of Angels, and other historic places of interest were graphically described by the Rev. gentleman. The return home by another route and the visits to Egypt, Rome and various other places were spoken of. The lecture throughout was of intense interest.

Ex-Mayor Graham moved, seconded by Dr. Farley, a vote of thanks to the lecturer, which was carried by a standing vote. Rev. Dr. Potts appropriately replied. The singing of the National Anthem and the benediction by the Pastor brought the proceedings to a close.

A HAPPY EVENT.

HYMAN-PHIPPEN NUPTIALS AT THE RESIDENCE OF THE BRIDE'S PARENTS YESTERDAY AFTERNOON.

A very interesting wedding took place on New Year's day, at 3 p.m., at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. J. A. Phippen, Bridge St., when his younger daughter, Edith Katherine, was united in matrimony to Mr B. Levin Hyman, son of Mrs. S. A. Hyman, of this city.

The ceremony was performed in the spacious and beautifully decorated drawing-rooms, Rev. Mr. Laidlaw, pastor of St. Andrew's Presbyterian church, officiating. Many guests from Montreal and Toronto were present, as well as a host of immediate friends and relatives in Belleville. Miss Jessie Carrier, of Toronto, was the sweet and winsome maid of honor, and Mr. Percy Allen was best man.

Many good wishes accompany the young couple as they enjoy their bridal trip to New York and other American cities.

Bright Boy Of Thirteen Met a Watery Grave.

STANLEY COUGHLIN, WHILE SKATING ON THE BAY YESTERDAY AFTERNOON, RAN INTO OPEN WATER AND WAS DROWNED — A SAD NEW YEAR'S INCIDENT.

New Year's day did not end happily for at least one family in this city. This was owing to the fact that Stanley Coughlin, only son of Mr. and Mrs. T. Coughlin, who reside on Church street, did not return home during the night and as he was skating upon the bay on Monday afternoon, it was feared that he had met a watery grave. Such proved to be only too true. The lad in question was, with many others, upon the bay and, like many others used a small sail to aid his progress. As darkness came on Stanley was missed and some of his companions raised an alarm. During the night, and up to an early hour this morning, many friends went out in search of the missing boy, but no trace of him could be found. This morning the search was resumed, and about 10 o'clock Messrs. Wm. Carter and Jos. Duesberry, who were amongst the searchers, found, frozen in the ice in the centre of the bay, the sail used by the lad. It was at once surmised that the body was near by and with the aid of grappling irons the remains of the lad was recovered in about 30 feet of water. Where the boy met his fate was midway in the bay between the end of the Grand Junction dock and Cow Island. Here the water yesterday was not frozen over, but during the night a slight coating of ice formed. The sorrowing father was upon the scene when the body was recovered and his feelings can be better imagined than described. The body was conveyed to Mr. Carter's boat house, and Dr. Tracy, coroner, was summoned, who, after hearing the facts, did not deem it necessary to hold an inquest.

The remains were conveyed to Tickell & Sons undertaking establishment and prepared for burial.

Stanley Coughlin was a bright lad of nearly 13 years of age. He was a general favorite with his companions and his untimely death has caused much sympathy to be expressed for the bereaved parents and relatives.

HOCKEY.

Kingston Juniors Trimmed Local Y. M. C. A. Team.

There was a very good attendance at the hockey match last night between the St. George's, of Kingston, and the local Y.M.C.A. team, and the game was fast and quite exciting. Mr. "Billy" Burke was referee, and again proved himself a capable official. The visitors won by a score of 4—2, but the score does not indicate the play by any means. So far as individual play was concerned, the locals had the Kingston lads beaten a city block, but the Limestone City boys had a little bit of combination, which the Y.M.C.A.'s were very short in, and it was the same old story — combination always wins. Perhaps the locals may now see the advantage of a little more practise together. If so, they should easily win the return match, if one is played. The star players on the teams were Phil Acton for the locals and Reg. Crawford for Kingston. The home team did not play as clean a game as they might, though it must be confessed that none of them were sent to the side for biting. There was a good deal of undue roughness, however, which might well be cut out. The line-up was as follows:

Kingston.		Y.M.C.A.
Strachan	Goal.	Dolan
Murphy	Point.	Acton
Dalton	Cover point.	Connolly
Oldrieve	Centre.	Weller
Crawford	Rover.	Smith
Gravelle	Right wing	Brennan
McCarthy	Left wing	Hamilton

O. H. A. Juniors Feel Sore.

The local junior O.H.A. team was slated to play at Cobourg last night, but word was received here at 11 o'clock yesterday that there was no ice. The management of our boys naturally feel somewhat indignant, for the tickets for the team, and a number of spectators who were to accompany them, had been purchased. As it is claimed that under the O.H.A. rules 36 hours notice must be given if a game cannot be played, the matter will be reported to the proper officials for investigation.

The York County Loan

THERE ARE 113,740 PASSBOOKS OUTSTANDING — SHAREHOLDERS MAY DEPOSIT THEIR BOOKS WITH THE BANK OF COMMERCE IN THIS CITY.

Toronto, Dec. 30.—Unless the view changes before that time, it is probable that the examination made before Neil McLean of the affairs of the York County Loan, will not be resumed on Jan. 5, to which date it was adjourned in Osgoode Hall. The liquidators do not wish to simply rehearse ground already covered by the enquiry in charge of W. H. Cross, the Government official appointed by the Attorney-General.

In the effort to devise a plan through which shareholders outside this city may forward their passbooks to the National Trust Company without expense, the liquidators have decided to utilize the branch banks throughout the province. Arrangements have been completed with the following banks outside this city, whereby shareholders may deposit their pass-books in the branch offices and receive receipts therefor: The Canadian Bank of Commerce, Imperial, Ontario, Toronto, Standard, Metropolitan and Sovereign Banks.

113,740 BOOKS.

Home Smith forwarded to Mr. White to-day a statement showing that there are 113,740 passbooks outstanding. This figure is subject to change, but is approximately correct.

The National Trust Company has received a number of ten-cent pieces from shareholders in company with books sent in. The company wishes it understood that they do not desire these sums. Shareholders have evidently mistaken a request made some time since by the Shareholders' Committee for contributions of ten cents, for that of the liquidators.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"THE ARRIVAL OF KITTY."

One of the most promising of this season's new dramatic offerings is C. S. Williams' production of Norman Lee Swartout's delightful farce comedy, "The Arrival of Kitty," which appears at the Carman to-morrow night. The piece is said to be one of the brightest and most potent laugh producers created since the days of the Hoyt farces, and in fact it is in some ways similar to those old masterpieces of wit and humor, though it is entirely new and original in theme and treatment. Mr. Swartout already holds an enviable place among contemporary writers of farce comedy in this country, through his creation of "Sandy" and several kindred pieces, but it is said that he has eclipsed all his previous efforts in "The Arrival of Kitty." Mr. Williams, who is a successful producer of this line of dramatics, promises to give his new comedy a thoroughly adequate presentation and to provide a company of unusual excellence.

ARTON WOODS MURDER.

Half-Brother of Victim Gives Himself Up At Flint, Mich.—His Remarkable Story.

Flint, Mich., Jan. 2.—John Horton gave himself up last night confessing that he had a hand in the murder of Mrs. Marie Hart at Hamilton, Ont., last October.

Horton says she was his half sister. She was killed because she had threatened to tell the police about himself and two Mexicans, his partners, who were passing counterfeit money.

He does not say that he did the killing, but admits having a hand in it.

Gave Himself Up.

Horton struck town Saturday night. Last night he went to the county jail and told the officers that he wanted to give himself up.

Then he took from his pocket a circular gotten out by the police at Hamilton telling of the finding of the body of an unknown girl near that city on Oct. 9, and offering a reward for any information that would lead to the arrest of the murderers. The paper gave the description of the girl, but not her name as she had not been identified.

Threatened to Tell.

After the officers had read the paper, Horton, without further questioning, told his remarkable story.

He and two other men, he said whose names were Manuel Lacressa and Juan Senson, both Mexicans, were operating last October in Hamilton and the vicinity, passing counterfeit money.

In some manner the girl learned of the guilt of her half brother and his companions, and threatened to tell on them.

Haunted By Fear.

Horton carefully refrains from admitting that he had any part in the actual murder, but admits that it will mean a long term in prison to him, if not hanging.

He says, however, that he is tired of being haunted by the fear of capture, preferring to give himself up and have the matter off his mind.

He will be held here until the officials at Hamilton can be communicated with.

BOMB-THROWING IN IDAHO.

Ex-Governor Steuenberg Killed for Unknown Reasons.

Boise, Idaho, Jan. 2.—Frank Steuenberg, formerly Governor of Idaho, was killed Saturday night by a bomb at his home in Caldwell. A dynamite bomb had been placed at his front gate with a contrivance that exploded the bomb as he entered. Both legs were blown off and Steuenberg lived but twenty minutes.

There is no known reason for the outrage, but it is charged to some members of the famous Inner Circle of the Couer De Alene dynamiters, whom he prosecuted relentlessly in 1899 while he was Governor.

Canada's Prosperity.

London, Jan. 2.—Tributes to Canada's progress and prosperity are the feature of the new year reviews of 1905 appearing in the press.

One writer says: "This year Canada keeps booming ahead. Canada keeps wide open doors for the courageous and stalwart, and has not only attracted the best of our surplus population, but is receiving a constantly increasing number of immigrants from the United States. This bounding of the Dominion has touched Australia with a little envy. Australia is not developing as she should, and much blame is thrown on the labor organizations.

ELECTION MANIFESTO

Joseph Chamberlain Vigorously Attacks New Government.

Characterizes It as "Home Rule, Little Englander Government" — Makes Exposition of His Fiscal Policy, Especially of the Subject of Colonial Preference—Unionist Party Is, He Says, Agreed—His Summing Up.

London, Jan. 2.—Joseph Chamberlain issued his election manifesto yesterday.

After vigorously attacking the new Government, which he describes as being essentially a "Home Rule, Little Englander Government" depending for its existence on Irish votes, he devotes himself entirely to an exposition of his fiscal policy, especially to the subject of Colonial preference, which he speaks of as the first item in the constructive program of the Unionist party; the second item, closely connected with the first being the policy of retaliation.

He declares that the Colonies will not wait indefinitely, but will be forced to enter into arrangements with strangers. He points out that the scheme of Colonial preference will include a provision for the small tax on foreign wheat but says that as both home-grown and Colonial wheat will be free, and the supply from the Colonies unlimited, the price of bread will not be increased in the slightest degree.

Unionist Party Agreed.

Mr. Chamberlain declares that he believes the Unionist party to be absolutely agreed regarding these aims, though he admits there may be some differences of opinion when the time comes to discuss the methods by which these aims are to be accomplished. He says, however, that these differences of opinion probably are exaggerated, and that they are matters more of verbal distinction than of practical importance. Continuing, Mr. Chamberlain says:

"I believe our objects can be attained by a moderate general tariff, scientifically adapted to the existing conditions of our trade, and so arranged as to secure the largest amount of employment at fair wages for our people. It would necessarily provide for the free admission of raw materials and of articles which we do not make ourselves, while it would place a toll on the manufacturers of those countries which do not treat us fairly.

Summed Up.

"Our policy is constructive and practical, while the policy of our opponents is desrtuctive and theoretical."

BLAST FROM DEVONSHIRE.

Issues Manifesto Against Retrograde Fiscal Policy—Says Home Rule Is a Side Issue.

London, Jan. 2.—The Duke of Devonshire, Liberal-Unionist, has issued an important election manifesto in which he virtually advises the Free Trade Unionists to support the Liberal candidates rather than the Protectionist Unionists. By treating the home rule question as a mere side issue he deals the strongest blow yet against Mr. Balfour's election tactics.

The duke asserts that there is no indication that the opinion of the country has changed since the rejection of the last home rule bill and that it is in the highest degree improbable that the Government of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman will incur the risk of introducing another such measure in the next Parliament. Therefore, he says, the question of free trade versus protection must be the paramount factor in the coming elections, and he declares there must be no deviation from attachment to free trade.

The duke confesses that he knows no more now than when he left the late Government of what is implied by the Balfourian fiscal scheme, which its authors declare to be acceptable to free traders and protectionists alike. On the other hand, he says there is no ambiguity about the Chamberlain propaganda, which is avowedly protectionist.

The manifesto contends that the Unionist party organization has largely been captured by the Protectionist wing, and that should the party become predominantly Protectionist there will be either real danger to free trade or the prospects of the exclusion of the Unionist party for an indefinite period from either power or influence.

In conclusion, the duke declares that it is the duty of Unionist Free Traders to take such action as will prove that the Unionist party, as a whole, whether in power or in Opposition, is still uncommitted to a retrograde fiscal policy by whomsoever it may be proposed.

FUNERAL AT MADELEINE.

Great Honor Paid the Remains of Hon. Raymond Prefontaine in Paris—Notable Figures Present.

Paris, Jan. 2.—(C. A. P.)—Long before the hour set for the funeral services on Saturday of the late Raymond Prefontaine to commence at the Madeleine, large crowds had gathered in the vicinity, numbers of whom endeavored to gain admission to the church, but only ticket-holders were admitted. When the services begun, the Madeleine was crowded. Among those present were: the British Ambassador and staff, M. Rouvier, Prime Minister of France; M. Doumer, President of the Chamber of Deputies; Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson; Secretary Griffuths, representing Lord Strathcona; Col. Hutchison, Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, James Brodie Archer of Montreal, and Mr. Thomas, the French Minister of Marine. The Canadian Colonies in London and Paris were largely represented.

A very large number of wreaths were sent from England and Canada, French friends also contributing many. The service was conducted by the high priest of the Madeleine, assisted by Canon Wantel, and in the choir Mr. Plamondon of Montreal sang a solo. The service was the highest the Madeleine could give.

At the conclusion of the service, Hon. Mr. Lemieux and Mr. Hector Fabre, the Canadian Government agent in Paris, stood at the entrance and received the condolences of the British Ambassador, the Minister of Bulgaria, the French Government officials, and many other distinguished people. The coffin was removed to the front of the Madeleine, where M. Rouvier, Prime Minister, addressing the gathering, eulogized the services of Mr. Prefontaine to Canada, and not only to Canada, but to England and France. The sympathy of the French nation, said M. Rouvier, was with the Canadian people in their great loss. Mr. Prefontaine was a patriot, a man to be admired for his energy and perseverance.

Mr. Lemieux replied.

Thanks to French Republic.

Ottawa, Jan. 2.—Earl Grey Saturday afternoon received the following cable from Lord Elgin, Secretary of State for the Colonies:

"The funeral of Hon. Raymond Prefontaine took place this morning at the Madeleine, Paris, with military honors. There were present a representative of the President of the Republic, President of Chamber, President of Council, Minister of Marine, British Ambassador, and staff of embassy. Speeches were made by the Minister of Marine and Solicitor-General of Canada.

"The British Ambassador has been instructed to ask for an audience with the President of the Republic to thank him in the name of His Majesty the King and His Majesty's Government for the military honors and attendance of representatives at the funeral, and also to thank the President of the Chamber and Ministers for attendance and speeches."

GAMBLING IS LEGALIZED.

Bookies Will Now Have Free Hand at Toronto Woodbine.

Toronto, Jan. 2.—Saturday the following judgment was handed out at Osgoode Hall:

Rex. v. Hendrie.—Judgment (C.) upon a case reserved by the Police Magistrate for the City of Toronto. An information having been laid against William Hendrie, the president of the Ontario Jockey Club, the owners of the Woodbine racing track, that he kept a disorderly house within the meaning of secs. 197 and 198 of the criminal code, a formal conviction was entered. The ground for the conviction was that, to the knowledge of the defendant, an enclosed place was set aside for betting, to which the general public were admitted. The privilege of conducting the betting operations was leased to one individual, who sub-let to some twenty operators. The point reserved was whether, the club being an incorporated body, such place came within the act. Question answered in the negative and conviction quashed, Maclaren, J. A., dissenting. Per Moss, C. J. O.; The question is, can defendant be held responsible simply because he was a director and president of the club by which the privileges were leased or granted, and this was done with his knowledge and acquiesence? It is not shown that defendant personally promoted the action of the corporation, or that he did more than acquiesce. And nothing more should be inferred from his position in the club in order to render him liable as an accessory before the fact. Even in the case of a direct statutory provision against a corporation doing or refraining from doing certain acts, a director is not liable for a violation of the statute simply because of his office. In order to render him liable it must be shown that he personally participated in the prescribed acts. There is no authority showing that acquiesence amounts to personal participation. Reference to Regina v. Stannard, 9 Cox. C. C. 405. C. H. Ritchie, K. C., for defendant. J. R. Cartwright, K. C., for the Crown.

Lord Strathcona's Views.

New York, Jan. 2.—Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal of Canada, who returned Sunday from London, where he went in April last, says:

"The new ministry is getting down to business, and I believe it will show great strength. The Colonial Secretary is a son of a former Governor-General of Canada, and he has been in India, so that he is ample qualified. As to reciprocity between Canada and the United States, that is something which both nations must settle for themselves."

CORNERED THE REBELS

Doubassoff Explains How He Quelled Moscow Revolt.

Governor-General Says the Casualties Will Not Exceed 3,000—Black Hundreds Apply Torch and Watch Their Victims Consume in the Flames—Terrible Pictures of Conditions Along Siberian Railway.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 2.—The policy of repressing the revolutionists continues with a vengeance. Their announcement that they proposed to carry on a guerilla warfare until a general armed revolt is prepared has stimulated the Government to redoubled energy.

Nevertheless the Workmen's Council and the executive committee of the social revolutionists are managing to evade arrest and are meeting each day at a different place in the outskirts of the city. The patrols are understood to have orders not to spare bullets if they are attacked by persons using bombs or revolvers.

An interview with Governor-General Doubassoff was printed yesterday, in which he explains that the duration of the revolt is owing to the extent of the region in which the military forces are operating and owing to the lack of troops which compelled Doubassoff to await reinforcements from Warsaw and St. Petersburg before giving the revolutionists their death blow.

Cornered Them Up.

"The most difficult task," the Governor-General continued, "was to drive them from their base on the Kazan Railroad between Moscow and Perovo (three miles east of Moscow), and surround them in the Presna district, so as to prevent their escape. Both these tasks were successfully accomplished.

"The strikers of the Prokharoff Mills, who held the proprietor as a hostage, were ready to surrender Friday, but Col. Minn, who conducted the negotiations, declined to accept their surrender unless they also delivered up the "Drujinists," the soldiers of the revolutionists, who had sought refuge there."

Governor-General Doubassoff further declared emphatically that the artillery bombarded only the houses from which the revolutionists fired.

Casualties 3,000.

Governor-General Doubassoff has not yet given the figures of the losses during the fighting at Moscow, saying that it is impossible for them to more than make a guess. However, he places the outside limit as 3,000. The troops and police do not suffer nearly so heavily, and it is reported that up to Thursday night there were less than 50 casualties among them everywhere.

Governor-General Doubassoff has posted an imperial ukase guaranteeing pardon to strikers who have not used arms.

A terrible affair occurred at a workman's tea house in Novaya Derevyna street near the Presna district. It was surrounded by the Black Hundreds, who finally applied the torch and were watching the victims inside consumed by the flames, when Cossacks arrived on the scene.

The papers publish terrible pictures of the conditions prevailing along the Siberian Railway. There are no railway officials on duty, and on the section so far as Cheliabinsk, Government of Orenburg, all the stations have been pillaged. Complete anarchy prevails at Irkutsk. The military trains are running without order or proper engineers.

Session of Douma.

Forseeing the probability that it will be impossible to hold elections in the Baltic provinces, the Caucasus and other disturbed districts, the Government has provided that when the certificates of half the members elected are received the Douma will be immediately convened.

At Riga.

Riga, Government of Livonia, Jan. 2.—Three policemen were killed during Sunday night.

Gen. Count Sollogub, the new Governor-General of the Baltic provinces, who is marching on this city with a large force of troops, is expected Wednesday.

In the Lettish portion of the Baltic provinces the situation is quieter, no serious outbreak has occurred recently. Troops are pursuing revolutionary bands from Dvalk and Dvinsk.

The revolutionary movement is spreading in northern Livonia, where estates are being attacked.

Women in Council.

Mitua, Courland, Russia, Jan. 2.—Four columns of troops, principally cavalry and artillery are converging toward Mitau and Riga. The insurgents in the towns held by them are instituting a social democratic administration as if they were in permanent possession. At Frankenburg a woman of 70 and two girls sit in the new council.

Dies From Wounds.

London, Jan. 2.—A despatch to a news agency from St. Petersburg says that Gen. Bogdanovitch, Vice-Governor-General of Tamboff, Central Russia, who was wounded three times with revolver shots Dec. 28, has died of his wounds.

Witte's Master Stroke.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 2.—It is learned from a high source that Premier Witte is again strongly urging the Emperor to immediately promulgate a modern constitution for the double purpose of reassuring the Liberals that the present war against the "Reds" does not mean reaction and blocking the attempt which undoubtedly will be made when the National Assembly convenes to transform that body into a constituent assembly. Moreover the plan has other heavy backing, and the Emperor is showing an inclination to accept it. The Premier is understood to have informed His Majesty that such an act would be a master stroke at the present juncture, and might rally the whole body of Conservative and Liberal opinion to the side of the Government.

How Grit Rouges Run the Machine.

The death of the Hon. Raymond Prefontaine, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, has led the Senate and Commons supporters of the Government to meet in caucus, to discuss the political situation, and direct the Premier what he should do under the circumstances, and who should be the successor to the late Minister. Not satisfied with this modest proposition, these worthies suggest a reorganization of the Cabinet, and who shall be the incoming Ministers.

No one, who has paid any attention to the manner in which such men as Senator Choquette and Commoner Talbot, have dictated the Laurier policy in the past, will be surprised at this new and extraordinary movement of the Quebec Senators and Commoners; cheek and impudence is characteristic of their political bearing and relations to the Government.

The deliberation of this Rouge-Grit caucus resulted in the selection of Hon Mr. Brodeur, now Minister of Inland Revenue, to fill the position of Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and Mr. Lemieux, now Solicitor-General, to step into the shoes of Mr. Brodeur as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and Mr. Demers, M.P. for St. Johns and Iberville, to be appointed Solicitor-General.

Then a little finesse is indulged in. It is known that British Columbia is claiming representation in the Cabinet. The fact that Senator Templeman now sits in the Cabinet without portfolio and consequently controls no patronage does not satisfy either Mr. Templeman or British Columbia, hence it is suggested that a Ministry of Mines be established and that the place be given to Mr. Templeman, of British Columbia, who is now disgruntled. As for the latter proposition it is without any justification on public grounds. In by far the greater part of Canada the Dominion Government has nothing to do with the mining industry, and there is really no more call for the suggested position than there would be for a Federal ministry of education to look after schools in the Yukon. Party and not public reasons are plainly behind the suggestion of the caucus, which seems to have been a bumptious gathering.

The rage for position and patronage is the governing idea that prevails among Ministerial supporters. It will be interesting to watch events.

TIMELY TOPICS.

The winter's passing smoothly, but If you'll believe me, I'm Just longing for the come-back of
The good old summer time.

• • •

The schools opened again to-day. The youngsters are learning one of the stern realities of life—everything must have an ending.

• • •

It's a pity the Mayor, with his Santa Claus rig on, didn't butt in at the masquerade ball last night. He'd have captured first prize, sure.

• • •

By having no election last Monday, and thus allowing the bars to remain open, Belleville advertised herself all over Canada. We seem to be always doing something, nowadays, to keep us in the limelight.

• • •

In Toronto, out of a Council of 21, sixteen are Conservatives. In Hamilton the figures stand the same way. Nearly every place in Ontario, with the exception of Kingston, there is a Conservative majority. It would appear that the people of this province got so sick of the Grit rule which lasted for 32 years that they lose no opportunity, nowadays, of smashing everything that has the least suspicion of Grit in it.

• • •

By the way, now, about those New Year's resolutions of yours. We hope you included among them a determination to give a dollar or two to the Hospital.

• • •

A beautiful original Christmas poem has just been received. It is rather late in the day, but will do splendidly for next Christmas.

• • •

The Help the Hospital fund is growing splendidly, but if everybody who could afford it gave a dollar or two, the ladies of the W.C.A. would soon have all the money they need. Come now, ladies and gentlemen, subscribe to this worthy fund. You'll be surprised to see how nice your name looks in the paper.

• • •

Rumor says there may be a shake-up in the chairmanships when the City Council meets for organization next Monday. Not a bad idea, by any means. It might work quite as well as new blood in the Council as a whole.

• • •

A musical and intellectual feast is promised all who attend the concert in St. Michael's Church to-morrow evening. Many of the city's leading vocalists will sing, and Rev. Father Twomey will tell the experiences of "A Day in Rome."

• • •

Another week of the Globe's "non-partisan" campaignings and Mr. Coatsworth would have had about 10,000 majority in Toronto. In the words of the poet, the people of Toronto are "on to" the Globe with both feet.

• • •

The kind we want. The London Globe, referring to Rothschild's offer to send the Tottenham families to Canada, says: "They are not wastrels or loafers, but some of the very best bone and sinew of the country, and although we do not grudge our best to Canada, we cannot help feeling a certain reluctance in sending them out of England at all." This would be good reasoning, if those who are to be sent to Canada could be made comfortable where they are. Send that class of people to Canada and a plentiful future is in store for them.

• • •

The result of the entry into Edmonton by the Canadian Northern Railway, has, says a Winnipeg telegram of late date, resulted in a reduction of three cents, which has been made on the freight rate for grain, flour, oatmeal and mill stuffs, shipped from Edmonton to Port Arthur. The old rate was 28 cents a hundredweight, and on the new basis it will be 25 cents, making the freight on a bushel of wheat from Edmonton to Port Arthur, 15 cents. The reduced rate will make a better price for the farmer in grain and the coarser grades of flour. When it is remembered that the output of the North-west this year exceeded 80,000,000 bushels, it will be readily understood what a reduction of three cents per hundredweight means.

• • •

The revelations made in New York as to the manner in which certain insurance companies have conducted their business, has brought to light the true character of a certain class of United States legislators. It would appear that when the legislator grafter wanted to bleed the companies, he would cause to be introduced into the House bills containing extraordinary provisions, apparently for the purpose of being bought off by the companies which would be affected, were they to become law. Here is a specimen of proposed legislation: "A 10 per cent. tax on their income, some to relieve a sick man from paying the premiums on his policy, which the company was at the same time forbidden to forfeit, and some to make canvassing an offence at law." The probabilities are, says a contemporary, "Knowing the kind of men who fathered such bills, it was in a way natural for the company directors to seek to buy them off. As recent events have shown, however, it would have been cheaper to have publicly explained the character and effect of the bills and defied the grafters. The course taken only encouraged the legislative blackmailer."

• • •

Dr. Farley, of this city, objects to a paragraph which appeared in this column concerning Dr. Osler, the alleged facts in which were gathered from a western Ontario paper. Dr. Farley, who was a class-mate of Dr. Osler's, says the latter, though for many years a resident of Uncle Sam's domains, has ever remained a loyal Britisher, so much so that, on one occasion, he made quite a long journey in order to have one of his children christened on British soil. Dr. Farley does not believe that Dr. Osler intends to resign the regius professorship of medicine at Oxford, and is pained at the injustice which he thinks has been done his old friend.

Rumor says that the local Philharmonic society is getting along bravely with its rehearsals, and the members will more than do themselves proud when presentation night comes.

• • •

One of the pleasantest sights of the glad new year would be a couple of rporation employes sprinkling and on the slippery granolithic walks. A fall on one of them gives even a middleweight an awful jar.

• • •

The Kingston Whig likes its little joke. At the mayoralty election, held on Monday, John M. Mowat beat Francis King, and the Whig calls the election a game in which a Jack beats a King. Joking of that kind is always dangerous. The Jack in a pack of cards is sometimes called by another name.

• • •

Ald. Dan Gallery, of Montreal, late Liberal member for St. Ann's division in that city, has been unseated and disqualified as the result of an election trial, in which he was charged with corrupt and illegal practices. The peculiar thing in this trial is that the petitioner against Mr. Gallery was not a Conservative, but another Liberal, Dr. Guerin, his object being to "get even" with Dan for an alleged ill turn done to the Doctor in the previous provincial elections. The Quebec Grits are a happy family.

That temfool letter of Admiral Rojestvensky's must have been inspired by the Russian autocracy, with the object of diverting the minds of the Russian people from the awful state of affairs in the land of the Czar.

If we may not have to make artificial ice next summer.

If there is any truth in the story that a certain West side Sunday school superintendent is a hypnotist?

If York Loan sufferers in this city are going to subscribe to a fund to present President Phillips with a gold-headed cane.

If it isn't about time the Belleville curling club was playing a match for a barrel of oatmeal? Hoot, mon!

Holds an Important Position

The lady spoken of in the following despatch from Toronto is a sister of Ald. D. V. Sinclair of this city:

Toronto, Jan. 3.—Miss Alice B. Sinclair, who graduated in nursing from the Toronto General Hospital a few years ago, succeeds Miss N. McKellar as Superintendent of the Burnside maternity branch of the Toronto General Hospital, Miss McKellar, who has just resigned, has filled the position for seventeen years, and the board of trustees have testified their appreciation of her services in an appropriate address. Miss Sinclair recently took a course in the Sloane Maternity Hospital, New York.

Collision at Tweed

On Monday evening a west-bound C.P.R. passenger train was run into by an east-bound freight while standing on a siding at Tweed. The accident was due to the engineer of the freight train not applying the air brake in sufficient time when approaching the other train, which was waiting at the east end of the yard. Though the force of the collision was sufficient to create serious alarm for a moment, no passengers suffered any injury. Five freight cars, however, were seriously damaged and the main truck was obstructed for ten hours, but this involved no delay in the service, as the trains were able to pass through on a siding.

Presentation Last Night

Mr. Chadwick, the popular General Secretary of the Y.M.C.A., was last evening presented with a handsome gold locket by the members of the business men's gymnasium class. The presentation was made by Mr. Tousaw, the President of the Y.M.C.A., on the floor of the gymnasium, before the class lined up. Mr. Chadwick was entirely taken by surprise, and in a few words expressed his thanks for, and appreciation of, the gift. After three rousing cheers for the Secretary, the class proceeded with their exercise.

James v Rathbun Co.—Judgment (R.) in action tried, without a jury, at Belleville. Action to recover damages for loss sustained by plaintiff owing to defendants having blown up and destroyed the apron and side of his dam across the River Scoutamatta, in the County of Hastings, and part of the main dam itself, and for damages for injuries to the apron and slide, alleged to have been caused by defendants forcibly, carelessly and negligently using the dam and slide, and bridge across the slide, in bringing down their drive of logs, posts, bolts and timber. Held, following Farquharson v. Imperial Oil Co., 30 S.C.R. 188 that the right of defendants to float their logs and timber down the stream across which plaintiff's dam was erected was paramount to that of plaintiff, and plaintiff's dam not being provided with a convenient opening for the passage of saw logs, timber, rafts and crafts, that defendants were in law justified in what they did to remove the obstruction. Caldwell v. McLaren, 9 App. Cas. 392, referred to. Ward v. Township of Granville, 32 S.C.R. 510, distinguished. Action dismissed without costs. Counterclaim dismissed without costs. E. F. B. Johnston, K.C., and S. Masson (Belleville) for plaintiff. G. F. Shepley, K.C., and G. E. Deroche (Deseronto) for defendants.

WHISKY TRADE TRICKS.

How Liquor Fifteen Years Old is Made in Fifteen Minutes.

Whisky fifteen years old is made oftentimes in fifteen minutes, as was discovered by Professor Wiley of the United States agricultural department when he was selecting liquors for the Paris exposition, and when we stop to consider how quickly the process is accomplished and how many times the price is doubled and trebled upon what would otherwise be very cheap wine the only surprise is that there is any new wine to be had in the market at all.

Credit is due to a small black spider which haunts tenement rafters and abandoned places for the aging process. The working spiders are not picked up by chance. They are saved from day to day and are fed with care and system, and the cobweb workers have discovered when the supply of freshly killed flies gives out spiders will thrive on a gelatinous mixture of meat jelly thickened with a little sugar. Choosing a sufficiently aged label is the first step in producing old wine. So the labels are printed on a small hand press kept especially for the purpose, and the aging establishment has a collection of a dozen blocks to simulate a dozen varieties, some of them very clever forgeries of the well known brands. Next they are printed in cheap ink that will soon fade. But this is not trusted alone, as a bottle of 1756 wine may have to go to the table within twenty-four hours after it has been draped in cobwebs. The labels are all dipped in tobacco water and hung over a stove to dry.

The mellowing effect of the process is wonderful, considering its simplicity. The labels are pasted on the bottles, then dipped in a bucket of water and set down to drain, and the finishing touches are in the shape of dusting them over with sawdust. As a result the bottle catches and holds a light film, such as would be acquired by years of cellar life. And now the final act is performed by the spiders. The bottles are at last placed in a narrow basket and two or three energetic spiders put in with them. The dusty surface of the bottles offers an excellent beginning for the weavers. In a few hours the bottle looks 200 years old, with its cobweb draperies. It developed during Professor Wiley's researches that nine-tenths of the whisky sold over our bars had never seen a distillery, but is what is known to the trade as synthetic whisky—that is to say, a sufficient quantity of water, spirits, coloring matter and flavoring to give the natural appearance of age needs only the process named to deceive the public. The alcohol is furnished by high proof spirits known as "high wine."

BILLY BOY, MATCHMAKER

By MARTHA M'CULLOCH-WILLIAMS

Copyright, 1905, by I. D. Marshall

"Pretty! It is profane to call her merely pretty," Wheaton said, staring covertly at Helen Marr. "She is well named," he went on. "Can't you fancy her's the "Face that launched a thousand ships

And burned the topless towers of Ilium?"

"No," Norris answered with a laughing shake of the head. "Remember, I'm neither artist nor painter, nor even Bohemian—merely a village landlord, whose chief concern is to keep terms with his tenants, and used to seeing pretty girls, even very pretty girls, every day in the week."

"If you call her pretty, I repeat your case is hopeless," Wheaton persisted. This time he spoke very low, but not so low as to escape Helen's ear. She was coming toward them on her dappled pony, her hat hanging at the back of her head and a sheaf of wild roses in the hollow of her arm. The pink of the roses was deepening in her cheeks, and she would have ridden past with the merest inclination of the head but that Billy Boy, spoiled beast, was of another mind. He whinnied joyously to Norris, and when he got abreast of that gentleman planted his four legs, obstinately refusing to budge, his whinny changing to a plaintive whicker of protest.

"I see Billy Boy is constant—not proud and haughty like his mistress. He does not ignore his friends if he does happen to find them in bad company," Norris said, stepping to the pony's head and letting him rummage a sugar lump out of his pocket.

Norris tried to speak with his usual bantering friendliness, but not very successfully. He wished, indeed, Billy Boy had been less his constant friend, since he did not want to present Wheaton to Billy Boy's mistress. However, there was no help for it—it served him right for spoiling the creature so. But there were mitigating circumstances to the spoiling.

The Marr paddock adjoined his own, and while holding converse with Billy Boy across the fence of it, giving him bread, sugar or sweet apples, he needed no excuse for likewise holding converse with Miss Helen. She was shy of him when they met socially, for, though Norris would have scrupled to admit it, he was the catch of the village, much courted by the eager and rather let alone by the self respecting. Beyond their pride and their pedigree the Marrs had little. Helen's chief diversion, indeed, was the rides she took about the red roads and the shady lanes which led from the village into the deep country.

Wheaton was not a bad sort, but he was a city man and, Norris more than suspected, a trifler, making love to every very pretty or very piquant face he encountered. He was, moreover, disgustingly good to look at. Thus Norris contrasted mentally Wheaton's supple elegance with his own burly strength. Wheaton played at being an artist, chiefly by way of diversion. He had just enough money to keep himself in luxurious idleness and no will whatever to increase the sum of it or divide the spending. Norris knew all that; therefore he raged inly, mainly at himself, while Wheaton talked to Helen, the while coaxing Billy Boy to stand obstinately still by giving him tufts of tender roadside grass. It was playfully done, so playfully Helen did not in the least see through it.

She got over her shyness very quickly and talked brightly to Wheaton, giving him now and again dazzling smiles. It took her all aback to have Norris at the end of fifteen minutes jerk Billy Boy's bridle sharply and send him cantering homeward with a sharp slap on the rump.

As the pony cantered Helen wondered what she had done to displease Norris. He had looked gloomier and older than she ever had seen him and had growled in answer to the goodby she had thrown to him over her shoulder.

Before the week end she had ceased to think of Norris, of Billy Boy, of anything, indeed, save and except Wheaton. They had ridden through the long summer mornings together and spent the silver moonlit evenings strolling about the village, never getting beyond hail or the range of friendly household lights. Helen went bareheaded; Wheaton insisted upon it. He insisted, too, that he must paint her—not in the heat of the summer, but when he came back in the fall. He was coming, of course. He had not dreamed that his own country held such beauties as the region roundabout had disclosed. Possibly he would settle down there and make himself famous by perpetuating the charm of its grassed reaches, its towering hills, the silver of its brooks and the soft, illimitable purples brooding above its big fields.

Helen listened as one enchanted. She was just nineteen, unworldly as a new fledged dove and full of romance and the worship of romance. Wheaton seemed to her a creature apart, a denizen of another world, one in which she herself belonged of right, although she would no doubt be the simplest, the humblest, there. His tales of the city, of the studios, the cafes, the sparkle and foam of existence, fascinated her as nothing else had ever done, not even the old Chronicles, which heretofore had served her instead of fairy tales.

Wheaton really talked well, but then Helen's listening was in itself inspiration. Add that he was as much in love as his temperament admitted, and it is easy to understand how he seemed to her inspired. He did not look forward or backward—at anything except the day and the pleasure of it. Helen had charmed her as that other Helen no doubt charmed Paris. What wonder that he reveled in the charming without a thought of how it might end!

He did not even see what it all meant to Norris, good old Norris, who was too staid and phlegmatic ever to know the real meaning of life. He loved to make Helen talk of him. By her stories Norris had been to her a sort of combined knight errant and fairy godfather. There was no hint of romance in them, for all she had colored so beautifully and flung up her head in telling of the traps and pitfalls the village had set for him. It was plain she knew Norris to be a prize of the chase matrimonial. Perhaps that was why Wheaton felt moved to ask one day as they sat under the big apple tree at the edge of the paddock:

"Little Helen, why don't you save Norris from his pursuers? You could do it, you know—by taking him yourself."

"Thank you. That's just what I've been wanting to ask this last two years," Norris said, vaulting over the fence, in whose ambush he had come upon them unseen. "Will you take me, Helen?" he went on, heedless of Wheaton's presence. Helen gave a little cry and hid her face in her hands.

She had risen. Wheaton also stood up. Both men towered above her, looking defiantly into each other's eyes.

"Will you take me, little girl?" Norris repeated, catching her hand and laying it against his cheek. He felt it tremble delicately before Helen snatched it away. She looked up at him almost piteously, then turned to Wheaton.

Wheaton's face was a battlefield. All at once he was discovering that he did not know all of himself. Under the dilettante, the man of leisure, there was another, somewhat primal, self, with somewhat also of primal force. And this fellow was wild to spring at Norris' throat, to rend and strangle him, and, having rent him, bear away the prize. Yet with the other half of him Wheaton knew that if he had but heard of rather than heard Norris' lovemaking he would have smiled approval of it as a good ending to something otherwise tangled.

This other man saw, too—and was shamed bitterly by the sight—the love light playing in Helen's innocent eyes. She was not for him. He had better break her heart at once than at piecemeal. That would be the end should he be mad enough to marry her. He would tire of her—of any woman. But, oh, the twinge at thought of her another man's wife! He shut his teeth on it and took both her hands—slim hands, hanging helplessly at her sides. He wanted to clasp and kiss them and lay them against his breast, but a certain fiber akin to manliness made him instead hold them firmly as one might hold those of a frightened child while he said huskily:

"The play is done, Helen. I'm going away, straight abroad, never to come back. Won't you let me think of you as—happy Helen Norris?"

"Why think of me at all?" Helen began proudly.

Billy Boy interrupted her—Billy Boy, who felt he must be in everything. He came between her and Wheaton and gently crowded her toward his favorite Norris, then, whirling about, kicked Wheaton heels over head.

Thus a tense moment became filled with comedy. Thus also Helen found out that laughter is balm for lovesickness. Who could be sentimental over a lover sent sprawling to grass? Not Helen, certainly.

By this token she married Norris before the new year came.

The God of Fortune.

The Chinese deity of fortune is always represented as a jolly god, and the rich votive offerings which cover his altars are speaking testimonials to his popularity. On the 2d of the second month a special festival is held in his honor, on which occasion his temples are crowded with worshipers, who manifest a devoutness which is strangely wanting in the services offered to the less material deities.

Feasts of fat things are greedily presented to secure his favor, and, not content with leaving the lots on the knees of the god, his practical minded worshipers seek to lift the veil which conceals his counsels from mankind. For this purpose they adopt a curious device.

In some open space or market square a large wooden cannon loaded with a small charge of powder and a circular rattan wad is fired perpendicularly into the air. As the wad descends the surrounding crowd struggle to catch it, in the belief that he who is successful will enjoy the blessings of peace and plenty during the ensuing year.

True Art.

John Ruskin said that in matters of criticism one should never come to particulars, for authors are apt to come down upon you with "authorities," there being an authority for almost every absurdity that can be committed, either in literary or practical matters. In a letter to a college friend Ruskin wrote: "The object in all art is not to inform, but to suggest; not to add to the knowledge, but to kindle the imagination. He is the best poet who can by the fewest words touch the greatest number of secret chords of thought in his reader's own mind and set them to work in their own way. To put plain text into rhyme and meter is easy; not so to write a passage which every time it is remembered shall suggest a new train of thought, a new subject of delightful dream. It is this mystic secrecy of beauty which is the seal of the highest art, which only opens itself to close observation and long study."

SELECTIONS

THE WALKING FEVER.

One Phase of "Yellow Jack" That Is Particularly Dangerous.

"In the south they have lately had yellow fever," said a lady who is an exile from Mobile because of the sickness, "but one of the sources of the disease is of a peculiar character. It is distributed by persons who have what is called the 'walking fever.' They go about their business or affairs while the fever is latent in them, but still of a malignant and contagious character. A victim in whom the disease is established, and who is put to bed, by reason of coming in contact with but few persons rarely becomes a focal point of its spread, but the victim who still moves about distributes the malignant taint to many. The curious thing about these sufferers is that they keep on going about till they simply fall down and quickly die. They have a headache and stiff joints, but their temperature is little above normal, and they attribute their sickness to other than the serious causes which give rise to it.

"In a previous invasion of yellow fever in the south, I remained until too late to leave my home. The quarantine was imposed, and its terms were executed with cruel fidelity. A gentleman living in my street, a merchant, gave his whole attention and time to health work. Our street is on high ground and is kept in the best possible sanitary condition. The gentleman came home daily and one evening fell fainting in the street. That night he died. Not a house in the row, some thirty of them, was spared by the dread visitant. We were able to trace from him the progress of the malady that twice decimated the residents of the street within twelve days.

"A woman friend of mine in New Orleans had the walking fever during the current outbreak of the disease. She communicated it to her family, and now all of them, eight in number, are dead."—New York Herald.

The Practicability of Airships.

The mists of the future still hide the airship that will be used as a conveyance, making regular trips, carrying people to and fro above the earth on business and pleasure, but the coming of the practical ship is inevitable. I will not venture to say how soon it will arrive, but I think that many who are now alive will move over the housetops in airships, when most houses will have entrances on their roofs. I have no faith in the idea that flying machines may be devised for single individuals or that the correct principle may be found by studying and copying the flight of birds. When such plans are suggested I am reminded of the ideas and efforts of inventors who a century ago tried to make locomotives with four legs to operate like horses. The thought of these mechanical experts was that, since the horse moved more rapidly across the land than almost anything else with which they were familiar, it followed that any mechanism that was to attain a greater speed would have to be constructed and operated in a similar way.—Success.

Heat and Cold.

An army surgeon who was stationed for some time in the Philippines has contributed to the New York Medical Record some of his conclusions from observation of epidemics of typhoid fever in those islands. One of the most surprising of his statements is that the greatest mortality as a result of the disease occurs during the first quarter of the year because the power of resistance of the natives is at the lowest ebb "at the close of the cold season." If we are surprised at the suggestion that there is a cold season in the Philippines our astonishment is increased by the further remark that "to an American it seems absurd that people should suffer and even perish from cold in a temperature seldom under 70 degrees, but such is the case." Cold and heat are relative terms, as the American may learn also in London, where the newspapers are printed with "scare heads" and long articles on the intolerable heat when the thermometer gets up to 80.

Blushing Made Dangerous.

Even in the backwoods district the use of belladonna to increase the brilliancy of the eyes is dying out, but the new "blush producer" from London bids fair to have a more serious effect than the herb product. The "blush producer" consists of nitrate of amyl "pearl," a capsule containing a minute portion of the drug. This is crushed in the handkerchief and inhaled, with the result that the acceleration of the heart action suffuses the face with a rosy blush. The danger lies in the fact that nitrate of amyl is a powerful heart stimulant, which has long been used in capsule form by patients suffering from cardiac affections. It is a yellow colored fluid, with a marked odor of bananas, and even in the slight doses required to send a flush to the cheek it will work hurt to the most vital organ of the body.

Uncle Sam's Lepers.

Several years ago the government made a count of the lepers in the United States (mainland) and found 278. About twenty cases have since developed. These lepers are scattered through twenty-one states and territories, but the states of Louisiana, California, Florida, Minnesota and North Dakota have all but forty-eight of them. In Louisiana there are 135 cases. California and Florida have each twenty-four cases. In Minnesota there are twenty and in North Dakota sixteen.

Sunny Spots.

There is one spot in Switzerland, Lugano, which has an average of daily sunshine for the year of 6.1 hours, higher than Padua, 5.6 hours, and nearly as high as Rome, 6.7 hours. Basel has only 4.7 hours. Denmark has the same daily amount of sunshine as England, 3.8 hours, while Germany has from 4.2 to 4.8 hours. The sunniest spot in Germany is Jena.

Coffee Test.

If you suspect your coffee is adulterated throw a handful of the beans in cold water. The real coffee beans will sink, while the spurious ones will float or remain suspended for some time.

Hungarian Asphalt.

Asphalt is found in large quantities in various parts of Hungary.

The First Newspapers.

The first newspapers, the Venetian gazettes, were for many years circulated only in manuscript because the government would not allow their publication in print. Becoming scurrilous, they were prohibited in every part of Italy by a special bull issued by Gregory XIII.

Britain's Lack of Woods.

With the exception of Portugal, Great Britain has the lowest percentage area of woodland of any country in Europe.

Favorite Trees of Birds.

Birds of different kinds have their favorite trees. Blackbirds, rooks and jays frequent oak trees, the ash shelters wood pigeons and thrushes, the hawthorn all kinds of finches, while the woodpecker's favorite is the beech.

Shoes.

Shoes were not made "rights and lefts" earlier than 1472.

The Korean Flag.

The Korean flag is white and bears in the center a sort of ball, one half blue and the other red, typifying the two elements of creation, the male and the female. In the corners are strange and complicated blue characters invented by a Chinese emperor a few thousand years ago.

Christmas In Scandinavia.

In Scandinavia Christmas is celebrated in its literal sense of "peace on earth, good will toward men." The courts are closed, quarrels are adjusted and old feuds forgotten. It is the home of the famous Yule log.

Chamois Leather.

To wash chamois leather make a lather of soap and warm water and in this squeeze the leather till the dirt is removed. Use more than one lot of suds if necessary, finally rinse in soapy—not clear—water, squeeze and hang out to dry. If the leather be much soiled add a little ammonia to the soap suds.

Theater Ticket Tax.

A 10 per cent tax on theater tickets in France yields about $10,000,000 a year. The money is devoted to the maintenance of the poor.

The Magnetic Needle.

The needle points to the north pole wherever the compass may be. North of the line on which the compass needle balances perfectly—the line is called the magnetic equator—the needle dips to the north. South of that line the southern end of the needle dips, but the ends of the needle are not reversed.

An Honored Baker.

Croesus erected a statue of gold to his baker in memory of his talents.

Tea In Japan.

Tea at a halfpenny a pound is used by the poorer classes in Japan. This is the cheapest kind of "bancha" and consists of the trimmings of the tea bushes when they are clipped with the shears after the first crop.

Bronze.

Bronze, such as used for tea urns, etc., may be cleaned by washing first with soap and water, then, after drying thoroughly, apply furniture cream and polish with a soft duster. This method is not recommended for works of art, but for bronze articles of household use it answers perfectly, making them look bright and new.

The Largest Searchlight.

The largest searchlight in the world is that on top of Pike's peak, Colorado, and flashes over 280 miles of the Rocky mountains.

Ocean Cables.

Atlantic cables are always laid from west to east because the prevailing winds in the summer months on the Atlantic are from the west and ships make much better weather going eastward.

Japanese Matches.

Sixty per cent of the matches made in Japan are sold in China.

Frog Barometer.

The green tree frog is an excellent barometer. Put him in a jar with an inch or two of water at the bottom and a little ladder running up to the top. If the weather is to be fine he will ascend; if bad he will go down.

Combinations In Dominos.

The mathematical fiend has been at it again, and now makes to a shuddering world the announcement that "two persons playing dominos ten hours a day and making four moves a minute could continue 118,000 years without exhausting all the combinations of the game, the total of which is 248,528,211,840."

Highland Children.

The healthiest children in the world dwell in the Scottish highlands. They seldom wear shoes before they are twelve years of age.

HOW TO GET CONSUMPTION.

Ninety per cent. of the "lungers" contract consumption by allowing power of resistance to fall so low that a favorable condition for the development of the bacilli is provided. In a healthy system consumption can't take root. But where there is weakness and debility, there you find tuberculosis. For developing strength and building up the weak, nothing equals Ferrozone. It makes the blood nutritious and the nerves enduring. The way it converts food into nutriment, the appetite it gives is surprising. Just what the man verging on consumption needs—that's Ferrozone. If tired and weak don't put off. Fifty cents buys a box of fifty tablets—at all dealers.

TIMELY TOPICS.

THE GLAD NEW YEAR.

The glad new year! What secrets lie
With its folded, untried days!
We long to know them, you and I;
We long to try the untrod ways;
And yet the leaves of memory turn,
Too many a page we linger o'er;
And still our ghostly lights we burn,
Above the hopes dead evermore.

"Behold, I make you all things new,"
New grace and strength for each day's need;
New promises, we know them true;
New wants before the throne to plead;
New hopes and joys; new trust and love;
New trials of our faith; ah, yet,
Temptations new our hearts to prove—
To be our bane or happiness.

O gracious God! this prayer we make—
We shrink from voicing out our fear—
Yet, lest our burdened hearts should break,
Grant us our need this coming year;
Take—take—we yield up all to thee,
But give—thyself with what is best;
And may our every moment be,
Within thine arms—eternal rest.

It is stated that the caves are exceedingly grand, there being nothing just like them in the whole world.

One thing stands out clear amid all the lurid clashing in Russia, that the autocracy has shown no real disposition to yield even under the most violent agitation; and when the autocracy has yielded in form and made promises, it has given no substantial guarantee that the promises will be carried out. A recent educational edict in England abolishes slates in schools, for sanitary reasons, but an influential protest has gone up, led by Sir J. Puleston, arguing that there was medical evidence to show that there was less danger of infection through using slates than through using the cheap paper and pencil introduced in their place; that on the point of economy the advantage was much in favor of slates; and that a considerable industry would suffer greatly if the policy was carried out. The decision will rest with Mr. Augustine Birrell, Liberal successor to Lord Londonderry.

BANK TELLER FLITS

Union Bank Man Gets Off With at Least $1,100 Cash.

J. Fletcher Hutchinson of Didsbury, Alberta, Is the Culprit—Crime Discovered Within Three Hours After Fugitive Had Left the Bank—Gambling Works His Ruin—Mounted Police Take Up the Trail.

Edmonton, Sask., Jan. 3.—J. Fletcher Hutchinson of Didsbury, Alta., teller of the Union Bank, fled Saturday, carrying with him a package containing one thousand dollars.

He was traced to Calgary, where the police think he is hiding. The theft was discovered within three hours after the fugitive left the bank, when the manager checked up the cash.

It was believed that he was preparing to take a larger sum and secure the advantage of the three days' holiday in getting out of the country.

Hutchinson was until three weeks ago occupying a similar position in the Edmonton branch. Enquiry at the local branch from J. J. Anderson, local manager, elicited the information that the defaulter, while in this city, bore an exemplary character. The manager had received a communication from Didsbury branch notifying him of the disappearance of the clerk with $800.

Hutchinson was well-known and very popular in the city in social and hockey circles.

The street accounts of the defalcation places the sum at $1,200 from the Didsbury branch, and $1,100 from the Edmonton bank.

Those who knew him well believe that the young clerk took to gambling, and finding himself hard pressed awaited his opportunity to abscond with sufficient funds to meet his debts and take him to a place of safety.

The N. W. M. P. have been notified, and an active search is being prosecuted for the delinquent, whose home is Carberry, Manitoba.

CHAMBERLAIN ON COLONIES.

Says Time Has Gone By When They Can Be Treated Indifferently.

London, Jan. 3.—(C. A. P.)—In opening his own campaign last night at Birmingham, Jos. Chamberlain claimed the late Government had done something to remove the prejudice and misunderstanding with the Colonies, who formerly had cause for complain.

"The time is gone when we can treat them with indifference, when we can speak to them as though they were subject to our dictation. They are self-governing nations and our equals in everything except population and wealth.

"And very quickly you will find that they equal, perhaps surpass us, in these respects. If you do not court their favors, there are plenty of others who would only be too glad to receive them."

With reference to home rule he told his constituents that were it adopted "you will have in Ireland a sort of jumping off place for every enemy of the country who desires to take the jump."

Balfour's Address Issued.

London, Jan. 3.—Arthur J. Balfour, the former Premier, issued his election address last night. In it he says, "I hold that the time has arrived to adapt England's fiscal policy to the changing conditions of a changing world. Should you return the Unionist party to power it is to the reform of the fiscal system that its attention ought first be directed."

Free Trade Within the Empire.

London, Jan. 3.—(C. A. P.)—Right Hon. Alfred Lyttelton, former Secretary for the Colonies, in his address, says it has become more plain that the great self-governing Colonies are strongly in favor of a preference to and from the motherland, and adds, "I strongly advocate an investigation of the subject at a conference, and that those who take part shall approach the task with a sincere resolve to advance free trade within the Empire."

Ald. Gallery Down and Out.

Montreal, Jan. 3.—Ald. Dan Gallery is no longer M. P. for St. Anne's division. He was unseated yesterday by Judges Davidson and Robidoux for illegal practices, and also disqualified by the same tribunal. Gallery lost his seat because of money paid to Carters and Pidnand, his political agents, and because of money paid by himself. In fact, the court held that out of his own mouth the Liberal M. P. was condemned.

Leg Broken While Voting.

Kingston, Jan. 3.—James Fisher of Sudbury sustained a fracture of the thigh bone of his leg on Monday during a contest at the polling sub-division there. Dr. Elliott, Seely's Bay, reduced the fracture.

Kingston Bye-Election.

Kingston, Jan. 3.—It is generally understood that the Kingston bye-election will be held on Monday, Jan. 29.

The Lust of Hate

BY GUY BOOTHBY

Author of "A Beautiful White Devil," "A Bid For Fortune," "The Marriage of Esther," "Dr. Nikola," Etc., Etc.

towered the famous mountain from which the Bay derives its name, its top shrouded in its cloth. At its foot reposed the town with which my destiny seemed so vitally connected, and which I was approaching with so much trepidation. As I stood on the promenade deck and watched the land open out before me, my sensations would have formed a good problem for a student of character. With a perception rendered abnormally acute by my fear, I could discern the boat of the port authorities putting off to us long before I should, at any other time, have been able to see it. It had yet to be discovered whether or not it contained a police official in search of me. As I watched her dipping her nose into the seas, and then tossing the spray off from either bow, in her haste to get to us, she seemed to me to be like a bloodhound on my track. The closer she came the more violently my heart began to beat, until it was as much as I could do to breathe. If only I could be certain that she was conveying an officer to arrest me, I felt I might find pluck enough to drop overboard and so end the pursuit for good and all. But I did not know, and the doubt upon the point decided me to remain where I was and brave the upshot.

As I watched her, I heard a footstep upon the deck behind me. I turned my head to find that it was Miss Maybourne. She came up beside me, and having glanced ashore at the city nestling at the foot of the great mountain, and then at the launch coming out to meet us, turned to address me.

"Mr. Wrexford," she began, "I am going to ask you to do me a great favor, and I want you to promise me to grant it before I tell you what it is."

"I'm afraid I can hardly do that," I answered. "But if you will tell me what it is, I will promise to do it for you if it is in any way possible."

"It is this," she said: "I want you, in the event of my father not meeting me, to take me home. Oh don't say no, Mr. Wrexford, I want you so much to do it. Surely you will not deny me the last request I make to you?"

She looked so pleadingly into my face that, as usual, it required all my courage not to give way to her. But the risk was too great for me even to contemplate such a thing for a moment. My rescue of the daughter of Cornelius Maybourne, and my presence in Cape Town, would soon leak out, and then it would be only a matter of hours before I should be arrested. Whatever my own inclinations may have been, I felt there was nothing for it but for me to refuse.

"I am not my own master in this matter," I replied, with a bitterness which must have shown her how much in earnest I was. "It is impossible that I can remain so long in the place. There are the most vital reasons in the world against it. I can only ask you to believe that."

I saw large tears rise in her eyes, though she turned hurriedly away in the hope that I should not see them. To see her weep, however, was more than I could bear, and under the influence of her trouble my resolutions began to give way. After all, if I was destined to be arrested, I might just as well be taken at Mr. Maybourne's house as elsewhere—perhaps better. Besides, it was more than likely, in the event of no warrant having been issued, Mr. Maybourne, whose influence, I had been told, was enormous in the colony, might prove just the very friend of all others I wanted. At any rate, if I were not taken before the time came for going ashore, I would do as she wished. I told her this, and she immediately thanked me and went down below again.

Just as I announced my decision the launch came alongside, and a moment later her passengers were ascending the accommodation ladder, which had been lowered to receive them. They were three in number, and included—so I was told by a gentleman who stood beside me—the harbor master, the officer of health, and another individual, about whose identity my informant was not quite assured. I looked at the last-named with no little apprehension; my nervousness endowed him with all the attributes of a police official, and my mind's eye could almost discover the manacles reposing in his coat pocket. I trust I may never pass through such another agonizing few minutes as I experienced then. I saw the party step on to the spar deck, where they shook hands with the purser and chief officer, and watched them as they ascended to the promenade deck and made their way towards the bridge. Here they were received by the skipper. I leaned against the rails, sick with fear and trembling in every limb, expecting every moment to feel a heavy hand upon my shoulder, and to hear a stern voice saying in my ear—"Gilbert Pennethorne, I arrest you on a charge of murder."

But minute after minute went by, and still not one came to speak the fatal words. The ship, which had been brought to a standstill to pick up the boat, had now got under weigh again, and we were approaching close again, and we were approaching closer and closer to the docks. In less than half an hour I should know my fate.

As soon as we were safely installed in dock, and everyone was looking after his or her luggage, saying "good-bye" and preparing to go ashore, I began to look about me for Miss Maybourne. Having found her we went to the chart-room together to bid the Captain "good-bye," and to thank him for the hospitality and kindness he had shown us. The doctor had next to be discovered, and when he had been assured of our gratitude, we made enquiries for Mr. Maybourne. It soon became evident that he was not on board, so, taking his daughter under my protection, we said our final farewells and went down the gangway. For the first time in my life I set foot on South African soil.

The Custom House once passed, and the authorities convinced that we had nothing to declare, I hailed a cab and invited Miss Maybourne to instruct the driver in which direction he was to proceed. Half an hour later we had left the city behind us, and were driving through the suburbs in the direction of Mr. Maybourne's residence. After following a pretty road for something like a mile, on either side of which I noticed a number of stately residences, we found ourselves confronted with a pair of large iron gates, behind which was a neat lodge. But for the difference in the vegetation, it might very well have been the entrance to an English park. Through the trees ahead I could distinguish, as we rolled along the well-kept drive, the chimneys of a noble residence; but I was quite unprepared for the picture which burst upon my view when we turned a corner and had the whole house before us. Unlike most South African dwellings, it was a building of three stories, surmounted by a tower. Broad verandahs ran round each floor, and the importance of the building was enhanced by the fact that it stood on a fine terrace, which again led down by a broad flight of steps to the flower gardens and orangery. A more delightful home could scarcely be imagined; and when I saw it, I ceased to wonder that Miss Maybourne had so often experessed a preference for South Africa as compared with England.

When the cab drew up at the front door I jumped out, and was about to help my companion to alight when I heard the front door open, and next moment a tall, fine-looking man, about sixty years of age, crossed the verandah and came down the steps. At first he regarded me with a stare of surprise, but before he could ask me my business, Miss Maybourne had descended from the vehicle and was in his arms. Not desiring to interrupt them in their greetings I strolled down the path. But I was not permitted to go far before I heard my name called. I turned, and went back to have my hand shaken off by Mr. Maybourne.

"My daughter says you have saved her life," he cried. "I'll not ask questions now, but I thank you, sir—from the bottom of my heart I thank you. God knows you have done me a service the value of which no man can estimate."

The warmth of his manner was so much above what I had expected that it left me without power to reply.

"Come in, come in," he continued in a voice that fairly shook with emotion. "Oh, let us thank God for this happy day!"

He placed his arm round his daughter's waist, and drew her to him as if he would not let her move from his side again. I followed a few steps behind, and should have entered the house had I not been recalled by the cabman, who ventured to remind me that he had not yet been paid.

I instantly put my hand into my pocket, only to have the fact recalled to me that I possessed no money at all. All my capital had gone to the bottom in the Fiji Princess, and I was absolutely penniless. The position was an embarrassing one, and I was just reflecting what I had better do, when I heard Mr. Maybourne come out into the verandah again. He must have divined my difficulty, for without hesitation he discharged the debt, and apologizing for not having thought of it, led me into the house.

Passing through an elegantly-furnished hall we entered the dining-room. Here breakfast was laid, and it was evidently from that meal that Mr. Maybourne had jumped up to receive us.

"Now, Mr. Wrexford," he cried, pointing to a chair, "sit yourself down yonder, and let me hear everything from the beginning to the end. Heaven knows I can hardly believe my good fortune. Half an hour ago I was the most miserable man under the sun! now that I have got my darling back safe and sound, I believe I am the happiest."

"Had you then heard of the wreck of the 'Fiji Princess?'" I enquired.

"Here is a telegram I received last night," he said handing me a paper he had taken from his pocket. "You see it is from Teneriffe, and says that nothing has yet been heard of the vessel which was then more than a fortnight overdue. Agnes tells me that you were rescued by the King of Carthage. I understood she was expected about mid-day to-day, and I had resolved to visit her as soon as she got into dock, in order to enquire if they had any tidings to report regarding the lost vessel. How little I expected to find that you were safe on board her, Aggie! Mr. Wrexford, you can have no idea of the agony I have suffered this week past."

"On the contrary," I answered, "I think I can very well imagine it."

"And now tell me your story. I must not be cheated of a single detail."

I saw from the way he looked at me that he expected me to do the narrating, so I did so, commencing with the striking of the vessel on the rock, and winding up with an account of our rescue by the King of Carthage. He listened with rapt attention until I had finished, and then turned to his daughter.

"Has Mr. Wrexford told me everything?" he asked with a smile.

"No," she answered. "He has not told you half enough. He has not told you that when I fell overboard one night, when we were off the Spanish coast, he sprang over after me and held me up until a boat came to our assistance. He has not told you that when the vessel sank he gave his own life-belt up to me, nor has he given you any idea of his constant kindness and self-sacrifice all through that dreadful time."

Mr. Maybourne rose from his chair as she finished speaking, and came round to where I sat. Holding out his hand to me, he said, with tears standing in his eyes:

"Mr. Wrexford, you are a brave man, and from the bottom of my heart I thank you. You have saved my girl, and brought her home safe to me; as long as I live I shall not be able to repay the debt I owe you. Remember, however, that henceforth I am your truest friend."

But I must draw a curtain over this scene. If I go into any further details I shall break down again as I did then. Suffice it that Mr. Maybourne refused to hear of my leaving his house as I proposed, but insisted that I should remain as his guest until I had decided what I intended to do with myself.

"For the future you must look upon this as your home in South Africa," he said. "I seem powerless to express my gratitude to you as I should like. But a time may come when I may even be able to do that."

"You have more than repaid me, I'm sure," I replied. "I have every reason to be deeply grateful to you for the way you have received me."

He replied in his former strain, and when he had done so, the conversation turned upon those who had been lost in the ill-fated Fiji Princess. It was easy to see that his brother-in-law's death cut him to the quick.

After luncheon that day I found myself alone with Mr. Maybourne. I was not sorry for this, as I wanted to sound him as to my future movements. As I have so often said, I had no sort of desire to remain in Cape Town, and judged that the sooner I was up country, and out of civilization, the better it would be for me.

"You must forgive my being frank with you, Mr. Wrexford," said my host, as we lit cigars preparatory to drawing our chairs into the verandah; "but I have gathered from what you yourself have said and from what my daughter has told me, that you are visiting South Africa on the chance of obtaining some sort of employment. Is this so?"

"That is exactly why I am here," I said. "I am most anxious to find something to do as soon as possible."

"In what direction will you seek it?" he asked. "What is your inclination? Remember, I may be able to help you."

"I am not at all particular," I answered. "I have knocked about the world a good deal, and I can turn my hand to most things. But if a choice were permitted me, I fancy I should prefer mining of some sort to anything else."

"Indeed! I had no idea you understood that sort of work."

"I have done a good deal of it," I replied, with a little touch of pride, for which next moment I found it difficult to account, considering the result to which it had brought me.

He asked one or two practical questions, which I was fortunately able to answer to his satisfaction, and then was silent for a couple of minutes or so. At last he consulted his pocket book, and then turned to me again.

"I fancy, Mr. Wrexford," he said, "that you have come in the nick of time for both of us. We may be able to do each other mutual services."

"I am very glad to hear that," I answered. "But in what possible way can I help you?"

"Well, the matter stands like this," he said. "As you are doubtless aware, my business is mostly in connection with mining, both in this colony and its neighbors. Well, information has lately reached me concerning what promises to prove a first-class property in Mashonaland, eighty-five miles from Buluwayo. The mine has been excellently reported on, and is now being got into good going order. It only needs a capable manager at its head to do really well. Of course such a man is easily procured in a country where every man seems to be engaged in mining, more or less; and yet for that very self-same reason I am unable to make a selection. The available men all know too much, and I have private reasons for wishing this mine to be well looked after. Now the question is, would you care for the post?"

Needless to say, I embraced the opportunity in much the same manner as a hungry trout jumps at a fly. If I could only manage to get up there without being caught the appointment would suit me in every way. Mr. Maybourne seemed as pleased at my acceptance of it as I was at his offer; and when, after a little further conversation—in which I received many useful hints and no small amount of advice—it was revealed to his daughter, she struck me as being even more delighted than either her father or myself. I noticed that Mr. Maybourne looked at her rather anxiously for a moment as if he suspected there might be some sort of understanding between us, but whatever he may have thought he kept it to himself. He need, however, have had no fear on that score. Circumstances had placed an insurmountable barrier between myself and any thought of marriage with his daughter.

As the result of our conversation, and at my special desire, it was arranged that I should start for my post on the following day. Nobody could have been more eager than I was to be out in the wilds. But, with it all, my heart felt sad when I thought that after to-morrow I might never see the woman I so ardently loved again. Since the previous night, when on the promenade-deck of the steamer I had told her of my love, neither of us had referred in any way to the subject. So remote was the chance that I should ever be able to make her my wife that I determined so far as possible, to prevent myself from giving any thought to the idea. But I was not destined after all to leave without referring to the matter.

That evening after dinner we were sitting in the verandah outside the drawing-room, when the butler came to inform Mr. Maybourne that a neighbor had called to see him. Asking us to excuse him for a few moments he left us and went into the house. When we were alone together I spoke to my companion of her father's kindness and told her how much I appreciated it. She uttered a little sigh, and as this seemed an extraordinary answer to my speech, I enquired the reason of it.

"You say you are going away to-morrow," she answered, "and yet you ask me why I sigh! Cannot you guess?"

"Agnes," I said, "you know I have no option but to go. Do not let us go over the ground we covered last night. It would be best not for both our sakes; you must see that yourself."

"You know that I love you, and I know that you love me—and yet you can go away so calmly. What can your love be worth?"

"You know what it is worth," I answered vehemently, roused out of myself by this accusation. "And if ever the chance occurs again of proving it you will be afforded another example. I cannot say more."

"And is it always to be like this, Gilbert," she asked, for the first time calling me by my Christian name. "Are we to be separated all our lives?"

"God knows—I fear so," I murmured, though it cut me to the heart to have to say the words.

She bowed her head on her hands with a little moan, while I, feeling that I should not be able to control myself much longer, sprang to my feet and went across to the verandah rails. For something like five minutes I stood looking into the dark garden, then I pulled myself together as well as I was able and went back to my chair.

"Agnes," I said, as I took possession of her little hand, "you cannot guess what it costs me to tell you how impossible it is for me ever to link my lot with yours. The reason why I cannot tell you. My secret is the bitterest one a man can have to keep, and it must remain locked in my own breast for all time. Had I met you earlier it might have been very different—but now our ways must be separate for ever. Don't think more hardly of me than you can help, dear. Remember only that as long as I live I shall call no other woman wife. Henceforward I will try to be worthy of the interest you have felt in me. No one shall ever have the right to say ought against me; and, if by chance you hear good of me in the dark days to come, you will know that it is for love of you I rule my life. May God bless and keep you always."

She held up her sweet face to me, and I kissed her on the lips. Then, Mr. Maybourne returned to the verandah; and, half-an-hour later, feeling that father and daughter would like a little time alone together before they retired to rest, I begged them to excuse me, and on a pretence of feeling tired went to my room.

Next morning after breakfast I drove with Mr. Maybourne into Cape Town, where I made the few purchases necessary for my journey. In extension of the kindness he had so far shown me, he insisted on advancing me half my first year's salary—a piece of generosity for which you may be sure I was not ungrateful, seeing that I had not a halfpenny in the world to call my own. Out of this sum I paid the steamship company for my passage—much against their wish—obtained a ready-made rig out suitable for the rough life I should henceforth live, also a revolver, a rifle, and among other things a small gold locket which I wished to give to Agnes as a keepsake and remembrance of myself.

At twelve o'clock I returned to the house, and, after lunch, prepared to bid the woman I loved "good-bye." Of that scene I cannot attempt to give you any description—the pain is too keen even now. Suffice it that when I left the house I carried with me, in addition to a sorrow that I thought would last me all my life, a little square parcel which, on opening, I found to contain a photo of herself in a Russian leather case. How I prized that little present I will leave you to guess.

Two hours later I was in the train bound for Johannesburg.

CHAPTER XI.

Six months had elapsed since I had left Cape Town and on looking back on them now I have to confess that they constituted the happiest period of my life up to that time. I had an excellent appointment, an interesting, if not all-absorbing, occupation, comfortable quarters, and the most agreeable of companions any man could desire to be associated with. I was as far removed from civilization as the most misanthropic of men, living by civilized employment, could hope to get. Our nearest town, if by such a name a few scattered huts could be dignified, was nearly fifty miles distant, our mails only reached us once a week, and our stores every three months. As I had never left the mine for half a day during the whole of the time I had been on it, I had seen no strange faces, and by reason of the distance and the unsettled nature of the country, scarcely half-a-dozen had seen mine.

"The Pride of the South," as the mine had been somewhat grandiloquently christened by its discoverer, was proving a better property than had even been expected, and to my astonishment, for I had made haste to purchase shares in it, my luck had turned, and I found myself standing an excellent chance of becoming a rich man.

One thing surprised me more and more every day, and that was my freedom from arrest; how it had come about that I was permitted to remain at large so long I could not understand. When I had first come up to Rhodesia I had found a danger in everything about me. In the rustling of the coarse veldt grass at night, the sighing of the wind through the trees, and even the shadows of the mine buildings and machinery. But when week after week and month after month went by and still no notice was taken of me by the police, my fears began to abate until, at the time of which I am about to speak, I hardly thought of the matter at all. When I did I hastened to put it away from me in much the same way as I would have done the remembrance of some unpleasant dream of the previous week. One consolation, almost cruel in its uncertainty, was always with me. If suspicion had not so far fallen on me in England, it would be unlikely, I argued, ever to do so; and in the joy of this thought I began dreams of the happiness that might possibly be mine in the future. Was it to be wondered at therefore that my work was pleasant to me and that the wording of Mr. Maybourne's letters of praise seemed sweeter in my ears than the strains of the loveliest music could have been. It was evident that my star was in the ascendant, but, though I could not guess it then, my troubles were by no means over; and, as I was soon to find out, I was on the edge of the bitterest period of all my life.

Almost on the day that celebrated my seventh month in Mr. Maybourne's employ, I received a letter from him announcing his intention of starting for Rhodesia in a week's time, and stating that while in our neighborhood he would embrace the opportunity of visiting "The Pride of the South." In the postscript he informed me that his daughter had decided to accompany him, and for this reason he would be glad if I would do my best to make my quarters as comfortable as possible in preparation for her. He, himself, he continued, was far too old a traveler to be worth considering.

I was standing at the engine-room door, talking to one of the men, when the store-keeper brought me my mail. After I had read my chief's letter, I felt a thrill go through me that I could hardly have diagnosed for pleasure or pain. I felt it difficult to believe that in a few weeks' time I should see Agnes again, be able to look into her face, and hear the gentle accents of her voice. The portrait she had given me of herself I carried continually about with me; and, as proof of the inspection it received, I may say

FARM AND FIRESIDE

Useful Hints Which Will be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper.

THE PRESERVATION OF ICE.

It matters little whether a house is built above or below the ground, if the construction and management are right, ice will keep in it. The three cardinal points are to have ventilation above the ice, drainage below it, and a body of sawdust or some similar non-conductor, about one foot thick on the top and at the bottom and sides.

Good-sized openings in each gable of a small building, or on all four sides of a large one, will generally admit of adequate ventilation. To keep out birds, bats and the like, wire cloth should be tacked over these openings. If the well is on one side, and the house a large one, the drains should be laid to bring the water to it. A fairly good drain and, at the same time, proper foundation, may be obtained by filling a trench a foot deep with small stones and covering with gravel. Provided there is fall enough, the water may be taken away from below this to any place desired by means of tile drains. Whatever the construction, it will not do to let water stand under ice. Some method must be employed for conducting it away from out of the foundation as fast as it accumulates. This is a point of the most vital importance in the preservation of ice.

Sawdust, of course, is the ideal packing material to place around ice. Best of all, it can be used over and over, for with good care it wastes slowly. As a rule, it should be put two feet thick on top of ice. The way to do is to pack the ice on sawdust, leaving a space a foot wide all around, and from time to time, as the pile grows higher, fill that in solidly with sawdust. There is no need, then, to put sawdust in the roof or walls of the building. A single inch board, even, is as good as one of more inches, for the side; lengthwise, it will suffice, for it is the sawdust, with its air spaces, that keeps the ice. This method of packing and protecting ice is equally good, whether the house be constructed of bricks, stones, slabs or lumber.

HORTICULTURAL.

Great Money Crops.

I know there is money in strawberries and more backaches also than anything I ever did if we make them a specialty, and attend to them when they demand our attention, but if we make strawberries of secondary importance and let the weeds get the start, woe be unto us, for there is no place in the world where weeds thrive and flourish as in a field of strawberries. I have taken at the rate of $300 to $500 per acre, and much more than that for some special small pieces. The kinds that do well with me might not do with you. My favorites are the Crescent, Haverland, Glen Mary, Senator, Dunlap, Warfield, Sample, etc. I have tried a great many new varieties, but I find it better to stick to my old friends than to be all the time changing to new ones.

With blackberries and raspberries I have never raised only enough for my own use, with a few to spare some years, but my intentions are to set more land to these bushes this spring, as the wild ones are getting scarcer and there is more of a call for them. We commenced raising strawberries for our own use and found them so good, and then the neighbors would want some, and we concluded to set out more, and we found by cultivating a large piece it reduced the cost and gave us more money. My advice is for all to set out strawberries, if only enough for your own use.—G. A. Clough, East Braintree, Vt., in American Cultivator.

Protecting Fruit Trees.

Mice are one of the worst enemies of fruit trees, especially young fruit trees. During winter they burrow along the ground under the snow in search of food, and upon coming to a fruit tree they start, if possible, to gnaw it. Even in orchards where clean cultivation is practiced, and rubbish is not allowed to accumulate as a shelter for mice, it is necessary to provide some sort of protection against trees being girdled and killed by them before spring arrives.

There are various ways of dressing the trees in "armor," such as wrapping round the base of their trunks unseamed tin cans, waxed paper with poison in the wax, tar paper, ordinary building paper and wooden veneer. The last-named is the most commendable, in that it has the additional merit of being a good preventive of sun-scald. It should be wrapped loosely around the trunk before it is tied, however, so as to leave an air space between it and the tree. Tar paper, if used at all, should have the lower ends banked with earth, to prevent mice from getting under it to the tree. Sometimes a mound of earth about a foot high around the base of the tree will turn them, as likewise the snow will if tramped hard in its place, but these are not very reliable.

Where one has only a few trees to protect, a good way is to cut corn stalks, and if he has them, castor bean stalks, including weeds about two feet long, and set enough of these around each tree to form an effectual barrier against either mice or rabbits. The lower ends should be stuck in the ground, close to the tree, and so deep that alternate freezing and thawing will not heave them out. To keep them from falling down, the tops should be tied.

It is a good thing, too, to "paint" the trunks of trees with a solution made of fresh lime slaked with soft water, or, better, with soapsuds that has stood for a few days after clothes have been washed in it. In proportion to one peck of lime, a quart of crude carbolic acid, four pounds of sulphur and one-half gallon of gas tar should be added to it while warm. Well stirred, it is then ready for application.

AGRICULTURAL ITEMS.

Seed Farming.

There are at the present time more than six hundred seed farms in the United States—farms, that is to say, devoted to the production of vegetable, field crop and flower seeds to be sold to farmers and gardeners. Some of these plantations are very extensive, comprising as much as one thousand acres.

Topdressing Rye and Clover.

To an inquiry how to fertilize a field of rye sowed last fall, intended to be seeded also with clover in the early spring, four hundred pounds acid phosphate and two hundred pounds of nitrate of potash. This application was intended to encourage the clover that was to be sown rather than the rye. If it was preferred to grow a larger crop of rye rather than the clover, he would recommend a dressing of nitrate of soda.

Canadians in Cuba.

On the principle that extremes meet, Canadians seem to be taking great interest in the semi-tropical islands of the West Indies. A Canadian concern has bought fifty thousand acres of fertile land in Cuba, and is selling it in small farms to people from the Dominion. This colony now includes about 130 people who are raising oranges and other fruits and early vegetables for the northern markets.

School for Dairy Maids.

Something of a novelty in the line of dairy schools is the recently established Norwegian course for dairy maids. The instruction is of a practical kind, the young women being taught to tend cattle, sheep, swine and poultry, including feeding, tending, also dairying, scrubbing and cleaning the milk vessels. The feed and milk must be weighed and a record kept. There is instruction from text books on the care of live stock in addition to the practical work. The course requires about six months' attendance.

Adulterated Milk.

The ordinary methods of milk adulterations are easily detected by expert examiners. It is reported that a French chemist, Dr. Quesneville, has made some experiments that point to the probability that for some time there has been practiced a form of deception in milk adulteration which has escaped the attention of health officers. In a paragraph in the Birmingham Daily Mail it is explained that the deficiency of fats, whether due to the poverty of the milk or the extraction of fats, has been covered by the addition of foreign greasy matter. Dr. Quesneville found that "benzine would dissolve foreign fats without affecting the natural fats in milk," and thus by examining samples which have passed the ordinary test he discovered such substances as pork dripping and cocoanut butter.

The Fruit Growers' Association of Canada is trying to have a law passed protecting shippers of produce against dishonest commission merchants. It is hard to understand why this branch of legislation has been so long neglected. One has only to make a few shipments to realize how absolutely the shipper is at the mercy of the receiver. No matter how unreasonable the returns or how inadequate the excuses, there is little redress for the owner of the produce. To be sure, he can change his commission man, but the results may not be better. Of course it is for the interest of the dealer to please his large and regular shippers and the better class of firms are likely to do their best for this class of their patrons, but the small, irregular shippers, who comprise the majority of farmers, are given very little consideration by many firms who consider themselves in high standing. The whole commission business ought to be under some kind of official supervision with agents to watch the shipments and report on their condition and terms of sale.

FEEDING A HORSE.

We go to France for good horses, and following is something from the Petit Journal Agricole of France, on how to feed good horses. Three meals are necessary and sufficient, with an interval of four or five hours between, to keep a horse in good condition. Oats take at least two hours to digest, hay takes three hours, and because it takes so long to digest it should be given when the day's work is over. The evening meal should be a full meal, the animal being then at rest and able to digest its food at leisure. There should be an interval of half an hour between the return of the horse to the stable and his getting his evening meal.

Too much food at a meal or too long abstinence between meals, followed by voracious feedings, is conducive to colic and indigestion. Irregularly fed, he is given to showing his impatience by letting his hoofs play about the woodwork of his stall. Giving "refreshers" at odd times is also bad. Remember that both stomach and bladder should never be loaded in work time, whether light or heavy work is done. A horse, therefore, should not be ridden or driven immediately after a meal, on the same principle that it ought not be fed sooner than half an hour after work is over. Between one end of the year and another a horse consumes an amount of dry heating food which calls for a special regimen to neutralize the excessive proteid consumption that has taken place. Thus in autumn a ration of carrots given before the evening meal of oats is good, and so in spring, at the fall of the winter coat, a little green meat is beneficial, mixed with hay and oats, for the evening meal. Another maxim much disregarded in practice is that the horse should be watered long before being put to work, and then very sparingly.

AGRICULTURE IN AUSTRALIA.

Farm methods in most parts of Australia are according to the free and easy model practised some years ago in the newer parts of this country. The main reliance is upon nature, and it is not considered profitable to bestow patience, care and labor received by the average American farm. The reason is found in the scarcity of labor and the cheapness of land and farm products.

If late the markets have been much improved by the development of the cold storage industry, which has offered cheap and rapid transit for fresh products to markets thousands of miles away. Another influence has been the help of the Government Department of Agriculture. In this line a somewhat original system has been developed which is of interest to farmers elsewhere.

Each state or province has agricultural colleges, modern farms and experimental systems. In New South Wales the farm comprises over 3000 acres, and there are smaller farms established in various parts of the State. Students may go to these farms and go to work, receiving practical instruction under government superintendents and assistants. Victoria and Queensland also have agricultural and experimental farms, the farms being of very large area, and there are sub-farms in the various districts. The work is still further divided into smaller farm stations conducted by farmers' associations, which carry on successful experiments, repeating upon a small scale those of the larger farms. In this way the farmers co-operate with the stations directly and are kept in touch with their work. South Australia has a central agricultural bureau with one hundred branch bureaus in the country, all co-operating in the introduction of new plants and the improvement of farm animals. West Australia has several extremely practical experimental farms where students are admitted at slight cost and the instruction is confined almost entirely to practical work under skilled supervision. All these influences are having their effect on Australian agriculture, which it is said has improved faster during the past ten years than during the whole fifty years.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

When long hair becomes so matted that it is difficult to comb the tangled locks, they should be saturated with alcohol. This done, they will become amenable to the brush and comb as if by magic.

Save tea leaves for washing varnished paint. When sufficient leaves have been collected steep them for half an hour in a tin vessel and then strain through a sieve. This water gives a fresher, newer appearance to varnished wood than ordinary soap and water.

Mildew is not generally affected by chemicals, though it sometimes yields to their action. It may best be treated with a stiff paste made by boiling down castile soap shavings, spreading a thick layer of this upon the stain and scattering over it some powdered potash. Moisten slightly with water and bleach out on the grass.

Many people boil eggs to their liking by placing the eggs in cold water, which is allowed to come to the boiling point. One housekeeper at least uses the same method for poached eggs, taking them from the almost boiling water perfectly cooked.

Avoid too hot an oven when cooking a turkey. The oven should be quite hot when the bird is put in, but after the outside has been seared the heat should be modified. Always roast a turkey breast down.

Tired feet should be well bathed in warm water, to which a little sea salt has been added. Dry thoroughly, and rub with a little lemon juice. It is wonderful how this treatment soothes them.

To properly air a room, open the window at the top and bottom. The reason for this is to allow impure air, which always rises, to escape at the top, while the cool, fresh air will come in at the bottom from outside.

White chiffon washes perfectly, but a better way to clean it is by a dry method. Use two quarts of finely powdered starch to one of powdered borax. Spread the chiffon on a clean muslin, and rub the mixture well into it. Shake this out, and sprinkle liberally with clean flour and borax: cover and leave over night; the next day brush and shake every particle of powder from the chiffon. It should be quite spotless.

DOMESTIC HINTS.

Apple Tapioca.

Three-quarters of a cup of tapioca, 7 sour apples, one-half teaspoonful of salt, cold water, one-half cup of sugar, 2 1-2 cups boiling water. Soak tapioca one hour in cold water to cover, add boiling water and salt; cook in double boiler until transparent, pare and slice apples, place in a buttered pudding dish, sprinkle sugar over apples, and pour over tapioca, and bake in a moderate oven until apples are soft.

Turkey Omelet.

Separate the yolks from the whites of six eggs and to the yolks add six tablespoonfuls of cold water; beat this, season with salt and pepper. Then whip the whites to a stiff froth and fold into the yolks; beat for five minutes, then beat in one-half cupful of turkey meat minced as finely as possible, and mixed with two tablespoonfuls of flour. Have the omelet pan moderately hot, put in two tablespoonfuls of butter, then turn in the egg mixture and cook until a light brown, and without turning set in the oven to dry.

Potatoes and Cheese.

Cut some boiled potatoes into slices and prepare a sauce of one cupful of milk thickened with one tablespoonful of flour and with 2 tablespoonfuls of mustard. Line a dish with croutons, arrange around them a close row of the potato slices, and cover with the sauce; repeat in alternate layers, covering the whole with sauce; sprinkle lightly with grated cheese and very brown croutons, and bake in the oven for about twenty minutes.

Oyster Soup.

Clean one quart of oysters, chop and then parboil, drain and add to liquor enough water to make one quart of liquid. Brown three tablespoonfuls of butter with three tablespoonfuls of flour, add oyster liquor and cook slowly for one-half hour. Season with salt and paprika and celery salt. Just before serving add one cup of cream; two tablespoonfuls of chopped parsley may be added if desired.

"THE" OLD SCRATCH."

How the Evil One Came to be Popularly Known as "The Old Scratch."

One of the many familiar names of his satanic majesty is "The Old Scratch." It is undoubtedly due to the fact that scratching is so disagreeable that people thought it no worse than the evil one. A scalp full of dandruff keeps one scratching all the time; not only disagreeable but considered very inelegant in polite society—as it would be—because one ought not to itch. To cure the scalp of dandruff effectively, use Newbro's Herpicide. It kills the germ that creates the dandruff, which is preliminary to falling hair, and, finally, baldness. No other hair preparation kills the dandruff germ. Herpicide also is a very delightful and effective hair-dressing. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

SIR JAMES WATSON'S OPINION.

He says that the commonest of all disorders, and one from which few escape, is catarrh. Sir James firmly believes in local treatment, which is best supplied by "Catarrhozone." No case of catarrh can exist where Catarrhozone is used; it is a miracle worker, relieves almost instantly and cures after other remedies fail. Other treatments can't reach the diseased parts like Catarrhozone, because it goes to the source of the trouble along with the air you breathe. Catarrhozone is free from cocaine, it leaves no bad after-effects; it is simply nature's own cure. Accept no substitute for Catarrhozone, which alone can cure catarrh.

Hobbes and Geometry.

Hobbes was not yet fifteen when he went to Oxford. He did not much care for logic, yet he learned it and thought himself a good disputant. There is no reason to think he learned anything else at Oxford save a strong dislike of academic institutions and methods. He turned from the official studies to amuse himself with geography and voyages. As to mathematics, there was no official recognition of them at all while Hobbes was at the university, so there is nothing improbable in the statement that Hobbes had never opened a copy of Euclid until he was near middle age. The story is best told in Aubrey's own words:

"He was forty years old when he looked on geometry, which happened accidentally. Being in a gentleman's library, 'Euclid's Elements' lay open, and it was the forty-seventh proposition Lib. I, so he read the proposition. 'By George,' says he, 'this is impossible!' So he read the demonstration of it, which referred him back to another, which he also read, 'et sic deinceps,' that at last he was demonstratively convinced of that truth. This made him in love with geometry."

SPHERE OF WOMEN.

Miss Laura Rose's Address Before the Women's Institute.

An unique and unusually interesting address on "The Womanly Sphere of Woman" was delivered at the Women's Institute convention at the Guelph Model Farm on Wednesday, Dec. 13, by Miss Laura Rose of the O. A. C., Guelph. There was an immense attendance of ladies drawn from many different parts of Ontario, and the sentiments of the speaker were frequently applauded. Miss Rose, who is a very pleasing speaker, deprecated the entrance of women into the spheres of work better suited for men. A woman's success in the financial world might mean the sacrifice of her womanly nature, and cause failure more pathetic and far more to be regretted than financial failure.

"Let us safeguard well the difference in our nature which makes men seem our superior, and which, if neutralized, would only mar us and probably blot out the very best part of our nature," said Miss Rose. "The winning of a diploma often means physical wreck. She has won her laurels dearly, but for her rounded figure she has got muscular flabbiness, and for her rosy, merry face she has got sharp-featured irritability. I think it would be well to leave this delving into deeper science to men, and let us be content to read of their wonderful discoveries. Some women are constantly uncomfortable because all the time trying to know more and more, so that they have not time to enjoy life.

"The education of our girls has been towards taking them from the home. During their school days they are always, when at home, poring over books and they take no interest in home life and home work. What can we do to keep our girls in the kitchen or turn them again to the kitchen? My greatest hope in the Macdonald Institute is that it may turn girls back again to the home life, and that they may there find their greatest pleasure in administering to the comforts of the inmates of their own homes. 'Nothing lovelier can be found in woman than to study household good.' At the institute they study it under such lovely conditions. There they, as they bend over the washboard, take delight in seeing the soil come out of the clothes, and when they go to the kitchen cooking becomes a joy. They will find such a dignity in performing the simple duties of housework that they would not change their sphere for any other in the world."

Miss Rose spoke of the necessities for congenial tastes between husband and wife, and advised women not by any means to limit their education to the kitchen. She, however, complained of the neglect of home by many married women who attend too many social and church meetings. Many of those works she believed should be done by maiden ladies. "There are lots of them," she remarked. The women of our country were largely responsible for the standard of home life. "A woman who is loving and true and devoted, a wife devoted and intelligent, need have no regrets if academic honors, high social position or political privileges have been denied her. She is filling the womanly sphere. The eyes of the world and of the God above rest kindly upon her, and her reward is great.

"Stay, stay at home, dear heart, and rest;
Home-keeping hearts are happiest.
For they that wander they know not where
Are full of trouble and full of care.
To stay at home is best."

AN ILLUSION DISPELLED.

The Oneidas Indians' Gift to the King Sent Back.

Sentimental persons will be touched by an incident that is reported from St. Thomas. The squaws of the Oneida Indians got an idea a couple of years ago and began to put it into effect. They set to work making two quilts, the finest they could design, the best their eager fingers could put together. They worked on these two quilts for a whole year, for they were to be devoted to a grand purpose—they were to be a gift from the Oneidas to the great King of England. When at last the work was done the precious quilts were laid before the chief of the Oneidas, Chief Ninham, who undertook to send them with a suitable message to King Edward.

This was done. Then weeks and months slipped away, and no word came from the great King, who had been so loyally served by his people the Oneidas. They waited expectantly to hear of the pleasure they had caused His Majesty and of his admiration for the skill and industry of which the carefully made quilts were the evidence.

A few days ago the chief of the Oneidas was thrilled by the receipt of the long-looked-for letter. He opened it. It was from His Majesty's private secretary. It formally stated that owing to the rules laid down with regard to offerings from individuals the King could not accept the quilts sent, and they were being returned. They came. They are back where they started from, to remind those who made them of a year's lost labor, and, more than that, of the Oneidas' lost illusion.

A rule is a rule and a secretary is a secretary, but in this case he would have been a wise secretary who had laid this special case under the notice of King Edward himself for his own decision, says The Toronto Star. The tact for which His Majesty is noted would probably have been exercised. Nor was this case one that came under the ordinary rules. The Indian tribes of Canada are allies of the King, not subjects. Call this a fiction if you will, but it is one that has had circumspect recognition from the first in all relations between the throne and our aboriginal people. The Oneidas are allied to the throne by treaty. More than that, in this city the people have come from far and near to veiw the vast collections of presents made to Queen Victoria and King Edward by princes and potentates of India. Why should the gift of the chief of the Oneidas be unable to get past the palisade of secretaries?

Cupid's Busy Day.

TWO HOME WEDDINGS IN THE CITY THIS MORNING.

HOWE — MOYNES.

A quiet home wedding took place at 11.30 this morning at the residence of Mr. J. C. Moynes, Everett street, when his second daughter, Miss Florence, was united in marriage to Mr. Chas. P. Howe, of Rochester, N. Y. Rev. J. P. Wilson, pastor of Bridge St. Church, officiated. The young couple were unattended and only the immediate relatives were present. The bride was dressed in a very becoming travelling suit of green cloth. After partaking of the wedding breakfast, Mr. and Mrs. Howe left on the afternoon train for their future home in the Flower City. The bride was exceedingly popular in church and social circles in this city, and the hearty good wishes of a host of friends will follow her to her new home in Uncle Sam's domains.

BEATTY — BROWN.

The residence of Mr. C. H. Vermilyea, Bridge street, was at 9.30 this morning the scene of an interesting event. It was the marriage of his niece, Miss Sydna H. Brown, daughter of Mrs. H. Brown, to Mr. Wm. J. Beatty, of Parry Sound. The drawing-room was very prettily decorated for the occasion, and many guests were present to witness the ceremony which was performed by the Rev. J. P. Wilson, B.A., pastor of Bridge St. church. The bride was becomingly gowned in a dress of silk eoline over chiffon taffeta, and carried a bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley. The bridesmaid, Miss Rose Beatty, of Toronto, was dressed in white chiffon muslin over chiffon taffeta, and carried a bouquet of pink roses. The groomsman was Mr. W. A. Foster, of Toronto. Miss Mabel Vermilyea, a cousin of the bride, was maid of honor her gown being similar to that of the bridesmaid. She carried a bouquet of pink roses. Little Miss Marjorie Vermilyea was flower girl. Miss Bessie Lingham rendered, most appropriately, a wedding march. Messrs. A. P. Allen and Sanford Burrows were ushers. After the ceremony the young couple received the congratulations of all present, after which the wedding breakfast was partaken of. That the bride had many friends in the city was evidenced by the many beautiful gifts which she received. At noon Mr. and Mrs. Beatty left for the east, and will visit Montreal and other places before taking up their residence in Parry Sound. The Intelligencer joins with many friends of the bride in wishing the young couple a happy and prosperous wedded life.

VANCE — BATEMAN.

In St. Thomas' Church, Rawdon, on Wednesday, Dec. 27th, Mr. Philip Vance and Miss Francis E. Bateman were united in matrimony by the Rev. Mr. Dickenson. The bride entered the church leaning on the arm of her uncle, Mr. Jas. Bateman, to the strains of Wedding Bells March played by Miss Lena Reid, cousin of the bride. Rev. Mrs. Dickenson rendered beautifully 'The Voice that Breathed o'er Eden." The bride looked charming gowned in pearl grey crepe de chene trimmed with white chiffon and shirring, and wore the traditional bridal veil. Miss Mollie Bateman, sister of the bride, acted as bridesmaid, and wore navy blue satin cloth trimmed with white satin and all-over lace with silk hat to match. Mr. Wm. Blakely supported the groom. After the impressive Church of England service had been concluded, all repaired to the home of the bride's mother where a sumptuous wedding breakfast was served. The bride's going-away gown was blue Venetian cloth with silk hat to match. Mr. and Mrs. Vance left on the 4 o'clock train for Toronto and other western points amid showers of rice. The high esteem in which both are held was evinced by the numerous and costly presents. On their return Mr. and Mrs. Vance will reside at Minto. The groom's gifts to the bride and bridesmaid were gold chains and lockets set with pearls. The bride was an active member of St. Thomas' church and a member of the choir. All join in wishing them bon voyage on the sea of life.

Necessity the Mother, Etc.

Picton Gazette: An amusing experience followed the shutting off of the electric lights on Friday night. One of the town barbers was engaged in shaving a customer, and had removed the beard from one side of his face when artist and customer were left in darkness. Here was a dilemma which had not been reckoned upon. The situation was not only an unique one, but one that required immediate action. To finish up his work the barber inserted a lighted taper in the customer's mouth, by the light of which he was enabled to finish shaving him.

Successful Masquerade.

The masquerade ball held last night in the Oddfellows' hall, under the auspices of Belleville Lodge, No. 81, I.O.O.F., was in every respect a successful affair. About 125 couples were present, and some of the costumes were exceedingly pretty, whilst others were grotesque. The Chautaupka orchestra was present, as was also the I.O.O.F. band. Mr. R. H. Ketcheson was a very efficient master of ceremonies. At midnight lunch was served. Dancing

SANTA CLAUS RESPONDS TO AN ENCORE.

GOOD OLD SAINT MADE SECOND APPEARANCE AT HOLLOWAY ST. CHURCH LAST NIGHT.

The repetition of the annual Christmas entertainment, which took place at Holloway St. Methodist Church last night, proved to be very successful, the lower portion of the church being completely filled, besides many in the gallery. The programme showed a few changes from that first presented, and passed off even more successfully than before. The new features last night were pleasing duets by Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Gordon; a fine solo, "Anchored," by Mr. Piche, a Montreal gentleman visiting in the city; a stirring recitation, "Our Lady of the Snows," by Miss Jennie Bonisteel, and a fine solo, "The Gift," by Mr. Erwin R. Gordon. The proceeds last night, so far as reported, were $42, which, with $110 for the first entertainment, makes a total of over $150 for the two. A splendid showing.

A project is under way looking to the installation of a new organ in Holloway St. Church, it being expected that the new instrument will arrive in February.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"THE ARRIVAL OF KITTY." TO-NIGHT.

A new comedy from the pen of Norman Lee Swartout, author of "Sandy" and many other equally successful farces, is scheduled for the Carman to-night. The new farce is entitled "The Arrival of Kitty," and it is expected to make one of the substantial hits of the year. It is a comedy of complications, written along lines similar to those of the old Hoyt laugh makers, but entirely original in theme and treatment, and it is said to be one of the brightest and liveliest pieces of the sort that have been offered in many a day. No pains nor expense will be spared in staging and equipping "The Arrival of Kitty," and the performance will be further enlivened by the introduction of several bright specialties.

"DORA THORNE" COMING.

At last Bertha M. Clay's celebrated novel, "Dora Thorne," has been dramatized and the attraction will be the offering at the Carman opera house next Tuesday, Jan. 9. Messrs. Rowland and Clifford have left nothing untouched to make this production one of the best on the road. The company supporting Miss Dale, who plays Dora, is a complete one. The costumes and scenery are beautiful, in fact the play is said to have been given a gorgeous production.

KINGSTON PRESBYTERY.

CALLS TO PICTON AND DESERONTO CHURCHES ARE SUSTAINED.

A special session of the Kingston Presbytery was held yesterday afternoon in the John St. Presbyterian church in this city. Rev. Mr. Burns, of Stirling, acted as presiding official in the absence of the Moderator, Rev. Dr. McTavish.

The call from St. Andrew's church, Picton, to the Rev. Wm. Shearer, of Ottawa, was sustained and the date of induction was fixed for Monday evening next, the 11th inst. In the absence of the Moderator, Rev. A. H. Drumm, of this city, will act in that capacity. The induction sermon will be preached by the Rev. R. S. Laidlaw, of this city. Mr. Gordon of Picton will address the new minister, and Rev. A. H. Drumm the congregation.

A call to the Rev. A. Currie, of Almonte, to become the pastor of the Deseronto Presbyterian church, was considered. A request has been forwarded to the Presbytery of Lanark and Renfrew that the Rev. gentleman be transferred to the Presbytery. Arrangements were made for the induction to take place as soon as possible.

MAKES THE FOOLISH STATEMENT THAT BRITISH FLEET WOULD HAVE DESTROYED RUSSIAN SHIPS IF TOGO HAD FAILED TO DO SO.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 3.—(Special).—The remarkable allegation that the British fleet was held in readiness to destroy the Russian fleet if the battle of the Sea of Japan had gone in the Russians' favor, is made by Admiral Rojestvensky in a letter published in the Novoe Vremya today, with the permission of the Minister of Marine.

Referring to the absolute secrecy of Admiral Togo in regard to the disposition of his forces, Rojestvensky declares this was unknown even to the Admiral of the British fleet, allied with the Japanese, who concentrated his forces at Wei Hai Wei in expectation of receiving an order to annihilate the Russian fleet if this, the final object of Great Britain, was beyond the power of the Japanese.

MISUNDERSTOOD THE NOTICE

YORK LOAN SHAREHOLDERS ASKED BANKS FOR THEIR MONEY.

Toronto, Jan. 3. — Notwithstanding the explicit announcement made by the liquidators of the York County Loan & Savings Company, that certain banks and their branches would receive the books and their certificates of members and give receipts for them, for the purpose of forwarding them free of expense to Toronto, a large number of the shareholders made up their minds that this statement meant something entirely different, and proceeded to act on the conclusion at which they had jumped. Just how they came to suppose that the announcement meant that the banks would pay them over the money they had deposited cannot be discovered, but that is the interpretation given to it by the number who went to the banks and made embarrassing demands.

Affairs are proceeding quietly at the head offices in Parkdale, where the books are being overhauled by the liquidators and accountants, and the pass books are being taken in.

The interim report of the Government commissioner, Mr. W. H. Cross, will probably be in the hands of the Attorney-General to-day.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

HOCKEY.

Ottawa Not the Team It Was.

Telegram: Ottawas' double defeat by Tom Phillips' Kenora Thistles comes as no surprise to students of hockey. The Ottawas' win over Winnipegs served to show rather that Winnipegs were a poor team than that the Ottawas were a good one, and it was freely predicted that when those new stars on the Ottawa forward line get up against something hard they would fail to scintillate. The games with Kenora are said to have been battles between the Thistles' forward line and the Ottawa defence, thus showing that Ottawas sadly miss the Gilmours and particularly McGee. The last named was undoubtedly the star of the forward line. As it now stands, half of Ottawas' forward line is too young and the other half too old. H. Smith, who was with Smith's Falls last year, is not a star of purest ray serene, while neither Bawlf nor Shore is better than a fill up. On the other hand, Westwick and Alf. Smith have been in the game a long time. They are nearly as old in hockey as Bill Massey is in baseball. And neither of them has taken the best of care of himself. Even Bob Fitzsimmons could not last forever, and the Ottawas had better patch up their troubles or make arrangements to ship the silverware to other quarters.

SPORTING NOTES.

The local O.H.A. Juniors play in Cobourg to-morrow night.

On Monday evening next, Jan. 8, the Port Hope O.H.A. Juniors will come down and clash with "Sandy" Burrows' merry men. A good game should result.

Hal Patron won the free-for-all at the Toronto winter race meet. Best time, 2.20. It took seven heats to decide the race.

In the O.H.A. Intermediate series last night Paris beat Brantford and Stratford won from Ingersoll. Pittsburg defeated the Soo in the Pro. League.

Globe: A Peterboro man who was in the city yesterday says that Peterboro will have a walkover in the Intermediate series. The team is faster than ever, and more fitted for senior company than the intermediate ranks.

It has been decided in New Zealand to pay the expenses of the New Zealand football team now in England so as to enable them to return by way of Canada and the United States.

State Hospital in Adirondacks Shows Encouraging Figures—105 Patients Discharged.

The trustees of the New York State Hospital for Incipient Pulmonary Tuberculosis in the Adirondacks have issued their completed statistics for the first year, which is as follows: There were admitted 207 patients, more than half of whom were incipients. There were no deaths. Of the 105 patients discharged, fifty-two were apparently recovered. Twenty-six arrested cases are reported. Sixteen improved, while eleven left without any improvement. The treatment consists mainly of outdoor air, wholesome food and rest. Patients have three full meals and two or three luncheons a day, and 90 of the 105 gained an average of 10.57 pounds each. This is certainly most encouraging and shows that incipient consumptives at least can be cured. There is another treatment perhaps almost as good. Stay home, use cold baths in the morning, get as much outdoor exercise as possible, a generous diet and the continuous use of Scott's Emulsion will doubtless check the progress of the disease and may permanently cure. At any rate it is easy to try it.

SALVATION ARMY COLONIES.

Commissioner Coombs Received Sympathetically by Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Ottawa, Jan. 3.—Commissioner Thos. B. Coombs and Brigadier Thos. Howell, secretary for transportation and immigration in the Salvation Army, had an interview with the Prime Minister yesterday, with the object of facilitating the immigration work of the Army. They were sympathetically received by Sir Wilfrid, who manifested great interest in the Army doings. Commissioner Coombs sails from New York on the steamship Philadelphia on Jan. 13 for England, where he goes to consult with Gen. Booth in regard to colonization plans.

The provinces of Australia, are strongly pressing for settlement in the commonwealth of agriculturists aided by the Army, and Commissioner Coombs does not want any diversion of emigrants to the detriment of Canada. He will urge upon Gen. Booth the desirability of keeping up and greatly increasing the transportation to Canada of suitable agriculturists and their families.

It is said that at Salvation Army headquarters there are applications for aid to help settle 70,000 persons in the Colonies. This number will be doubled by the time the shipping season has opened. The Army may settle ten thousand persons in Canada this year.

RESTRICT TACK MANUFACTURE.

Evidence Coming In Slowly in the Combine Inquiry.

Toronto, Jan. 3.—The tack combine investigation was resumed before Magistrate Denison yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Curry read many clauses from the minute book of the association.

From S. J. Frame, a Jenkins & Hardy clerk, who was the only witness, Mr. Curry obtained the information that some of the members of the Tack Association were also members of the Bolt and Nut Association, the Rivet and Brass Association, the Shot Association and the Wire Nail and Horse Shoe Nail Associations, all of which were for the purpose of regulating prices.

In 1893 the members of the Tack Association entered into an agreement not to increase the number of tack machines. This the crown claims was for the purpose of restricting the manufacture of tacks, thereby keeping up prices.

The investigation will be resumed this morning.

John Horton's "Confession" Re. Hamilton Murder Wanderings of Diseased Mind—Hit the Pipe.

Flint, Mich., Jan. 3.—"It's a lie, I never was in Hamilton, and I never knew Marie Hartz, nor the people whom I said killed her."

John Horton, dope fiend, made this admission at the County Jail last night. His face showed traces of drugs, and was wane and haggard, and when he said he had been without drugs since last Thursday night he gave the clue to his remarkable "confession."

"I found the circular at Detroit, and I thought they were after me," said Horton. "I hit the pipe in a Chinese laundry, and drank absinthe and used cocaine. I never got to the needle."

Horton was completely unstrung.

He was recognized by Clarence Swift as having lived near Otisville, this county. Swift says Horton has a reputation for lack of truthfulness.

Horton is still at the jail and will be held as a vagrant. He did not have a cent in his pocket when he surrendered, but will have a berth in a cell for some weeks now.

Detective Greer of the Ontario Government police arrived here last evening.

YERKES' WIDOW GETS $200,000.

Traction Magnate Also Made Many Public Bequests—All Satisfied.

New York, Jan. 3.—In his will read yesterday by Clarence A. Knight, his attorney, the late Charles T. Yerkes, makes many public bequests.

Provisions are made for the disposal of his New York home after the death of his wife to a corporation organized for the maintenance of his art gallery, the sum of $750,000 to be given this project upon Mrs. Yerkes' death. Mr. Yerkes also provided for a hospital to be erected here.

His widow, son and others, are provided for. The will was read to the members of his family yesterday, and they express entire satisfaction with its provisions. The principal provisions follows: $200,000 to Mary Adelaide Yerkes, his wife, who also receives the homestead at Sixty-eighth street and Fifth avenue, together with all the paintings and works of art therein. These on her death will go to a corporation, who shall maintain them as the Yerkes' galleries, the corporation to include the mayor of New York and others designated by the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Other bequests include: Son and daughter are given $200,000 each; to every household servant in his employ for four years preceding his death, $2,000; $100,000 in trust, the income to be paid the University of Chicago for the care and maintenance of Yerkes' Observatory at Lake Geneva, Wis.

The remainder of the estate is to be invested and divided into four equal shares, the income from two of the shares to be paid to Mrs. Yerkes during her life time, and the income from one share to be paid to his son, Charles E. Yerkes, during his life time, and the income from the remaining one share to be paid to his daughter, Bessie L. Rondinella, during her life time.

The will was signed by Mr. Yerkes on Jan. 12, 1905, in London.

TOLD TO WAIT UNTIL SPRING.

Canadian Government's Tip to Intending Immigrants.

London, Jan. 3.—(C. A. P.)—"This scheme is going to spread. If many more than 200 are ready to go somebody will be forthcoming to send them."

This assurance was given to one of the men eager to accept Baron Rothschild's offer to be sent to Canada when he expressed the fear that all could not go. The work of organization is proceeding rapidly. The demands are numerous and several shipping companies have offered special terms.

Canada, through the Immigration Office, has issued a warning not to go to Canada until the spring except in the case of female servants.

CHARGE IS MANSLAUGHTER.

Dr. Edward Preston Has Been Placed on Trial.

St. John, N. B., Jan. 3.—The charge against Dr. Edward Preston of this city, accused of causing the death by abortion of Miss Edith Clark, has been changed from murder to manslaughter. The case comes up to-day before Chief Justice Tuck. Yesterday afternoon the grand jury found no bill against Howard Camp, the girl's lover, and he was discharged from custody. It is quite possible he will be summoned as a witness against Preston.

Collision at Tweed.

Toronto, Jan. 3.—A collision of freight cars on the C. P. R. at Tweed about 7.30 New Year's night, was the only accident, in spite of the rush during the holiday season. A C. P. R. eastbound freight coming down the grade at a good rate of speed collided with a westbound freight coming out of the siding. Considerable damage was done to both trains, but none of the trainmen were injured.

Broke Leg In Two Places.

Toronto, Jan. 3.—Frank Horwood, a stone mason, is in the emergency hospital with his right leg broken in two places as the result of an accident on the Traders' Bank building yesterday afternoon. He was lifting a 200-pound stone into place with the aid of a couple of laborers, when it slipped out of their hands. It fell on his leg, crushing the flesh badly. The bone protruded.

Steamer Manitoba Lost a Life-Boat.

St. John, N. B., Jan. 3.—The C. P. R. steamer Lake Manitoba and the Allan liner Sicilian arrived here yesterday after a terrific voyage across the Atlantic. Seas swept the decks of both ships day after day, and the Manitoba lost a life-boat. Both brought a large number of immigrants for Western Canada, mostly English-speaking.

GIVEN ACID FOR MEDICINE.

London Man Pays With Life For His Wife's Mistake.

London, Jan. 3.—Benson Winegarden of 723 Waterloo street, died Monday morning as a result of drinking carbolic acid, administered to him by his wife, in mistake for olive oil.

Winegarden has suffered from kidney trouble for upwards of eight years, and has been practically an invalid during that time, although able to be up and around occasionally. New Year's eve he was very ill, and his condition did not improve as the night advanced, and about 6 o'clock his wife arose to give him a dose of olive oil.

After swallowing a mouthful of the dose, he asked his wife what it was, and noticing her mistake she summoned medical aid, which arrived too late, Mr. Winegarden living only 10 minutes after taking the dose.

Besides his widow, he leaves a family of eight children. He was 56 years of age.

WILL BE STATE BURIAL.

Montreal Offers to Honor Remains of Late Minister Prefontaine.

Montreal, Jan. 3.—A state funeral will be accorded the remains of the late Hon. Raymond Prefontaine. It is expected that the body will reach Montreal about Jan. 23. The remains will then be conveyed to the City Hall and lie in state for two days at the council chamber, after which requiem mass will be sung at Notre Dame, and the burial will take place at Cote Des Neiges Cemetery. That is, if the Government accepts the city's offer.

The city will make elaborate preparations to officially participate in the funeral. A special catafalque will be prepared and the chamber heavily draped.

TURNED OUT TO DIE.

Daughter's Inhuman Treatment Leads to Aged Woman's Death.

Charlottetown, P. E. I., Jan. 3.—The body of an aged woman, Mary McDonald, was found in a back field at St. Peter's.

It was brought out in the inquest that her daughter and son-in-law had turned her out and refused to admit her.

She then begged from house to house, and, having got astray, wandered about through the night till exhausted, then spread her shawl on the ground and lay down to die.

The jury brought in a verdict of death from exposure and strongly censured her daughter.

Students' Mad Act.

Caledonia, Minn., Jan. 3.—Matthew Styer, infatuated with Pearl Wheaton, daughter of S. H. Wheaton, a wealthy farmer, broke into the Wheaton home near here Monday night, shot and killed the girl, and then fatally wounded her sister Ruth, her mother and himself. Styer is a dental student at the University of Minnesota. Pearl Wheaton refused to marry him.

Missing; May Be Drowned.

Kingston, Jan. 3.—John Hynds, a carter at the gas works, has been missing since Saturday evening, when he left his work. Hynds, though not a drinking man, was considerably under the influence on Saturday. Hynds is about 50 years of age. Some think he has been drowned.

AFTER DIGESTION—WHAT ?

It's not enough to digest your food, and reduce it to pulp or liquid inside you, but it must also be properly absorbed, carried to the proper organs, filtered, purified, and carried by your blood to the various parts of your body, which are worn out and stand in need of repair.

This is a system of complicated machinery, engineering, chemistry and physics, before which all of man's most wonderful achievements since the world began, pale into insignificance.

And, when you come to think of it, next to the marvel of any complicated piece of mechanism itself, is the man who when it has broken down, can repair it and make it go again.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Really, the most marvellous achievement in the vast field of man's many-sided endeavors.

A perfect medicine, which never fails to cure, or set in running order again, the complicated mechanism of man's internal digestive arrangements.

The secret of the great success of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is simply this, that they have been prepared upon the firm foundation of the most thorough research into the real origin and cause of all disorders, due to the improper digestion and absorption of food.

Knowing the cause, further research led to the knowledge of how to relieve and cure.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are the only medicine founded upon certain scientific rules of treatment, which make success a certainty.

They penetrate into all the channels of your being, into the minutest arteries, the tiniest lymphatics, the faintest tracery of nerve tissue; and renew, build up, refresh, and restore to health every disorder which improper food, poor digestion, or incomplete absorption has caused, in any portion of your anatomy.

No need to consult a physician.

At the least sign of distress after eating, take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

On the least pain or discomfort, in stomach, liver, back, or bowels, take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

For any craving for improper food, continual hunger, continual thirst, or loss of appetite in greater or lesser form, take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

By following these simple rules, you will save yourself much pain, suffering and discomfort, and will add greatly to your span of life.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will make you live long and happily.

THE TROOPS' FIDELITY

Back of Russia's Confidence to Suppress Revolt.

Proving by Word and Act That Government Desires Repression of the "Reds" Only to Permit Convocation of the Representatives of the Nation at the Earliest Possible Moment—Moscow In Holiday Humor.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 3.—The Government's strongly worded announcement that it proposes to pursue to the bitter end the policy of putting down the "Reds," following on the heels of the crushing of the revolt at Moscow, demonstrates the confidence of Premier Witte's Government that it has the ability to complete the task it has undertaken. The main cause of this confidence is the fidelity displayed by the troops.

Ruthless War Against "Reds."

Despite the rigorous, ruthless fashion in which the war against the "Reds" is conducted the Government is taking every opportunity by word and act to try to prove to the public that the repression of the revolutionists does not involve the abandonment of the reform program, but that on the contrary their suppression is necessary in order that the new regime may be realized.

Premier Witte himself says: "All the energies of the Government are now consecrated to the work of making possible the convocation of the representatives of the nation at the earliest possible moment."

The Bourse has evidently adopted the Government view that the war against the revolutionists would be successful, all issues rising strongly to-day. Imperial fours touched 82.

To Prevent Railway Strike.

An imperial decree designed to prevent interference with the working of railroads was issued yesterday. It provides for the appointment of a special committee to control the services when occasion requires it. The committee is empowered to issue regulations, and to inflict penalties in case of their non-observance, to prohibit the holding of meetings, to close commercial and industrial establishments, to forbid the sale of newspapers, to dismiss officials and to take other steps of a similar nature. In places where martial law is proclaimed persons guilty of rebellion, high treason, the organization of strikes, incendiarism or the destruction of telegraph or telephone wires or railroad lines shall, the decree declares, be tried by court-martial.

Strike at Warsaw.

Warsaw, Jan. 3.—The employes of all the factories here are on strike.

The traffic on the Vistula railroad is partly interrupted. The socialists have destroyed two bridges, and are firing on the engineers.

A bridge has also been destroyed on the Vienna railroad. In the Government of Kielce the revolutionists have destroyed several Government buildings.

At Lodz some of the factories attempted to resume work, but the workmen were threatened by the strikers with revolvers.

At Sosnovice and Dombrova all the coal and iron miners are on strike.

MOSCOW TRANSFORMED.

Magical Change in 24 Hours Since the Collapse of the Revolt.

Moscow, Monday, Jan. 1 via St. Petersburg, Jan. 2.—Except for the numerous military patrols in the streets and the pillars of smoke lazily floating above the ruins of factories and houses in the Presna district, there is little to recall the nightmare of the past ten days. As if by magic, in 24 hours the appearance of the city has changed. The stores everywhere have been reopened and the streets are crowded with holiday shoppers, making belated purchases for the Russian Christmas, which, according to the Julian calendar, falls on Sunday.

The Presna district, however, presented another picture. There people by the hundreds who had been burned out were excitedly searching the ruins or bemoaning the loss of dear ones, while the police and troops continued their unceasing hunt for hidden revolutionists. A batch of Drujinists surrounded in a sugar factory in the suburbs during the night, and surrendered this morning when they found that further resistance was useless.

Still Some Fighting.

The only other warlike incident was a rear attack made by a body of Drujinists upon a detachment of troops stationed at a bridge with instructions to cover the work of the firemen. The soldiers when attacked turned right about face and fired a volley, killing three students and wounding several others.

The most important captures were made to-day—Volkoff and Malinoff, the chiefs of the fighting organization and members of the national revolutionary committee. The authorities are promising amnesty for information regarding the leaders, and the hiding places of arms, but only a few are betraying their comrades. It is understood that the prisoners will be tried by court martial.

At the Bourse to-day a prominent manufacturer estimated the damage done in the burned district at $5,000,000.

Counting the Cost.

It is impossible to ascertain the total losses resulting from the ten days' revolt, as many of the dead and wounded have not been reported at the hospitals, and some of the bodies were incinerated, but a personal tour of the hospitals shows there were 548 killed and 1,065 wounded. One hundred and seventy four of the injured taken to hospitals have since died. The troops lost nine killed, of whom two were officers and fifty-one wounded. Of the police force, ten were killed and fifteen wounded. Among the killed or wounded were many children, the returns generally showing that innocent persons suffered the heaviest.

There has been no fighting at the Prokharoff mills since Saturday. An eye-witness of the surrender of the Miss Canada Is to the Fore.

Prominent in the Discussion in the British Elections.

Candidates Follow Leaders in the Views Expressed—Where is the Offer of the Colonies—Lloyd-George Says Is Prosperous Because She Minds Her Own Affairs—An Irish M. P.'s Blast.

London, Jan. 4.—(C.A.P.)—As the campaign advances the colonies, especially Canada, are being brought more into the tariff controversy. Candidates of both parties, as well as the leaders, deal with the subject every night, but invariably echo the views of their leaders. The Liberals stand for free trade; the Unionists in most cases support the Chamberlain proposals. Some go no farther than to approve the colonial conference and promise to consider the matter.

A prominent point in the controversy is whether the colonies have made an offer. Where is the offer? Ask the Liberals. The tariff reformers in their campaign literature and their speeches cite the resolution of the colonial conference in 1902 and the speeches of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fielding then and since.

Each For Itself.

In reply, among the speeches last night was one by D. Lloyd-George, who said the Chamberlain policy and argument was that they should look after the interests of people 3,000 miles away, not of those at home. He thought each integral part of the empire should look after its own particular sphere, then combine to look after the empire. Why Canada was prosperous was because she looked after Canada.

Sir Gilbert Parker, addressing his constituents, said that in fifteen years the preference would give Britain from the colonies the 200,000,000 bushels of wheat needed. Canada produced half of that now. He affirmed that the colonies mistrusted the present Government, and Winston Churchill would aggravate them.

Farmers Pay No Rent.

T. W. Russell, Irish M. P., opposing the Chamberlain policy, said nothing was more certain than that Canada, with her boundless resources, could in a few years send all the corn and foodstuffs required by England. What did it matter to the farmer where it came from, if it came free? His answer to the request to give a preference to the Colonies was that the farmers of Canada paid no rent. Most of them got the lands free gratis from the state. Why should the Irish farmer, burdened by his rent, weighed down with taxation, and in receipt of no free grant of land, give a preference to such people?

Away With Embargo.

If Mr. Chamberlain had his way Canada would first demand that her store cattle be allowed to come in free. They had been kept out for years owing to the prevalence of danger from disease. Ruin absolutely complete would then be the fate of the Irish farmer.

The papers are likewise discussing this aspect of the election issues. The Conservative Morning Post points out that Germany discriminated against Canada owing to the British preference, and asks: Will the practical Englishman give help to Canada, or will they as economic theorists stand idly by while Germany punishes Canada because she is loyal to England?

The Cattle Embargo.

London, Jan. 4.—(C. A. P.)—Earl Carrington on Friday will receive a deputation concerning the removal of the embargo on Canadian cattle.

Australia Anxious.

London, Jan. 4.—(C. A. P.)—A Sydney telegram says that the result of the general election is anxiously awaited in Australia, because it will determine whether England is to come within the scope of the preferential policy to be framed by the Federal Parliament next session.

PUERTO PLATA ATTACKED.

A Number of Men Killed and Wounded on Both Sides.

Cape Haytien, Hayti, Jan. 4.—Advices received here early yesterday morning from Puerto Plata, on the northern coast of Santo Domingo, say that the troops of the fugitive President Morales, under the command of Gen. Demetrio Rodriguez, attacked Puerto Plata at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning. The fighting, which was severe, lasted until 5 o'clock in the evening, when the besieging force retired. A number of men were killed or wounded on both sides in the engagement, during which bayonets and swords were principally used.

A portion of the population of Peurto Plata has declared in favor of Morales and street fighting has occurred, the supporters of Morales shooting from the windows of their houses at the troops of Gen. Caceres, the temporary president of Santo Domingo.

Gen. Demetrio Rodriguez has announced that if his attack on Puerto Plata is successful he will proclaim himself a candidate for the presidency of Santo Domingo.

Twenty-Five Killed.

Washington, Jan. 4.—The American State Department has received this cablegram from Puerto Plata:

"Revolt has broken out here late today (Tuesday).

"Gen. Rodriguez fought his way into the town and then retired. Not less than twenty-five killed and many wounded. Gen. Cespedes holding fort, still fighting."

Hiller, at his home here. Hours of searching failed to find the weapon.

Lady Parker's Jewels Stolen.

London, Jan. 4.—(C. A. P.)—Lady Parker, while staying at the Carlston Hotel during the alterations to her town residence, Carlton House Terrace, was robbed of a quantity of jewelry. Regina Election.

The recount in the Regina election for the Saskatchewan Legislature has resulted in a majority of three for the Grit candidate. The means by which this was accomplished is not new to the electors of this section of the country. H. W. Laird, Provincial Rights candidate for Regina City, charges the machine in that city with ballot switching previous to the recount just concluded there. He is appealing to the King's Bench of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Laird said, in an interview, that the Regina City Hall box was stuffed with Bole ballots. His estimate as to the way each of the ten polls would turn was shown to the Liberals present at the recount before the proceedings began, and was afterward consulted for comparison. In each case, excepting poll 5, his calculations were correct. In that division he expected thirteen, giving Bole twelve, the result was three for himself and 22 for Bole, indicating that ten of his ballots had been switched to the Government candidate. He has ten sworn affidavits of the men included in the 25, that they voted for him. He expresses determination to fight the case to the limit.

This is a repetition of what took place a few years ago in East Hastings. It was known that the Front of Thurlow had cast a good majority for the Conservative candidate, but to the surprise of every one when the ballots were counted the majority was found to be on the other side. On investigation it was found that the grossest frauds had been committed. A large majority of the electors of the division made affidavit that they had voted for the Conservative candidate.

Now it will be for the Scott Government, when the Legislature meets, to follow the example set them by the Ontario Legislature, under the guidance of the Mowat Government, vote down any and every proposition to investigate the wrongs which had been committed. Grit ballot box manipulators appear to be of the same class throughout the Dominion. Honest men will watch with some degree of interest the final result of this case.

The ratepayers of Guelph on Monday last decided to return to the old ward system of re-election of aldermen. In Brockville a proposition to abolish the ward system was defeated. Which would make it appear that many people object to the system of electing aldermen at large. It is not by any means sure that a by-law to return to the ward system would be defeated in this city. Many thinking people talk in favor of it. That any good would result therefrom is doubtful.

Talking the other evening, a gentleman who has for many years made a deep study of municipal affairs expressed himself forcibly in connection with the present system of managing civic utilities. The party in question expressed the opinion that, under the present system, it was no wonder that sometimes we hear complaints of matters being run in a slipshod way. There is no intention, in this connection, to cast any slurs on the gentlemen who, for years past, have acted as chairmen of different departments of the city's services.

That they have done their best, under, at times, trying circumstances, no one is going to deny. But the fact remain, most of these aldermen are busy men, with important business interests of their own to look after. They cannot be expected to give the time to their civic duties that is required, and least of all can they be expected to do so for nothing. The Intelligencer has always contended, and contends still, that the proper way to run civic utilities is to place them under the control of thoroughly competent men, and pay those men a salary. Then, if matters are not properly run, there is just room for complaint. This is a matter which demands, and should receive, the best attention of our citizens during the coming year.

A man from the country who went to the Louisville court house for a marriage license found the building afire. "Who cares for the court house?" he said. "I was told to get my license here and I want it. After that, let her burn.' And he got the license. Evidently there will be no misunderstanding about who is to obey in the new family. When he was told to do a thing he did it.

* * *

It appears now that the hope of the Scott Government in Saskatchewan did not rest wholly on the back districts. The Scott candidate in Regina has been declared elected by a majority of three. To accomplish this result a recount was necessary, and a sweeping change at one poll did the business. It seems that the officer who held this poll kept the ballot box in his possession for five days contrary to law. When the proceedings were completed it was found that three out of twenty-five ballots in the box were found to be marked for Laird, the Opposition candidate. The other twenty-two were for Bole. Since then ten of the electors whose votes were challenged at this poll have sworn that they marked their ballots for Laird. The transfer of these votes gave Bole his final majority. If this thing happened at the capital city, where there was some chance for the Provincial Righters to protect themselves, what a fine carnival of switching there must have been in the back districts, where the homestead inspectors could get in their work without molestation.

The American Kennel Club has drawn the line sharply against dogs bred in Canada for competition at the shows. Hereafter only dogs in the United States shall be allowed to compete. Canadian dogs will be barred except under special rules. It was also decided that puppies born in the United States of an imported parent shall not be eligible for competition unless the purchaser or owner is an American citizen. Is the American Kennel Club afraid that Canada's fine breeds of dogs would take most of the prizes, as its sheep did at the Chicago Live Stock Show? It may be just as well, after all, to keep the nationalities of such animals distinctive. Canadian canines can do very well without the hall mark of the American Kennel Club, so far as the market for pure bred stock is concerned. Scions from this country are to be found in nearly every prominent kennel of the Republic.

The tunnel under Behring Sea is to go right along under German and Russian auspices. It is the confident expectation that in due time one may take a railway ticket in any part of Canada straight through to St. Petersburg. That time may be delayed by events present and impending in Russia, however. It is easy to understand why the German Emperor should find satisfaction in a negotiation of this character and be willing to surround it with all the forms and ceremonies of official sanction; but for the present his Imperial Majesty of Russia has a number of things to think about, which, if not more important, are somewhat more exigent.

Well, "perhaps we will be able to accommodate him further if he "doesn't behave himself." Judging from the opposition and abuse he received from the Toronto "evening papers" during the mayoralty campaign, and the answer given by the electors to them, we would recommend to Mr. Coatsworth the courting during the coming twelve months of their continued opposition and abuse.

CAPT. VANDERVOORT DEAD.

NATIVE OF HASTINGS COUNTY—WAS ACTIVE IN FENIAN RAID.

Toronto, Jan. 4.—The death occurred at about 7.10 last evening at his residence, 215 Jarvis street, of Captain B. H. Vandervoort, in his seventy-fourth year. Captain Vandervoort was born in Hastings county, but came to Toronto about twenty-five years ago, and had been living in retirement here. At the time of the Fenian troubles in 1870 Captain Vandervoort raised a company of volunteers. He was for some years Capt. of a company in the 49th Hastings Rifles. Deceased came of an old United Empire Loyalist family, and during the latter part of his life was a prominent Conservative and an intimate friend of the late Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Mackenzie Bowell, having attended the military examination at Kingston with the latter. He was a Mason and an Orangeman.

Captain Vandervoort leaves a widow and four sons—Dr. Vandervoort, of Deseronto; M. P. Vandervoort, barrister; J. W., with Lyman Bros., and J. L., veterinary surgeon, all of Toronto, and a daughter, Mrs. Bein. In religion he was a Methodist. The funeral will take place at 2.30 on Friday afternoon from the chapel of D. Stone, 385 Yonge street, to Mount Pleasant cemetery.

Literary Notes.

CANADA AND THE PHILIPPINES.

(From January Canadian Magazine.)

Canada is interested in noting how the United States governs the Philippines. It gives an indication of their ability to work in new spheres. One of their faults is excessive patriotism. For example: When the United States people arrived at Manila they found several British firms established there, with large fleets of steam launches and barges with which to discharge the large ocean steamers lying in the bay. The liberty-loving American at once announced that only boats flying the American flag and of American registry could carry on business in that harbor. The consequence was that the British firms had to sell out or appear to sell out to Philippinos and have their vessels registered in the names of Columbia's yellow citizens. At the City of Victoria, on the Island of Hong Kong, six hundred miles away, there are American firms with American launches flying the United States flag and carrying on exactly the same business under the protection of Great Britain. The contrast is remarkable. Moreover, no British subject is allowed to own agricultural, or mining lands, and these, too, have had to be registered in the names of Philippinos. The object lesson will not be lost on Canada.

All is not going smoothly in the governing of those Islands. One native Governor is said to have made a strong protest against the "grafters" and "virtue despoilers" from the United States. As a consequence, President Roosevelt is likely to make some early changes in both the methods and the men. Industrially and commercially, the Americans have done well, but morally they are having an evil influence in Manila and other large towns. A people whose gods are money and licentiousness cannot but expect to be criticized by nations who have still a little faith in culture, religion and virtuous living.

Kramer-Armstrong Nuptials.

The Kingston Whig gives the following account of a wedding in which Belleville people were interested:

While the first Wednesday of the New Year of 1906 has taken from Canada, it has given to her sister across the line, most generously, for, this morning, at half-past ten, quietly, at the home of the bride's father, D. F. Armstrong, Johnston street, his second daughter, Miss Lottie Irene, became the wife of Carl B. Kramer, of Dansville, N.Y. The wedding was a very quiet one, with no bridesmaid or groomsman, and only relations and a few close friends were present. Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Burrows were here from Belleville, with their baby, the bride's niece, Miss Irene Alexandra Burrows, who was a wee bit too small to be anything more in the wedding party than the centre of loving admiration, in her pretty frock. Her mother, Mrs. Burrows, wore fawn basket cloth, over blue taffeta, and Mrs. D. F. Armstrong was gowned in black net over black taffeta, with white lace upon the corsage.

Mr. Kramer, whom we all congratulate, has taken his wife off to Toronto and Buffalo and other western points, for a wedding trip, and then they will take up house in Dansville, one of the prettiest towns in New York State.

SIR JAMES WATSON'S OPINION.

He says that the commonest of all disorders, and one from which few escape, is catarrh. Sir James firmly believes in local treatment, which is best supplied by "Catarrhozone." No case of catarrh can exist where Catarrhozone is used; it is a miracle worker, relieves almost instantly and cures after other remedies fail. Other treatments can't reach the diseased parts like Catarrhozone, because it goes to the source of the trouble along with the air you breathe. Catarrhozone is free from cocaine, it leaves no bad after-effects; it is simply nature's own cure. Accept no substitute for Catarrhozone, which alone can cure catarrh.

GROWING IN POPULARITY.

The More People Know Newbro's Herpicide the Better They Like It.

The more it becomes known the better it is liked. One bottle sells two, and those two sell four. Newbro's Herpicide is what we are talking about. It cleans the scalp of all dandruff, and destroying the cause, a little germ or parasite, prevents the return of dandruff. As a hair dressing it is delightful, it ought to be found on every toilet table. It stops falling hair, and prevents baldness. It should be used occasionally, as a preventive to protect the scalp from a new invasion of the dandruff microbe.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

NEW LOCOMOTIVES.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY ORDERS EIGHTY-ONE.

Montreal, Jan. 3. — The Grand Trunk have decided to spend more than a million dollars by placing the following exceptionally large orders for motive power: Ten ten-wheeled passenger engines with the Locomotive & Machine Co., Montreal; ten ten-wheel passenger engines with the Locomotive Co., New York; fifteen Richmond compound consolidated engines, Locomotive & Machine Co., Montreal; six Richmond compound consolidated engines, Canada Foundry Co., Toronto; 40 Richmond compound consolidated engines, Locomotive & Machine Co., Montreal, making in all 81 locomotives, 20 of which are passenger, and 61 freight engines. As the former cost approximately $15,000 each and the latter $18,000 each, the total outlay represented amounts to $1,398,000. The locomotives when completed will be placed in service wherever needed on the system, though it has not yet been definitely decided where.

Popular Teacher Resigns.

Miss Luella Boselly, who has taught in Grier St. School for several years, has resigned and asked the Board of Education to release her at once. She gave such urgent reasons that the School Management Committee was led to unanimously agree to her request. Miss Lambly, of this city, now teaching in Stirling, was selected in Miss Boselly's place.

New Board Organized

A meeting of the Separate School Board was held last evening. After the winding-up of the business of last year the new Board for 1906 was organized. Mr. E. J. Butler was re-elected chairman, and Mr. Jas. Hanley re-elected secretary-treasurer.

HOW TO GET CONSUMPTION.

Ninety per cent. of the "lungers" contract consumption by allowing power of resistance to fall so low that a favorable condition for the development of the bacilli is provided. In a healthy system consumption can't take root. But where there is weakness and debility, there you find tuberculosis. For developing strength and building up the weak, nothing equals Ferrozone. It makes the blood nutritious and the nerves enduring. The way it converts food into nutriment, the appetite it gives is surprising. Just what the man verging on consumption needs—that's Ferrozone. If tired and weak don't put off. Fifty cents buys a box of fifty tablets—at all dealers.

Misquotations

Probably the most often misquoted of all the writers in English literature is Shakespeare. "Such stuff as dreams are made of," we frequently read. "Such stuff as dreams are made on" was what Shakespeare wrote in "The Tempest." "The long and the short of it," as we usually hear it, should be "the short and the long of it." There is "divinity," not "luck" in odd numbers. "Comparisons are odious" should be "Comparisons are odorous"—a distinction and a difference. In "Love's Labor Lost" we read, "for I am for whole volumes in folio," not "four whole volumes," as it is often written. "It is a wise father that knows his own child" is Shakespeare's version; the more familiar version is not his. "All that glisters is not gold." "The Merchant of Venice" says, not "glitters." "Seeking the bubble reputation even at the cannon's mouth" should be "in the cannon's mouth." "An ill-favored thing, sir, but mine own," not a "poor thing." "The web of our life is of a mingled yarn," not a "tangled yarn." "Hamlet," probably the most frequently quoted of all Shakespeare's plays, suffers most severely. For instance, Polonius advises his son Laertes, "The friends thou hast, and their adoption tried, Grapple them to thy soul with hoops of steel," not "hooks of steel." "Like quills upon the fretful porpentine" was what the ghost said to Hamlet; not "porcupine."—Utica Observer.

Wedding Bells.

PHILLIPS — WELBANKS.

A very quiet wedding took place at the residence of Mr. Hamilton Welbanks, Ameliasburg, last evening, when his second daughter, Miss Carrie, was united in marriage to James B. Phillips, of the same place. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. R. M. Pope, Methodist minister, in the presence of the immediate relatives of the happy couple. After a wedding supper, the newly married couple left for a wedding tour. On their return they will reside in Ameliasburg.

Died in Kingston.

Whig: Very sudden, indeed was the summons of death which came to Miss Martha Bailey, who lived with her sister, Mrs. John Walker, 220 Queen street, on New Year's afternoon. Though she had not been in good health for the past two years, she had partaken of her noon meal with her usual appetite, and had gone to her room for a rest; later she was found cold in death, heart failure being the cause. She was born in Ireland in 1832 and at the early age of twelve years became a member of the Anglican church, but when her family moved to Canada she joined the Methodist church. She lived in Guelph and Hamilton, but for forty years she has been a resident of Kingston. Few, perhaps, knew her intimately, because of her retiring nature, but those who knew her best, knew her as one who was always ready to help in time of need. She served her Saviour through ministrations to others. Surviving are, one sister, Mrs. John Walker, and one brother, William Bailey, of Belleville.

ORIGIN OF OUR LAWS.

Mr. Ross Speaks on Comparative Politics—Framers of B. N. A. Act Drew Inspiration From Washington.

The merits of the British constitution as manifested in the British North America Act and the sharper points of contrast between it and the constitution of the United States were forcibly clarified by Hon. Geo. W. Ross, LL.D., before the McMaster University Literary Society in Toronto recently. Speaking upon the theme, "A Perspective of Canadian History," Mr Ross treated his subject with the utmost lucidity and presented a veritable compendium of the comparative politics of the two greatest nations of the world.

Commenting upon the importance of studying Canadian history, as any other, in its proper setting, and evolving the processes by which it obtained its liberty and laws, Mr. Ross outlined the background of Canadian history. Briefly, this consisted in French influence with a British over-coloring, the former present to-day and for all time to come. Perfect liberty for both interests had come only by installments. The Quebec Act, the constitutional act, the act of union—each had been a progression in enlarging, and deepening love for British institutions.

No constitution, said Mr. Ross, was an original document. The British North America Act had a strong raison d'etre. That stumbling-block, equal French and English representation in Parliament, political incompatibility of Upper and Lower Canada, and the urgency of solidarity to the north of the American boundary line — all of these dictated its framing.

A Complete Constitution.

But how much of this act had been borrowed? Its constitution was far from original. In the first place, it was composite. In preamble it proposed to create a Federal union of provinces.

That was surely actuated by consultation of the framework of the United States. But how could a Federal Government obtain under British constitution? The British Government had been said to be a Government with a hereditary President, while that of the United States was a monarchy with an elected King. Ours was more democratic a government than theirs. Theirs was, in effect, a limited monarchy.

With the federal system of government as one model the British North America Act had enunciated individual control of the provinces over local affairs. Our local Government was not a side show, but a house of original legislation. "The King, by advice and consent of the Legislature, etc., its statutes began. A distribution of powers between the Local and Federal Governments also obtained with some variations as in the United States constitution.

The British side of the British North America Act was as strongly marked. Its cardinal principle was responsible government. The Canadian Senators, like the members of the British House of Lords, were appointed by the Crown and for life. The appointment of judges by the Crown was an outstanding mark of British influence. In the States these were, for the most part, elected, and it was truly a marvel how well they had dispensed justice under these circumstances.

Vested in the King

Pointing out other similarities, Mr. Ross said: "Some people think the Governor-General is the only connecting link between the King and his colony. Those who think so have forgotten this important point—that the execution of the Canadian constitution is vested in the King, and he can amend it in any part he pleases, through his representative. Still, we need have little fear on that score. The policy of Great Britain is that Canada be self-governing, and little disposition is shown to interfere in her affairs. The spirit that gave us our constitution is the very spirit that will keep it unimpaired. Let us cherish respect for those that gave it impulse. Let us revere the past and look back with love to the great figures that stand at the great portals of the past."

Hon. Justice Mathieu.

Hon. Justice Mathieu, Dean of the Law Faculty of Laval University, who administered a rebuke to the students of that university for their action in endeavoring to break up an evangelistic meeting conducted by a Protestant, Mr. A. Mage, in Montreal, is Puisne Judge of the Superior Court of Quebec. He was called to the Bar in 1865 and was appointed Sheriff of Richelieu in 1866. He resigned that office on becoming a candidate for the House of Commons in the general election of 1872, running in the Conservative interest, and sat for two years, being defeated in 1874. In the following year he was returned by acclamation to the Legislature and continued a member of that body till his elevation to the Bench in 1881. While at the Bar he published La Revue Legale. In 1892 he was appointed a member of a Royal Commission to make inquiry into certain matters concerning the good government of the Province of Quebec. He received the honorary degree of LL.D. from Laval University in 1886. In religion he is a Roman Catholic.

The O. A. C. President.

Mr. George Christie Creelman was recently elected president of the American Farmers' Association at the convention of the association at Washington. Mr. Creelman is president of the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph, and was born at Collingwood on May 9, 1869, and was educated at the Collegiate Institute there. He entered the Guelph Agricultural College in 1885, and took associated diplomas in 1887, and graduated B. S. A. at the University of Toronto in 1888. Since then he has taken special courses in biology at Cornell University, 1891; at the University of Michigan, 1892, and at Michigan Agricultural College, 1893. He was appointed assistant professor of biology at the Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College in 1889, and was elected professor of biology there in 1892. Mr. Creelman was largely instrumental in having botany introduced in the public schools of Mississippi.

PROFIT-SHARING.

Success of the System in Lancashire Woollen Mills.

The benefits to employer and employe of a system of profit-sharing was the topic upon which Mr. Theodore Cooke Taylor, member for the Southeast Division of Lancashire in the British House of Commons, addressed the members of the Canadian Club at Toronto recently.

Mr. Taylor inherited a woollen manufacturing business which had been in his family for four generations, and which employed 600 hands. He considered that his employes had certain claims upon him, and these claims he set about meeting by introducing the profit-sharing system. At the end of each year a proportion of the profits was given to the workers in the shape of £1 shares of stock, which carried no voting power, but upon which dividends were paid. Mr. Taylor said he had studied in every way to make identical the interests of capital and labor in the business.

After 13 years' experience with the profit-sharing system, he was completely satisfied with its success, and could recommend it as both scientific and sane. He would not advise those whose sole object was to make money to adopt such a system, for they would be disappointed. His own motive in instituting profit-sharing was altruistic, but he found he had not lost money by it, while he had gained immensely in happiness and comfort in his business.

The workpeople took more pride in their work and the success of the company, the best employes stayed with the establishment, and all the workers were learning lessons of thrift, conscientiousness, and intelligent interest in the business. Profit-sharing was not a panacea for all industrial evils; it could not make a bad business good, but it would make a good business better. It repaid the employer, and it dignified and glorified the employe's life.

If the young men of the upper classes in Great Britain, said Mr. Taylor, realized that they would be serving their country as well by taking an intelligent part in industrial progress as they do by taking up military service, a new form of patriotism would be developed. It was not from the rank and file that industrial reform would come. Labor unions and employers' associations were all right in their place, but they were antagonistic, and warfare was costly and wasteful. It was only by working together that progress was made. Profit-sharing was one of the simplest and surest means of establishing good-will between capital and labor.

BORING INTO THE NORTH.

Trail From St. John, B. C., to Lake Teslin, in the Yukon.

Lieut.-Col. Fred White, controller of the Northwest Mounted Police, has received a report from Superintendent Constantine, who is in charge of a party of Mounted Police entrusted with making a trail from St. John, B. C., to Lake Teslin, in the Yukon Territory.

The party, consisting of two officers, six non-commissioned officers, twenty-two constables and two special constables, left Fort Saskatchewan, March 17th last, and returned to St. John, B. C., to winter on the 25th of September, having built a wagon trail to the junction of Halfway and Cyprus Rivers, a distance of ninety-four miles. This is the hardest part of the undertaking. Steep hills had to be graded and streams bridged. This helped to delay the work, which was further hampered by heavy rains in August.

Work will be resumed early in the spring, and it is hoped before the following winter to reach a point a hundred miles northeast of Fort Graham, about 250 miles farther. Sylvester's Landing will be the winter quarters in 1906 and 1907. Superintendent Constantine states that the soil around Lesser Slave Lake is a sandy loam, but good wheat, barley and oats are raised in small quantities.

The Dominion Fishing Co. are established in the lake, and shipping fish at such a rate as to make the natives apprehensive for the future. On the lava benches and the north bank of Peace River good crops of wheat, oats and barley, together with vegetables, are grown. One farmer at Vermillion last year sold $3,000 worth of wheat to the Hudson's Bay Co., who have a flour mill there.

Octopus Puts Up Two Fights.

A recent special from Vancouver, B. C., says: Four fishermen had a fight with a huge devil fish at Bellingham, Puget Sound. Clarence Benadone, his brother Tom, William Brown, and Alva Barger were fishing for cod in a cove when Brown saw the octopus crawling on the bottom towards shore. It frightened him so that he went ashore. He told the others what he had seen and they went in pursuit.

The eyes of the monster gleamed in the water like diamonds. Its movements were watched until it got into three feet of water, and then the men set on it with long poles. It fought back and thrust its long arms out. The men succeeded in throwing a rope around one of the tentacles as it was raised out of the water, and the combined weight of the men was used in trying to get the octopus ashore.

However, they only succeeded in wrenching off the arm. A knife was tied to a pole and one of the monster's eyes was destroyed, but it kept up a game resistance. Finally it got away.

Two Indians in a canoe also report having been attacked. The devil fish was floating on top of the water when the canoe ran against it. Instantly an arm was thrown round the little craft. The redskins cut it off. No sooner was the one tentacle disabled than another was thrust out, but the Indians managed to evade it and get away.

Women's Ages.

Delicacy regarding woman's age seems to have dated back even to Biblical times, since out of all the women mentioned in the Old Testament, Sarah, wife of Abraham, is the only one whose years are given, possibly because she was past the doubtful age.

The First Army.

Egypt was the first country to possess an army.

A Curious Custom.

A curious custom still prevails at the coal pit on Hogmanay, in Scotland. The first man to come up the pit after his work is over is received with a shoveful of hot ashes, which, being prepared for, he dodges as best he can, while the last man gets a bucketful of cold water thrown at him.

Kisses In Finland.

A kiss on the lips is in Finland, even from a husband, a deadly insult.

No Sanatoria "more judiciously .. and economically" managed.

CANADIAN OPINION

DR. R. W. BRUCE SMITH, Inspector of Public Charities, Province of Ontario. Official Report:

"I was specially pleased with the attention paid to conduct the institution carefully and economically. The patients I found cheerful, happy and evidently well looked after by those in charge. I found particular attention is paid to provide nourishing dietary, carefully prepared, and the quality of the food served was excellent. This hospital depends for its maintenance largely upon the voluntary contributions of the public."

FOREIGN OPINION

DR. H. L. RUSSELL, President of the Advisory Board of the Wisconsin State Sanatorium:

"We have just recently returned from our eastern trip, in which we had an opportunity of inspecting practically all the sanatoria in the east that are designed for the treatment of tuberculosis. I am very glad to be able to write you that the very favorable impressions that we received at Gravenhurst have continued with us after this round trip. We have found no place in our travels in which money seems to have been expended more judiciously and economically than in connection with the two institutions that are under the control of the National Sanitarium Association."

The Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives

Increases the Accommodation by Twenty-five Beds . . .

This means twenty-five extra beds to be furnished; twenty-five additional patients to be fed every day (three regular meals and three lunches is the bill of fare daily); twenty-five extra patients to be cared for by physicians and nurses, calling for increase of staff.

The entire cost of management is increased one-third.

But so pressing are the calls of those on the waiting list, and increasingly urgent the new applications received each day, that the trustees have decided upon the step indicated, confident that the Canadian people will see that these new beds are furnished and maintained.

CORNAYLIUS HA-HA-HA - HANNIGAN

(Catholic Standard and Times.)

'Twas the godfather stuttered, or mayhap the priest;
But, be that as it may, it is certain, at least,
That the wan or the other was surely to blame
For presintin' the lad the quare twist to his name,
For there at the christ'nin',
Wid iv'ry wan list'nin',
Now didn't his Riverance, Father O'Flanigan,
Wid nervousness stam'rin',
Bechune the child's clam'rin',
Baptize it "Cornaylius Ha-Ha-Ha-Hannigan!"

Wid these words from the priest, shure, the cute little rogue
Up an' stopped his own mouth wid his chubby kithogue,
An' the dimples broke out an' proseded to chase
All the tears an' the frowns from his innocent face,
For, faix, he was afther
Absorbin' the laughter
Stuck into his name by good Father O'Flanigan!
Now that's the truth in it,
An' so from that minute
Shure, iv'ry wan called the lad "Ha-Ha-Ha-Hannigan."

Now, the ha! ha! ha!" stuck to him, close as his name,
For the sorra a tear could be drownin' the same,
that blissid day
But his gift o' the laughter would drive it away,
Nor a care iver touched him from
Wid jokin' and chaffin'
He niver stopped laughin',
Or if he did stop he immajiate began agin';
An' iv'ry wan hearin'
His laughter so cheerin',
Jisht jined in the mirth o' young "Ha-Ha-Ha-Hannigan."

Shure, the troubles o' life are so paltry and small
'Tis a pity we let thim disturb us at all.
There is niver a care but would l'ave us in p'ace,
If we'd only stand up an' jisht laugh in its face.
Faix, life were a pleasure
If all had the treasure
Conferred so unthinkin' by Father O'Flanigan;
If all could but borrow
That cure-all for sorrow
Possissed by "Cornaylius Ha-Ha-Ha-Hannigan!"

In all the large cities are heard echoes of the hard season endured by postal clerks, who had to work fourteen and fifteen hours a day handling Christmas mail. This is the usual condition each year, yet no consideration is shown the men in special pay or honorarium. In private employment such extraordinary overwork would be properly remembered.

• • •

A carefully compiled statement of the loss of life in the different late riots and insurrections in Russia makes the killed number 100,000 and places the value of property destroyed at $215,000,000. It would be safe to divide these figures by ten, and then the losses would probably be greatly exaggerated. The 15,000 persons said to have been slain at Moscow may perhaps be cut down to 150.

The South Africa investigating committee appointed by the Balfour Government has recommended the prosecution of the perpetrators of the war stores swindles. As the Montreal Gazette observes, it is fortunate for some Canadians that the emergency food steal had not come before an Imperial commission.

It will probably be mentioned as a surprising incident that a Baptist minister of St. Catherines, has decided to remain where he is at a salary of $1,300 instead of accepting a salary of $5,000 to go into the service of a financial concern. Yet, says an exchange, it is an insult to the clergy of the country to suggest that this minister has done anything exceptional. If such offers to ministers were common such refusals would also be ordinary incidents. Perhaps.

The nomination of Mr. Rufus Pope in the bye-election in Compton is hailed with satisfaction by his friends throughout the county. He represented the county in three Parliaments and was first defeated last year. Mr. Pope's father represented Compton from 1867 until his death in 1889, and was for a long time a member of the Conservative ministry. The son had become a leader in the party in the eastern townships, and the attack of the Government legions was concentrated on him. It will be again, but the Compton Conservatives have strong hopes of electing him.

TORNADO IN GEORGIA.

One Man Was Killed and Scores Seriously Injured.

Albany, Ga., Jan. 4.—A severe tornado passed over the western portion of this city at 10.30 p.m. yesterday. The air chamber of the Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. and many other buildings were destroyed.

One man was killed and scores were seriously injured. Ben Johnson, a negro employe of the chemical company, was killed instantly.

The track of the storm, about 75 yards wide, swept in a northwesterly course, leveling trees in its path, until it reached the residence district, when its course was changed for a few hundred yards. It carried away trees and even porticos from dwellings, but did not demolish a house.

On Washington street it turned northward, tearing down the sheds and acid warehouse of Georgia Cotton Oil Co., also blowing several freight cars from the tracks.

Iowa Snowbound.

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 4.—Snow, which has been falling for 24 hours, has blocked Iowa railroads and snow plows are working day and night to keep the lines open.

Shockingly Mangled.

Windsor, Jan. 4.—Mike Mulvahill, a well-known Windsor character, met a shocking death at Woodlee Tuesday night, about twenty miles from here. He was run over by a freight train in crossing the Michigan Central tracks, and was horribly mangled, his head being completely severed and both feet cut off at the ankles.

McGill Principal Retires.

Montreal, Jan. 4.—At the age of 73, and with a record of forty-three years' service to his credit, Dr. S. P. Robins, principal of McGill Normal School, announced his resignation yesterday. He has acted in the capacity of principal for twenty-five years.

Election Protests.

Toronto, Jan. 4.—To-day Justices Street and Teetzel will hear the Norfolk and North Grey election protests against Telford and Tisdale. It is not thought that either protest will be pushed.

ROJY'S VODKA DREAM.

Serious Charge of Russian Admiral Against British Fleet—An Explanation Is Demanded.

ADMIRAL ROJESTVENSKY.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 4.—The remarkable allegation that the British fleet was held in readiness to destroy the Russian fleet if the battle of the Sea of Japan had gone in the Russians' favor is made by Admiral Rojestvensky in a letter published in the Novoe Vremya yesterday, with the permission of the Minister of Marine.

Referring to the absolute secrecy of Admiral Togo in regard to the disposition of his forces, Rojestvensky declares, "this was known even to the admiral of the British fleet allied with the Japanese, who concentrated his forces at Wei-Hai-Wei, in expectation of receiving an order to annihilate the Russian fleet if this, the final object of Great Britain, was beyond the power of the Japanese."

Should Have Won.

From what Admiral Rojestvensky says of his tactics in the battle of the Sea of Japan, published in The Novoe Vremya yesterday, the reader is almost convinced that the Russian commander outmanoeuvred Admiral Togo at every point and was himself the real victor. He declares he knew Admiral Togo's exact whereabouts two days before the battle, made his dispositions accordingly and entered the fight with his eyes open.

The admiral only casually states in the course of his letter that the Minister of Marine is investigating the causes of the catastrophe in order to determine whether the commander shall be court-martialled for the loss of the fleet.

Subject of Representations.

The charge that the British admiral concentrated his ships at Wai-Hai-Wei, expecting to receive an order to destroy the Russians in the event of Admiral Togo proving unequal to the task, has aroused a considerable sensation in diplomatic circles, all the more so as Admiral Rojestvensky's letter was published with the permission of the Minister of Marine, and no doubt is entertained that it will be the subject of diplomatic representations to Great Britain.

Britain Asks Explanation.

Mr. Spring-Rice, the British charge d'affaires, without waiting for instructions from his Government, demanded an explanation from Foreign Minister Lamsdorff yesterday of the statement contained in the admiral's letter.

It was learned yesterday from an authoritative source that the Russian Government has been without communication with Gen. Linevitch for almost five weeks.

Creates Astonishment.

London, Jan. 4.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Daily Telegraph says he has had a conversation with Count Witte, in which the Premier stated that the Emperor and his Ministers alike were astonished at Admiral Rojestvensky's allegation.

Count Witte said he was taking measures to clear up the matter, but he added it was self-evident that no level-headed man in Russia would attach importance to the allegation which the Minister of Marine, he said, had not noticed until it appeared in print.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 4.—The general meeting of the Workmen's Council and the representatives of the proletariat organizations, which was held across the Finnish border, lasted thirty-six hours, adjourning only one hour ago. The practical result of the meeting was a confession that the Government had proved too strong.

Asylum Revenues Increase.

Toronto, Jan. 4.—The revenues from paying patients in the various asylums in Ontario for the months of September, October, November and December, 1905, amounted to $66,712.15, as compared with $36,786.08 in 1904, an increase of $29,926.43. The arrears received for the same period as a result of notices sent out amount to $29,938.67.

Almost 100, She Voted.

Kingston, Jan. 4.—Among the voters on Monday was Mrs. James Maguire, almost a centenarian, and probably the oldest voter on that day in Canada.

Victoria, B. C., Jan. 4.—A big smelter strike is reported from the Deadwood and Phoenix camps. Five hundred men are involved.

SAILING OF DOMINION.

Will Be at Cherbourg Next Friday for the Dead Minister.

London, Jan. 4.—(C. A. P.)—Present arrangements are for the battleship Dominion to leave Chatham on Wednesday next, so as to allow ample time to reach Cherbourg on Friday morning. A special train will convey the remains of Mr. Prefontaine from Paris to Cherbourg, where, on arrival, a detachment of marines and detachments of sailors will meet the train. The battleships in the harbor will, it is thought, make a demonstration of sympathy.

Hon. Mr. Lemieux will return to Canada on the battleship Dominion, and a London firm has been entrusted with the preparation of the mourning decorations for the battleship, and the erection of a mortuary on board the Dominion, which is likely to arrive in Halifax on Jan. 22.

Goodman, who is a middle-aged Hebrew, appeared before Magistrate Denison yesterday and was arraigned on two charges of receiving and retaining stolen property, but at the request of Mr. T. C. Robinette, K. C., counsel for the prisoner, he did not elect or plead, and was remanded until Friday.

The Lust of Hate

BY GUY BOOTHBY

Author of "A Beautiful White Devil," "A Bid For Fortune," "The Marriage of Esther," "Dr. Nikola," Etc., Etc.

that it was already beginning to show decided signs of wear. Mr. Maybourne had done well in asking me to see to her comfort. I told myself I would begin my preparations at once, and it should go hard with me if she were not pleased with my arrangements when she arrived.

While I was mentally running my eye over what I should do, Mackinnon, my big Scotch overseer, came up from the shaft's mouth to where I stood, and reported that some timbering which I had been hurrying forward was ready for inspection. After we had visited it and I had signified my approval, I informed him of our employer's contemplated visit, and wound up by saying that his daughter would accompany him. He shook his head solemnly when he heard this.

"A foolish thing," he said, in his slow, matter-of fact way, "a vera foolish thing. This country's nae fit for a lady at present, as Mr. Maybourne kens well eno'. An' what's more, there'll be trouble among the boys (natives) before vera long. He'd best be out of it."

"My dear fellow," I said, a little testily I fear, for I did not care to hear him throw cold water on Mr. Maybourne's visit in this fashion, "you're always thinking the natives are going to give trouble, but you must confess that what you prophesy never comes off."

He shook his head more sagely than before.

"Ye can say what ye please," he said, "I'm nae settin' up for a prophet, but I canna help but see what's put plain before my eyes. As the proverb says—'Forewarned is forearmed.' There's been trouble an' discontent all through this country-side form onths past, an' if Mr. Maybourne brings his daughter up here—well, he'll have to run the risk of mischief happenin' to the lass. It's no business o' mine, however. As the proverb says—'Let the wilful gang their own gait.'"

Accustomed as he was to look on the gloomy side of things, I could not but remember that he had been in the country a longer time than I had, and that he had also had a better experience of the treacherous Matabele than I could boast.

"In your opinion, then," I said, "I had better endeavor to dissuade Mr. Maybourne from coming up?"

"Nae! Nae! I'm na' sayin' that at all. Let him come by all means since he's set on it. But I'm not going to say I think he's wise in bringing the girl."

With this ambiguous answer I had to be content. I must confess, however, that I went back to the house feeling a little uneasy in my mind. Ought I to write and warn Mr. Maybourne, or should I leave the matter to chance? As I did not intend to send off my mail until the following day, I determined to sleep on it.

In the morning I discovered that my fears had entirely vanished. The boys we employed were going about their duties in much the same manner as usual, and the half-dozen natives who had come in during the course of the day in the hope of obtaining employment, seemed so peaceably inclined that I felt compelled to dismiss Mackinnon's suspicions from my mind as groundless, and determined on no account to alarm my friends in such needlessly silly fashion.

How well I remember Mr. and Miss Maybourne's arrival! It was on a Wednesday, exactly three weeks after my conversation with Mackinnon just recorded, that a boy appeared with a note from the old gentleman to me. It was written from the township, and stated that they had got so far and would be with me during the afternoon. From that time forward I examined my preparations with a critical eye, discussed the meals with the cook to make sure that he had not forgotten a single particular, drilled my servants in their duties until I had brought them as near perfection as it was possible for me to get them, and in one way and another fussed about generally until it was time for my guests to arrive. I had fitted up my own bedroom for Miss Maybourne, and made it as comfortable as the limited means at my disposal would allow. Her father would occupy the overseer's room, that individual sharing a tent with me at the back.

The sun was just sinking to his rest below the horizon when I espied a cloud of dust on the western veldt. Little by little it grew larger until we could distinctly make out a buggy drawn by a pair of horses. It was traveling at a high rate of speed, and before many minutes were over would be with us. As I watched it my heart began to beat so tumultuously that it seemed as if those around me could not fail to hear it. In the vehicle now approaching was the woman I loved, the woman whom I had made up my mind I should never see again.

Five minutes later the horses had pulled up opposite my verandah and I had shaken hands with my guests and was assisting Agnes to alight. Never before had I seen her look so lovely. She seemed quite to have recovered from the horrors of the shipwreck, and looked even stronger than when I had first seen her on the deck of the Fiji Princess, the day we had left Southampton. She greeted me with a fine show of cordiality, but under it it was easy to see that she was as nervous as myself. Having handed the horses and buggy over to a couple of my boys, I led my guests into the house I had prepared for them. Evidently they had come with the intention of being pleased, for they expressed themselves as surprised and delighted with every arrangement I had made for their comfort. It was a merry party, I can assure you, that sat down to the evening meal that night—so merry, indeed, that under the influence of Agnes' manner even Mackinnon forgot himself and ceased to prophesy ruin and desolation.

When the meal was finished we adjourned to the verandah and lit our pipes. The evening was delightfully cool after the heat of the day, and overhead the stars twinkled in the firmament of heaven like countless lamps, lighting up the sombre veldt till we could see the shadowy outline of trees miles away. The evening breeze rustled the long grass, and across the square the figure of our cook could just be seen, outlined against the ruddy glow of the fire in the hut behind him. How happy I was I must leave you to guess. From where I sat I could catch a glimpse of my darling's face, and see the gleam of her rings as her hand rested on the arm of her chair. The memory of the awful time we had spent together on the island, and in the open boat, came back to me with a feeling that was half pleasure, half pain. When I realized that I was entertaining them in my abode in Rhodesia, it seemed scarcely possible that we could be the same people.

Towards the end of the evening, Mr. Maybourne made an excuse and went into the house, leaving us together. Mackinnon had long since departed. When we were alone, Agnes leant a little forward in her chair and said:

"Are you pleased to see me, Gilbert?"

"More pleased than I can tell you," I answered, truthfully. "But you must not ask me if I think you were wise to come."

"I can see that you think I was not," she continued. "But how little you understand my motives. I could not ——"

Thinking that perhaps she had said too much, she checked herself suddenly, and for a little while did not speak again. When she did, it was only about the loneliness of my life on the mine, and such like trivial matters. Illogical as men are, though I had hoped, for both our sakes, that she would not venture again on such delicate ground as we had traversed before we said good-bye, I could not help a little sensation of disappointment when she acted up to my advice. I was still more piqued when a little later she stated that she felt tired, and holding out her hand, bade me "good-night," and went to her room.

Here I can only give utterance to a remark which, I am told, is as old as the hills—and that is, how little we men understand the apposite sex. From that night forward, for the first three or four days of her visit, Agnes' manner towards me was as friendly as of old, but I noticed that she made but small difference between her treatment of Mackinnon and the way in which she behaved towards myself. This was more than I could bear, and in consequence my own behavior towards her changed. I found myself bringing every bit of ingenuity I possessed to bear on an attempt to win her back to the old state. But it was in vain! Whenever I found an opportunity, and hinted at my love for her, she invariably changed the conversation into such a channel that all my intentions were frustrated. In consequence, I exerted myself the more to please until my passion must have been plain to everyone about the place. Prudence, honor, everything that separated me from her was likely to be thrown to the winds. My infatuation for Agnes Maybourne had grown to such a pitch that without her I felt that I could not go on living.

One day, a little more than a week after their arrival, it was my good fortune to accompany her on a riding excursion to a waterfall in the hills, distant some seven or eight miles from the mine. On the way she rallied me playfully on what she called "my unusual quietness." This was more than I could stand, and I determined, as soon as I could find a convenient opportunity, to test my fate and have it settled for good and all.

On reaching our destination, we tied our horses, by their reins, to a tree at the foot of the hill, and climbed up to the falls we had ridden over to explore. After the first impression, created by the wild grandeur of the scene, had passed, I endeavored to make the opportunity I wanted.

"How strangely little circumstances recall the past. What place does that remind you of?" I asked, pointing to the rocky hill on the other side of the fall.

"Of a good many," she answered, a little artfully, I'm afraid. "I cannot say that it reminds me of one more than another. All things considered, there is a great sameness in South African scenery."

Cleverly as she attempted to turn my question off, I was not to be balked so easily.

"Though the likeness has evidently not impressed you, it reminds me very much of Salvage Island," I said, drawing a step closer to her side. "Halfway up that hill one might well expect to find the plateau and the cave."

"Oh, why do you speak to me of that awful cave," she said, with a shudder; "though I try to forget it, it always gives me a nightmare."

"I am sorry I recalled it to your memory, then," I answered. "I think in spite of the way you have behaved towards me lately, Agnes, you are aware that I would not give you pain for anything. Do you know that?"

As I put this question to her, I looked into her face. She dropped her eyes and whispered "Yes."

Emboldened by my success I resolved to push my fate still further.

"Agnes," I said, "I have been thinking over what I am going to say to you now for some days past, and I believe I am doing right. I want to tell you the story of my life, and then to ask you a question that will decide the happiness of the rest of it. I want you to listen and, when I have done, answer me from the bottom of your heart. Whatever you say I will abide by."

She looked up at me with a startled expression on her face.

"I will listen," she said, "and whatever question you ask I will answer. But think first, Gilbert; do you really wish me to know your secret?"

"God knows I have as good reasons for wishing you to know as any man could have," I answered. "I can trust you as I can trust no one else in the world. I wish you to hear and judge me. Whatever you say, I will do and abide by it."

She put her little hand in mine, and having done so, seated herself on a boulder. Then, after a little pause, she bade me tell her all.

"In the first place," I said, "I must make a confession that may surprise you My name is not Wrexford, as I have so long led you to suppose. It is Pennethorne. My father was Sir Anthony Pennethorne, of Polton-Penna, in Cornwall. I was educated at Eton and Oxford; and, as you will now see, I got no good from either. After a college scrape, the blame for which was thrown upon me, my father turned me out of England with a portion of my inheritance. I went to Australia, where I tried my hand at all sorts of employment, gold mining among the number. Details of my life out there, with one exception, would not interest you; so I will get on to the great catastrophe, the results of which were taking me out of England when I first met you. Up to this time ill-luck had constantly pursued me, and I had even known the direst poverty. You may imagine, therefore, what my feeling were when an old friend, a man with whom I had been partner on many goldfields, told me of a place which he had discovered where, he said, there were prospects of sufficient gold to make us both millionaires half a dozen times over. He, poor fellow, was dying at the time, but he left his secret to me, bidding me take immediate advantage of it. True to my promise, I intended to set off to the place he had found as soon as he was buried, and having discovered it, to apply to Government for right to mine there, but fate was against me, and I was taken seriously ill. For weeks I hovered between life and death. When I recovered I saddled my horse, and, dreaming of all I was going to accomplish with my wealth, when I had obtained it, made my way across country by the chart he had given me. When I arrived at the spot it was only to learn that my greatest enemy in the world, a man who hated me as much as I did him, had filched my secret from me in my delirium, and had appropriated the mine. You cannot imagine my disappointment. I wanted money so badly, and I had counted so much on obtaining this, that I had almost come to believe myself possessed of it. What need to tell the rest? He became enormously rich, and returned to England. In the meantime my father had died, leaving me a sufficient sum, when carefully invested, to just keep me alive. With this to help me I followed my enemy home, resolved, if ever a chance arose, to revenge myself upon him When I arrived I saw his name everywhere. I found his wealth, his generosity, his success in life, extolled in every paper I picked up; while I, from whom he had stolen that which gave him his power, had barely sufficient to keep me out of the workhouse. You must understand that I had been seriously ill, for the second time, just before I left Australia, and perhaps for this reason—but more so, I believe, on account of the great disappointment to which I had been subjected—I began to brood over my wrongs by day and night, and pine for revenge. I could not eat or sleep for it. Remember, I do not say this in any way to excuse myself, but simply to show you that my mind was undoubtedly not quite itself at the time. At any rate, to such a pitch of hatred did I at length work myself that it was as much as I could do to prevent myself from laying violent hands upon my enemy when I saw him in the public street. After I had been entertaining the devil in this fashion for longer than was good for me, he in return sent one of his satellites to complete my ruin. That man—such a man as you could not picture to yourself—put before me a scheme for getting even with my enemy, so devilish that at first I could hardly believe he was in earnest. So insiduously did he tempt me, playing upon my hatred and increasing my desire for revenge, that at last I fell into his net as completely as he could wish. The means were immediately found for getting my victim into my clutches, and then nothing remained but to work out the hideous crime that had been planned for me."

I stopped for a moment and looked at Agnes, who was cowering with her face in her hands. She did not speak, so I continued my gruesome tale.

"I need not tell you how I got the man in my power, nor in what manner it was arranged that I should kill him. I will content myself with telling you that when I had got him, and could have killed him by lifting my little finger, difficult as you may find it to believe it, I saw your face before me imploring me to repent. There and then I determined to throw off my disguise, to let him know who I was, and what I intended to do to him; after that I would have bidden him go, and have left him to his own conscience. But, to my horror, when I got down from my box—for I was driving him in a cab—I found that in some devilish fashion my work had been anticipated for me—the man was dead, killed by the same fatal agency that had been given to me to do the deed. Try for one moment to imagine my position. In one instant I stood in that quiet London street, stamped with the brand of cain. Never again could I be like my fellow men. Henceforth I must know myself for what I was—a murderer, whose proper end should be the gallows. In an agony of terror I got rid of the body—left it in the street in fact—and fled for my very life. While the town was still abed and asleep I tramped away into the country, and at a suburban station caught the earliest train to Southampton. On arrival there I booked my passage in the Fiji Princess for South Africa, and went on board. The rest you know. Now, Agnes, that you have heard my wretched story, you can see for yourself why I was so desirous of getting out of civilization as quickly as possible. You can judge for yourself whether I was right or wrong in refusing to allow you to say you loved me. God knows you cannot judge me more harshly than I judge myself.

She looked up at me with terror-stricken eyes.

"But you did not mean to kill the man," she cried. "You repented—you said so just now yourself.

"If it had not been for me the man would not have died," I answered. "No, no! Agnes, you cannot make me out innocent of his death, however hard you try."

A look of fresh life darted into her face. It was as if she had been struck by a brilliant idea that might mean my salvation.

"But how do you know that you killed the man?" she asked. "Are you quite certain that he was dead when you looked at him?"

"Quite certain," I answered. "I examined him most carefully. Besides, I have made enquiries since and elicited the fact that he has never been seen or heard of since that awful night There have been advertisements in the papers offering rewards for any information concerning him."

She did not reply to this, only sat and rocked herself to and fro, her face once more covered in her hands. I knelt beside her, but did not dare, for very shame, to attempt to comfort her.

"Agnes," I said, "speak to me. If it only be to say how much you loathe me. Your silence cuts me to the heart. Speak to me, tell me my fate, advise me as to what I shall do. I swear by God that whatever you tell me, that I will do without questioning or comment."

Still she did not answer. When I saw this I rose to my feet, and in my agony must have turned a little from her. This action evidently decided her, for she sprang up from the boulder on which she had hitherto been sitting, and, with a choking cry, fell into my arms and sobbed upon my shoulder.

"Gilbert," she moaned, 'come what may, I believe in you. Nothing shall ever convince me that you would have killed the man who so cruelly wronged you. You hated him; you longed to be revenged on him; but you never would have murdered him when it came to the point."

In answer I drew her closer to me.

"Agnes, my good angel," I said; what can I say to you for the comfort you give me? You have put fresh life into me. If only you believe in me, what do I care for the world? Heaven knows I did not mean to kill the man—but still the fact remains that he is dead, and through my agency. Though morally I am innocent, the law would certainly hold me guilty."

"You do not mean to say that the police will take you?" she cried, starting away from me with a gesture of horror.

"If I am suspected, there can be no doubt that they wil do so. How it happens that I have not been arrested ere this I cannot imagine."

"But, Gilbert, you must not let them find you. You must go away—you must hide yourself."

"It would be no use, they would find me sooner or later, wherever I went."

"Oh, what can you do then? Come what may I shall not let you be taken. Oh God, I could not bear that."

She glanced wildly round, as if she fancied the minions of the law might already be on my track. I endeavored to soothe her, but in vain. She was thoroughly frightened, and nothing I could say or do would convince her that I was not in immediate danger. At last, to try and bring her to a reasonable frame of mind, I adopted other tactics.

"But, Agnes, we are missing one point that is of vital importance," I said. "Knowing what I am, henceforward everything must be over between us."

"No, no! she cried, with a sudden change of front. "On the other hand, you have shown me that there is more reason than ever that I should love you. If you are in danger, this is the time for me to prove what my affection is worth. Do you value my love so lightly that you deem it only fit for fair weather? When the world is against you, you can see who are your friends."

"God bless you, darling," I said, kissing her sweet upturned face. "You know that there is no one in this world so much to me as you; and for that very reason I cannot consent to link your fate with such a terrible one as mine."

"Gilbert," she said, "if you repulse me now you will make me miserable for life. Oh, why must I plead so hard with you?" Cannot you see that I am in earnest when I say I wish to share your danger with you?"

I was silent for a few moments. In what way could I make her see how base a thing it would be on my part to pull her down into the maelstrom of misery that might any day draw me to my doom? At last an idea occurred to me.

"Agnes," I said, "will you agree to a compromise? Will you promise me to take a year to think it over? If at the end of that time I am at liberty I will go to your father, tell him my story as I have to-day told it to you, and, if he will still have anything to do with me, ask him for your hand. By that time I shall probably know my fate, you will be able to see things more clearly, and I shall not feel that I have taken advantage of your love and sympathy."

"But I want to be with you and to help you now."

"Believe me, you can help me best by agreeing to my proposal. Will you make me happy by consenting to what I wish?"

LIFE WORTH LIVING.

Appreciation of Duty By Tom Watson, Candidate For U. S. Presidency.

"The life which is truly worth living," says Tom Watson in his magazine for August, "has not always led to ease, worldly success, happiness and earthly honors.

"Too often the man who consecrates himself to the nobler purpose has been what the world called a failure, has been led away into captivity by pitiless foes, has died at the stake amid tortures.

"But, like the Indian brave, such a warrior has never feared the stake nor the tortures.

"Like the Indian brave, such a warrior despises those who torment him, and amid the flames in which he dies his death song rises to thrill the world:

"'I have fought a good fight. Never once did I lower my flag. To the Right, as God gave me to see it. It was always true. Not once did I bend the knee to the Wrong, consciously.

"'All my life I fought for the betterment of humanity. Here are the scars to show it. Defeat has rolled over me, but not dishonor.

"'To no man or woman have I knowingly done hurt; if I have not done some good it is not because I failed to try.

"'On millions of my fellow-men I found the chains of a bondage more galling than slavery; I did my utmost to show them how to be free.

"'Millions I found hungry, naked, homeless; I did my best to point the way out of Poverty into plenty.

"'I found the old foes of the human race winning ground day by day; the rich man grinding the face of the poor! the tyrant using Law and Government to rob the people; the priest again spreading the cloud of ignorant Faith over the sunny fields of God-given Reason; the Church and the State once more uniting to plunder the human race and to divide the spoil.

"'Against these ancient devourers of men, against these relentless foes of the freedom and development of humanity, I raised the cry of defiance, fought them with all the power that was within me, doing what man might do to arouse my fellow-man to a sense of the peril which was coming upon him.

"'Yea! I have fought a good fight. Here are the wounds. No white flag flew over my citadel. It held out to the last.

"'Loneliness pained but did not subdue me; prosecution saddened but did not conquer me; friends deserted me and foes multiplied, but I was not utterly cast down. The sacred torch of human progress I held aloft, even as better men had done in the ages of the past.

"'Its light will not fail. Others will seize upon it and bear it on. Some day the night will pass, and the human race will no longer grope in gloom.

"'In that my faith is strong. For that I have never ceased to watch and pray and work.

"'And now my part is done. The shadows gather about me—but I am not afraid. The voices from the darkness call for me—and without regret I go.

"'Duty grants me her honorable discharge; Conscience acquits me of her service; the boon of Peace Within settles upon me with the caress of infinite calm—and so I pass down into the turning of the darkened road, with no pang or remorse in my heart and no chill of doubt or fear on my soul.'

"Thus one will have lived the life worth living, whether he dwells in log hut or stately mansion.

"While it is yet day and he can work, he works, unhasting and unresting. At the loom of time he toils persistently, weaving into his life-garment threads of gold.

"The creed of such a man is an inspiration; his life a call to duty. His tomb becomes an altar; his death a song of triumph. Neither rust nor time shall dim the splendor of his effort; and the influence of his thought and his example shall not be lost upon the world as long as Duty has a devotee and Truth a holy shrine."

The Real "Little Breeches."

The hero of John Hay's celebrated poem, "Little Breeches," is a son of Solomon Van Scoy, of New Virginia, Iowa, and is now living near Letts, Iowa, a husky farmer. Laren Talbott, of Sioux City, a cousin, recalls the incident upon which the poem was based, and tells about it as follows:—"My cousin was about 4 years old when he broke into fame. Van Scoy was driving a spirited team near New Virginia one day, and when he got out of the wagon for a minute the team dashed away with the boy in the wagon. The horses went over ditches, fences and brush piles. Finally the wagon was overturned, and the little fellow was thrown head first into a drove of sheep. The father and friends, running frantically in an effort to catch the runaways, saw the accident to the boy. The father rushed to the spot, fearing to find the little fellow dead, but on the approach of his father the boy sat up and said: 'Dad, give me a chaw of terbacker.' That was the incident which prompted John Hay to write his famous verses."

An Ungallant Lawyer.

An English barrister named Gill in his speech in a recent breach of promise case made some epigrammatic remarks about women which will not make him popular with the sex. However, he was counsel for the man in the case. He said: "All women have a capacity for describing themselves as martyrs. They regard any other woman that a man knows as a 'creature.' The first thing a woman did when she was engaged was to take the man around in triumph and show him to her friends."

Plant Lice.

Fifty-eight persons competed to get the prize offered at Frankfort, Germany, for the best method of destroying plant lice. The winner's preparation is as follows: Quassia wood, two and one-half pounds, to be soaked overnight in ten quarts of water and well boiled, then strained through a cloth and placed, with 100 quarts of water, in a petroleum barrel with five pounds of soft soap.

ALWAYS MOVING NORTH

BISHOP BOMPAS BEST FRIEND OF PEOPLE OF BLEAK LAND.

Rev. J. O. Stringer, an Ontario Graduate of Wycliffe College, Announced as the Successor to This Most Remarkable Anglican Missionary to the Northwest of the Dominion as Bishop of Selkirk—Their Lives.

The announcement that Rev. J. O. Stringer, a graduate of Wycliffe College, and an Ontario man, has been appointed to the office of Bishop of Selkirk is interesting. It is so, not alone because of the personality of the new prelate, but, in addition, because of the remarkable character of the man whom Mr. Stringer succeeds. The immediate predecessor of Bishop Stringer is Bishop Bompas, one of the greatest and most self-sacrificing missionaries of the Anglican Church.

From London to the Yukon.

Bishop Bompas was educated with great care in England, and was designed for clerical work there. But he attended the Church of St. Giles' in the Fields, London, one Sunday night and heard Bishop Anderson, the first Anglican bishop to the Northwest, and the predecessor of Archbishop Machrae, preach a missionary sermon. That settled the fate of the young man. To the Northwest he was determined to go. A fine scholar, a linguist of great talent, the then Mr. Bompas gave up all his chances for preferment and proceeded to Fort Garry, where in due time he was admitted to the priesthood. In the year 1865—exactly 40 years ago—Mr. Bompas arrived at Fort Simpson, the most northerly portion of British Columbia. From that point he worked north into the Yukon, preaching to the Indians and establishing mission stations. He became well versed in the Indian languages and could speak the Tudukh fluently. Ultimately, he was known as one of the best friends of the people of that bleak land.

Always Moving North.

In 1874 the missionary was appointed a bishop. He became the first Bishop of Athabasca — as his vast northern diocese was called. Owing to the increase of work, a new diocese was created in Athabasca eight years later. There were thus two Episcopal sees, and Bishop Bompas was at liberty to choose which he would hold. He selected the farthest north—Mackenzie River. Once again, in 1891, was the diocese cut in two. And once again did the bishop select as his half that which was least attractive, the northern part, known as the Diocese of Selkirk. From the day Bishop Bompas entered the Arctic circle as a missionary he has been but once in civilization. He returned to London to be consecrated, and immediately after that event, in 1874, repaired to his field of labor, and has remained there ever since. The devotion to the work is not inspired by any degree of comfort appertaining to it. From year's end to year's end the bishop is engaged in Arctic traveling, and the Episcopal palace, a log cabin, is precisely the sort of place in which the average man would not care to summer—much less to spend the long night of the northern winter.

Three Score Years and Ten.

Bishop Bompas is exactly 70 years of age, and 40 years of his life, minus the brief holiday 30 years ago, have been spent among the Indians and Eskimos of the Arctic, and in the stress and strain of the comfortless frozen north. He has worked continuously. He has translated sacred writings into the Indian languages. He has taught in his mission schools. He has preached all over that vast territory. He has even written, for he is a man of fine intellect, hymns and poems which are notable for the culture and for the piety they display.

The New Prelate.

The new bishop, Mr. Stringer, has had a taste of the hardships of the north. He went from Wycliffe soon after his graduation to labor under Bishop Reeve, of the neighboring diocese. After doing very hard work there he was chosen to take up his residence on Herschell Island, the island that it farthest north in British territory. It is within the Arctic circle, and is bleak and absolutely treeless. For eight months in the year it is icebound. For the remaining four months it is surrounded with broken ice, and is practically inaccessible. This is its summer season. The island is visited by Indians in large numbers, and is a spot at which people who could not otherwise be reached can be brought under good influences. Mrs. Stringer accompanied her husband to this point—one of the uttermost parts of the earth—and contributed to his efforts. Her aid was particularly valuable because she was an expert in medicine. From Herschell Island Mr. Stringer was moved to White Horse, in the Yukon, not far from Dawson, and here he has been for some time helping Bishop Bompas. The two clergymen have been so much together of late and their sympathies are so similar that the passage to Bishop Stringer of the mantle of Bishop Bompas seems but natural.

Toronto Men In the North.

Bishop Stringer is the third graduate of a Toronto educatonal institution to become a bishop in the Far North. The Bishop of Alaska is Dr. Rowe, a graduate of Trinity. He went from the United States to his northern diocese, and is a neighbor of the Wycliffe man who presides over Selkirk. Hard by is the Diocese of Caledonia. This lies south of both Alaska and Selkirk, and it noted as the scene of the remarkable work among the Tsimpsean Indians These people were rescued from barbarism 20 or 30 years ago and became highly civilized. Dr. DuVernet, formerly of Toronto Junction, is the Bishop of Caledonia. He is a Wycliffe graduate, and is very successful in his new sphere, which bids fair to become more important owing to the circumstance that the Grand Trunk Pacific will pass through the diocese in the course of time. The three northern bishops are strong men physically, and they need to be, for their work is exceedingly hard.

HISTORY OF ASTRONOMY.

How We Learned What We Know About the Heavens.

The first of a series of lectures at the Biological Building of the University of Toronto to be given to the students upon subjects not fully dealt with in the curriculum was delivered by Prof. Baker on "The History of Astronomical Knowledge." The lecture was very entertaining, and was attended by a large number of students, and as it was public it was also attended by a number of outsiders. Prof. Baker dealt first with the appearances in the heavens which would have presented themselves to the notice of early astronomers. There were three of these appearances which would have been particularly noticeable. One was the fact that the planets all moved in the same direction about the sun. Another was the appearances resulting from the fact that the earth moved on its own axis. The motion of the planets in an eclipse was another appearance which presented itself for explanation, and it could easily be understood that they needed considerable acuteness of observation for their solution. There were several passages in the "Odyssey" which gave evidence of more than ordinary knowledge of the motion of the heavenly bodies. Prof. Baker read a few of the passages which served to illustrate the point. The early astronomers had been unaware of the chief cause of the appearances which they were trying to explain; namely, the motion of the earth with them on it.

The earliest conception of the universe that had deserved the name of a "theory" was that the stars were fixed in a crystaline sphere, which during the day revolved about the earth from east to west. The motion of the sun and moon from west to east, however, had also to be accounted for, and this was done by simply multiplying the spheres in which the planets moved. This hypothesis, however, was itself not ample, and had to be modified, and the course of modification led to the modern conceptions of the universe. The sphere theories, however, were clung to for a long time, and were amplified to serve the increased perception of appearances; by the theories of eccentric spheres and epi-cycles.

The system of Capernicus had made the sun the centre of movement around which the planets revolved. Subsequent developments had been due to the use of the telescope. The genius of Newton had deduced the law of the planets being detained in their orbits by the force of an attraction in the sun. Finally, the secret had been wrung from the heavens and the law of gravitation had been discovered. The law alone, however, was discovered. What gravitation itself was had still to be learned.

An Aristocrat Turns Hermit.

Reports to the Mounted Police Department bring accounts of very strange lives followed by people living in the western plains of Canada. Some of the inhabitants have gone there to endure hardships in preference to living in comfort in fashionable English homes. Not a few with "blue" blood in their veins have cast in their lot with the rugged westerners, though the aristocrats mostly go under assumed names. In a report received recently by Comptroller White of the N.W.M.P., there is an interesting account of the finding of a strange individual camped alone nineteen miles from Selkirk.

The report is from John Taylor, inspector of Division E of the police. He was sent last summer to meet the police steamer Vidette, and on his way an isolated camp was sighted. On entering he discovered a man who gave his name as Tollemache. Mr Taylor says he believes the stranger is a son of a baron of England, who at one time was a lieutenant in the King's Royal Rifle Corps. His only companions were three dogs and a cat. He was crippled, the result of an accident many years ago. He gave no information about his previous life.

Col. White expresses no surprise at information of this kind, as the circumstances of the person described are by no means uncommon, even if the supposition of the inspector be true.

Pegged Boots In Canada.

There are few, if any, pegged boots made in the factories of the United States, while fifty years ago the sewing machine was yet uninvented and nearly all shoes save the hand-sewed were hobnailed or pegged. In Canada there are a few scattering factories producing pegged boots for men and boys. Adam Bertsch, a Rochester pattern manufacturer, recently ran across one at St. John's, Nfld.

Mr. Bertsch was interested in the quaint manner in which the boots and shoes are manufactured, the machinery in use being long out of date, as compared with the present standard in the United States. There are no up-to-date methods, and one might easily imagine in stepping into this factory that the cycle of time had turned back forty or fifty years. The pegged boots are high cut, such as men wore generally before the war, and find a ready sale in Newfoundland and in Canada.—From the Shoe Retailer.

Young Girls Sold In Marriage.

Mrs. T. Chisholm, Manitoba, reporting recently to the Dominion Women's Christian Temperance Union convention on foreign work, denounced child-marriage, practiced among Germans, Galicians and Poles in Manitoba. She instanced a case of a thirteen-year-old girl forced to marry a man much older, whom she had never seen till the week before the marriage ceremony. The fathers of young girls were paid $25 or $30 by the prospective groom. The girls were practically sold by hard-up parents. She knew cases of fourteen-year-old girls being compelled to marry under similar circumstances. The Attorney-General had been appealed to on the matter, but it was difficult to stop child-marriages unless they could get a case for prosecution through the girl refusing to say yes at the marriage altar

Generous Maid.

"Oh, spare me, dear angel, a lock of your hair," the bashful young man took courage and sighed. "'Twere a shame to refuse so modest a prayer, so take the whole wig," the fair maid replied.

Bachelors and Benedicts Gave Pleasant Assembly

HIGHLY ENJOYABLE AFFAIR IN ODDFELLOWS' HALL LAST NIGHT—MANY VISITORS PRESENT—WHO THEY WERE.

A very pleasant affair, indeed, was the Benedicts' and Bachelors' ball, which had been eagerly looked forward to by many in this city, and which took place in the Oddfellows' hall last night. Nothing, apparently, had been left undone to make the affair a success, the assembly rooms being beautifully decorated with flags and bunting. As the guests arrived they were heartily and cordially received by the reception committee. Before the ball began a reception was held in the Oddfellows' lodge room. Here the visitors, of whom there were many, were welcomed and introduced. It was a fair scene of "handsome women and brave men."

Dancing began about 9.30, music being furnished by Chalaupka's orchestra.

About midnight supper was served by a caterer of this city, the viands being delicious and satisfying. A table, beautifully decorated with smilax and cut flowers, and illuminated with wax tapers, was spread in the ante-room of the lodge.

Over 100 couples "tripped the light fantastic toe" till an early hour this morning. Among those present were many visitors, including the following:

Miss Carson, Miss Jones, Miss Wilson, Kingston.
Dr. Harper, Madoc.
Miss Cummings, Miss McCauley, Miss Murphy, Mr. Gilmour, Mr. B. Hooey, Mr. R. Weddell, jr., Mr. McAlpin, Trenton.

Dr. and Mrs. Shurie, Trenton.

The lady patronesses present were: Mesdames A. I. Bird, Geo. Wallbridge, C. B. English, Perry Goldsmith, Byron Hudson, W. S. Morden. Regrets were heard on all sides that Mrs. J. J. Farley was prevented by illness from being present.

The following gentlemen were stewards: Messrs. W. S. Morden, Byron F. Hudson, Alf. Gillen, Dr. Farley, C. C. Walker, A. P. Allen, S. E. Carman, W. H. Green, C. F. Wallbridge, Thos. Stewart, C. E. H. Morton, W. P. Rapley.

THE LADIES' GOWNS.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"THE ARRIVAL OF KITTY."

The above attraction held the boards at the Carman opera house last night, being greeted by a small audience. The play proved to be a good light comedy, and deserved better patronage.

"DORA THORNE."

The Dayton, O., "Daily Journal" speaks in the following way of Rowland & Clifford's production of "Dora Thorne," which will be seen here on Tuesday next at the Carman:

"The patrons of the National filled the house yesterday afternoon and evening, to witness the initial performance of 'Dora Thorne' in this city. The dramatization of this popular novel is new, and surely was a happy inspiration of the playwright, as its presentation by a good company yesterday won the hearty approval of the audience. 'Dora Thorne' as a novel is a beautiful story and has been so widely read and re-read by lovers of a sweet story that comments on the reproduction of 'Dora Thorne's' story on the stage are superfluous. The play abounds in pathos and mirth, and the actors who assume the roles in this pretty play are well fitted to their parts, and certainly do justice to their respective roles."

Successful Christmas Entertainment.

The annual entertainment in connection with St. Thomas' Church Sunday school was held in the City Hall last evening. Despite the inclement weather a large number were present. The programme, which proved to be interesting, was chiefly provided by the scholars, and consisted of songs, recitations, etc. Miss Potter, of Ameliasburg, gave a violin selection, with Mrs. (Dr.) MacColl as accompanist. Mr. Geo. Nyland gave a guitar solo, and also rendered a song and recitation. Three medals, donated by the Rector, Rev. G. R. Beamish, for general proficiency in the school, were presented by the donor to Arthur Spangenberg, Lottie Pearson and Winnie Harker. At the conclusion of the programme Mr. F. B. Hudson, as Santa Claus, appeared upon the scene and distributed gifts, etc., to the children.

The local junior O.H.A. team, which is billed to play in Cobourg to-night, had, this afternoon, received no word as to whether there is ice in that village or not. If the boys receive no notice to the contrary by 5 o'clock this afternoon, they will go to Cobourg.

In a recent New York game Howard Drakeley, the president of the league, was refereeing between the St. Nicholas Skating Club and the Hockey Club of New York, when Hardy lifted the puck and the hard rubber struck Drakeley in the mouth, cutting him severely. He left the ice, and turned the game over to his assistant, Hugh Bullen. Two stitches were necessary to dress the wound on Drakeley's face. In the second half Referee Bullen sent Souther to the bench for two minutes for rough play.—Souther quietly sat down on Bullen's hat.

The York County Loan

WHAT THE INVESTIGATION SHOWED TO MR. CROSS, THE GOVERNMENT OFFICIAL WHO LOOKED INTO THE COMPANY'S AFFAIRS.

Toronto, Jan. 3.—There was no system of books showing the real liabilities of the business to the shareholders.

The officers of the company did not know their real position in that regard.

No clear idea of the amount which had to be earned in order to fulfill their agreement was held by the officers of the company.

The books were not audited. The auditors' certificates were untrue. The statements contained in the annual report were wholly untrue and misleading, particularly with regard to the amount of the liquid assets of the company.

The foregoing shortly states the conditions of the affairs of the York County Loan Company as found by Mr. W. H. Cross, the Government investigator.

Mr. Cross has not yet made his official report to the Attorney-General of his investigation into the York County Loan Company, but has all gone over the evidence and is now giving his data.

The assets of the company were found to be substantial, being estimated at $2,000,000. The claims of mortgagees and creditors against these are very small, totalling about $106,000, thus leaving a substantial amount to be distributed among the creditors. The value of the chief asset, which is a large block of land immediately east of High Park, depends almost entirely on the success with which this land can be marketed.

The assets are fixed at slightly over $2,000,000, and the liabilities slightly in excess of $3,000,000.

Great difficulty was found in ascertaining the exact amount of the liability to terminating shareholders. The records of the permanent shares and the fully paid up withdrawable shares are entirely plain.

But there is no record or account showing in any satisfactory manner the amount owing holders of these terminating shares.

The company's methods of keeping accounts is anything but eulogized, and attention is called to the fact that none of the officers of the company appear to have an appreciation of the real extent of their liability to withdrawing shareholders.

It is understood that the liability to withdrawing shareholders was about $1,000,000 more than was indicated by the books, and $1,000,000 more than was supposed to exist.

A suggestion has been made that the pass books of these shareholders be collected and their claims added up, taking count of the forfeitures that have taken place with some of them, and thus obtain a thoroughly reliable result.

Regarding the causes of the collapse of the company, the enterprise itself was fundamentally responsible. The carrying on of the company's business on the plan it had adopted was impossible.

The chief reason of this was the fact that business cost too much to get, and the expenses of getting the investment, collecting the money and taking care of it were too high to enable it to be run successfully.

The method of securing subscribers was too costly. Deposits and subscriptions had to be so managed that the company would have to earn between 17 per cent. and 18 per cent. on its loan fund. Since this was impossible, withdrawals were simply paid from moneys coming in from new subscribers.

Difficulties were further increased by the position of the securities. In 1904 the only interest bearing securities in the hands of the company, which brought in a cash revenue, were mortgages and bonds aggregating in all not more than $500,000. This was invested at a rate not exceeding 5 per cent., thus leaving about $30,000. On the other hand the interest payable to the various classes of shareholders, and this had to be earned out of the funds of the company, aggregating about $350,000, thus leaving a deficit for the year of something like $330,000 in income.

Whether the loans of the company to subsidiary companies are ultra vires or not will be settled in the courts in the course of the liquidation.

Just whether the Toronto Life Insurance Company paid value to the York Loan for the land and buildings on Roncesvalles avenue last August will be a point that the liquidator may have to investigate.

The officers of the company are found to be blameless of any charge of diverting funds for their benefit. Further enquiries, however, are being made, calling for vouchers given for money that has been paid.

With regard to the loan to the Southern Light & Power Company, and the underwriting of the bonds to the extent of $200,000, the promoter, Joseph Barrett, made the agreement directly with Mr. Phillips, though the loan appears to have been made and the money advanced by the York County Loan Company. Mr. Phillips' holding of $100,000 of stock in the power company as trustee for the York Loan Company was unknown to the other directors.

THE NEW CHURCH OF ENGLAND HYMNAL.

COMMITTEE IS MAKING GOOD PROGRESS WITH FIRST DRAFT OF THE BOOK.

Toronto, Jan. 3.—The committee appointed to compile a hymnal for the Church of England in Canada met in the schoolhouse of the Church of the Redeemer on New Year's Day, and expect to conclude the labors of their first sitting to-morrow evening. There is a very full and representative gathering of the committee. Through the absence of the chairman the Bishop of Ottawa, in Denver, because of illness in his family, the chair has been occupied by the vice-chairman, the Bishop of Huron. Owing to the illness of Archbishop Bond, of Montreal, Bishop Carmichael is, to the regret of the remainder of the committee, also unable to be present.

Though the returns of voting from the clergy and laity and women's auxiliaries in all the dioceses from Halifax to Vancouver are not yet complete, enough have been received to show what the trend of thought is, and so far as tabulated there is a wonderful unaminity of opinion both as to the hymns considered indispensable, and also as to hymns which are never used. This unanimity will greatly lighten the labors of the committee. The voting papers also give unmistakable evidence that the church is ripe and anxious for a new hymnal for the whole church.

The committee have already decided on the general form of the book. It will, in its arrangement, resemble the three main hymnals now in use, Hymns Ancient and Modern, the Hymnal Companion and Church Hymns. They have also decided on the general form of the indices which will be very full, giving lists of first lines, subject, tunes and authors. In line with many requests the name of the author and the date of its composition will be placed at the bottom of each hymn. The committee hope to arrive at a tentative first draft of hymns before they disperse, which will be the basis for their work at the next meeting, next spring, probably at the time of the meeting of the General Board of Missions.

It is needless to say that the members of the committee are very much gratified at the harmony of feeling shown and at the good progress they have been able to make.

FEAST DAY COOKERY.

Squash in the Shell, Salad, Jelly and a Turkey Trick.

There are several ways of serving baked squash. One of the best is as follows: Cut or saw through the shell and separate into individual portions. Lay shell side down in a baking pan, turn in a little hot water to keep the pan from burning and bake in a hot oven until tender. Serve folded in a napkin. Eat from the shell with butter, salt and pepper. When convenient bake the bits of squash, as potatoes are baked, on the grate, dry heat being preferable, says Boston Cooking School Magazine, which is the source of this and the following suggestions:

A Crisp Salad.

A crisp salad is an essential part of a rich Thanksgiving dinner, and for this no ingredients can be more appropriate than celery and apple. Mayonnaise dressing is suitable for an evening spread or a chafing dish supper, but it is entirely out of place for the dinner of the day. So also is the boiled dressing. French dressing lightly applied is the only item that fills the bill. To prepare this mix all the ingredients together to form a complete emulsion, then mix with the prepared salad materials or dress the materials with oil, seasonings and acid in the foregoing order.

Cranberry Jelly.

If cranberry jelly rather than sauce please your fancy the directions given must be followed explicitly. To one quart of berries add one cup of water, cover and cook quickly about five minutes or until the berries burst. Lift the cover occasionally lest the foaming fruit overflow the dish. Press at once through a sieve. A puree sieve that fits firmly into the lower part of a double boiler and a wooden pestle will enable you to do this part of the work in about three minutes. Add at once to the puree two cups of sugar, mix thoroughly and turn into a mold.

Pumpkin Pie.

Select a small, fine grained pumpkin. Steam or bake it until perfectly tender, then press through a colander. To a pint of the sifted pumpkin add one quart of rich milk, three well beaten eggs, one small cup of sugar, one teaspoonful of ginger and half a teaspoonful of salt. Line two deep pie tins with good pastry, pour in the pumpkin mixture, sift a little sugar and a dusting of nutmeg over the top and bake until firm in the center and golden brown in color.

A Wrinkle In Baking Turkey.

A New Yorker suggests a novel way of securing a moist and well flavored roast turkey. When the fowl has been trussed and made ready for baking smear over the surface of the bird with thick sour cream, let stand some hours or, better still, overnight or even longer in the refrigerator. Then with proper baking a peculiarly tender bird is the result. In spreading steaks and roasts with olive oil and vinegar we follow out the same principle. In both cases the oil (in one butter fat) excludes the air and preserves the flesh, while the acetic acid in the cream and vinegar respectively is softening the fibers.

The Retiring Age.

Professor Chiene of Edinburgh university in a recent lecture alluded to Dr. Osler's famous suggestion about chloroforming all men over a certain age. Professor Chiene said he was two years past the limit, but did not believe in the application of an arbitrary rule. He knew but one sure sign of the time when a man should retire—when he refused to allow any one to help him on with his coat.

Governor Higgins, After Giving Startling Figures of Magnitude of Business of Life Insurance Companies in New York State, Points Out the Need of Regulation — Insurance Amendments.

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 4.—The New York State Legislature convened at noon yesterday. James W. Wadsworth, Jr., of Livingston County was elected Speaker of the Assembly, after which the annual message of Gov. Higgins was read. The message is in part as follows:

"The magnitude and extent of the business of life insurance is startling, even after a year of discussion and agitation. At the end of December, 1904, 42 companies doing business in the State of New York had total gross assets of $2,454,669,436.63. For the year ending Dec. 31, 1904, these companies had received in premiums $489,542,922.04 and they had a total income from all sources of $580,743,959.14. The disbursements for commissions to agents on this business amounted to $67,086,887.97. The salaries, medical fees and payments to employes were $36,537,255.98. Other disbursements were $33,395,686.55. The total number of policies in force Dec. 1, 1904, of the 42 companies named was 9,949,722, insuring $10,028,090,981.00.

Insurance Regulation.

"The business may be roughly divided in halves between three great companies existing under the laws of New York on the one side and the remaining companies on the other. The problem of state regulation of insurance has become one of overshadowing importance. It calls for calm, courageous and intelligent treatment. We must aim to cure, not to kill; to preserve, not to tear down.

"It is improper for me at this time to anticipate the report of your committee, which has conducted its trying duties with ability, courage and success, nor shall I seek to outline a new insurance law. Legislative action prior to the presentation of the report would be injudicious and premature.

"You will be called upon to make a radical revision of the law for the benefit of investors in life insurance and for the regulation and restraint of the companies. We may well consider at this time the expediency of providing for more thorough regulation by the Department of Insurance.

"Future effective action of Congress or the Federal Government is not probable, and the possibility of such action should not retard for an instant the work of the state."

Insurance Amendments.

Many amendments to the state insurance laws are proposed in a bill introduced yesterday by Senator Brackett. Among its important provisions are those making elective instead of appointive the office of superintendent of insurance, making salaries of life insurance officers subject to the written approval of the superintendent of insurance, prohibiting insurance of children under 12, prohibiting tontine or "deferred dividend" insurance, making the list of policyholders of any life insurance company available for examination by any policyholder thereof, limiting investments of insurance companies in a way similar to that which limits investments by savings banks.

Demands Depew's Resignation.

Senator Brackett introduced a resolution demanding of Chauncey M. Depew his resignation as United States Senator from this state.

After a long debate Senator Brackett withdrew his resolution. He specified that he intended to introduce it again at a later date.

Senator Raynes, who wanted immediate action, in which he desired to defeat the resolution objected to its withdrawal, but upon a roll call, the withdrawal was allowed by a vote of 27 to 19.

Protection of the Falls

Protection to Niagara Falls is dealt with by the Governor as follows: "More than twenty years ago the State of New York sought to redeem the falls of Niagara from vandalism by restoring the surrounding scenery to its primeval beauty, and creating a state reservation as a free pleasure ground for the people. It has spent large sums of money in the establishment and maintenance of the reservation and many thousands of visitors enjoy its privileges yearly. This state and the Dominion of Canada have in the past been engaged in an unworthy rivalry in granting franchises of incalculable value to power development companies, permitting them to take water from the Niagara River above the falls for commercial purposes. The privileges granted to these companies now constitute a real menace to Niagara. The State of New York cannot carry on the work of preservation effectively without the aid of an international agreement to protect the cataract and the river from spoliation. It can, however, in some degree, repair the mischief already done (1) by limiting the amount of water which may be taken from the river by the New York companies now engaged in developing power, (2) by repealing all undeveloped charters, of which several remain on our statute books, dormant, if not defunct, and (3) by instituting legal proceedings for the forfeiture of the charters of any companies which may be guilty of misuse of their franchises, or abuse or usurpation of powers. I earnestly desire to impress upon the Legislature a due sense of the responsibility of this state for the protection and preservation of the grandeur and beauty of Niagara Falls."

M'CALL SEES HIS FAULTS.

Resigns From New York Life and Is Succeeded by Alex. E. Orr.

New York, Jan. 4.—John A. McCall yesterday resigned the presidency of the New York Life Insurance Co., and Alexander E. Orr was appointed in his place, at a salary of $50,000 a year.

The board of trustees also cut down the number of vice-presidents so that hereafter there will be two of these officers instead of three.

Mr. McCall, who for fourteen years has held the office which he resigned yesterday sent a letter to the trustees in which he stated that his errors seemed greater to him than to his critics, but he was comforted to think of the company's unprecedented achievements and to know that no officer or trustee had profited improperly at the policyholders' expense.

Although there was no formal resolution of regrets passed, speeches eulogizing McCall's administration were made.

THE TACK COMBINE.

Prices Were Listed High, and Discounts Were Big, Too.

Toronto, Jan. 4.—The investigation into the tack combine, conducted by Mr. Curry, before Magistrate Denison yesterday, revealed more to prove the understanding between the members of the association. It was clearly shown that the members of the association had to report, ask advice and permission from "headquarters," alias Jenkins and Hardy, before they could do business.

Mr. Curry stuck to the minute books and dug up all that was possible. He ascertained, as has already been told that prices were governed, penalties imposed and that there was a general and imperious supervision of the tack trade.

The evidence showed special privileges were given to manufacturers to sell the Maritime Provinces, Grand Trunk, Canadian Pacific, Canada Atlantic, and Intercolonial Railroads.

Another phase was shot goods were listed as high as the City Hall tower, but by a system of discounts ranging from 75 per cent. to 5 per cent. to the jobber was reduced.

This point made his worship think for a minute and he remarked in his own jocular, sarcastic manner: "It is the list price the consumers buy and pay at."

Mr. Tilley, counsel for the defendants, suggested that probably Mr. Curry would be getting after the lawyers' combine.

"In my opinion it would do no harm if they were abolished," was the vigorous retort by the Crown Attorney.

"It would be a good thing to abolish all reference to former cases in trials and let each one stand on its merits," commented Magistrate Denison.

This enquiry will go on again tomorrow morning.

BLAKE A SECOND O'CONNELL.

Canadian Eulogized and Nominated for Longford, Ireland—Will Accept.

London, Jan. 4.—In moving the nomination of Edward Blake at the Longford convention, Father Dowdall said Mr. Blake was considered a second O'Connell in appearance, ability and self-sacrifice.

County Councillor, in seconding, said that Mr. Blake had come from Canada to give his ripened years in the service of Ireland. Longford in selecting him was conferring an honor upon Ireland.

Wm. Redmond, M. P., compared Mr. Blake to Justin McCarthy, than whom none was more respected.

Mr. Delaney, M. P., referred to him as the grand old man of the Irish cause.

A letter was read announcing that Mr. Blake was willing to continue the struggle for national rights. Mr. Blake also forwarded a signed copy of the parliamentary pledge.

Charlie Devlin Nominated.

A PAST TO BE PROUD OF Canada's Progress Has Been One of Wonderful Steadiness.

Report of the Deputy Minister of Finance—Public Deposits in Chartered Banks Average $1,000,000 a Week—How Dominion Loans Are Maturing—Interest Charges 4 and 3 1-2 Per Cent.—National Debt is $266,224,166.

Ottawa, Jan. 4.—"The year 1904-05 has been characterized throughout the whole of the Dominion by a wonderful degree of prosperity." Such is the opinion which Mr. J. M. Courtney, Deputy Minister of Finance, puts on record in the public accounts issued yesterday. He goes on to say:

"It will be seen from the accounts now published how the public revenues have increased. In all other particulars, such as the railway traffic, receipts, immigration, the bank clearings, and in the deposits in the chartered banks, a wonderfully steady progress has taken place. The increase in the public deposits held in the chartered banks averages over $1,000,000 a week, and over $500,000,000 are now held on deposit."

Dominion Loans Maturing.

Mr. Courtney comments with satisfaction on the high position of Dominion loans in Great Britain, and the fact that since 1st July, 1903, maturing Dominion loans to the amount of $23,359,999 have been paid off. During the next seven years, however, loans to the amount of $143,163,665 will have to be refunded, no less than $134,895,331 during the first four years of this term. Against this large amount sinking funds in Canadian securities to the amount of $47,365,008 were held on Nov. 30 last. Provision will have to be made for the meeting of the large sums referred to, but after they have been refunded no further loans will mature until 1938. Of the loans in question all but $24,333,333 are 4 per cent., the balance is 3 1-2 per cent.

Mr. Courtney is pleased that the termination of the fiscal year is to be changed from June 30 to March 31, a change which he has favored ever since he entered the public service over 36 years ago. The system has been in vogue in Great Britain ever since 1854, but the 30th June is still maintained in the United States.

The National Debt.

During the year receipts in consolidated fund amounted to $71,182,772, and expenditure on the same account to $63,319,683, giving a surplus of receipts over expenditure amounting to $7,863,089. The capital expenditure totalled $15,484,455, and deducting from this the surplus, $2,261,618 of sinking funds and some smaller amounts, it leave $5,356,448 to be added to the national debt, which now amounts to $266,224,166. The average rate of interest on gross debt for the year was $2.81, as compared with $3.03 in the previous year, and the net rate of interest fell from $2.46 to $2.26.

BYE-ELECTION ON 29TH.

Conservative Candidate in Kingston Opens Campaign.

Toronto, Jan. 4.—The Kingston bye-election has been set for Monday, Jan. 29, with nominations a week earlier.

The announcement was made by the Government yesterday afternoon. Sheriff Dawson, who will act as returning officer, was notified by telephone at noon.

The candidates are Donald N. McIntyre, Conservative, and E. J. B. Pense, Liberal, the same as in the general election. Mr. Pense was elected, but was unseated as the result of the protest. The campaign looks like a hot one.

The first gun will be fired to-night at Kingston, when Hon. W. J. Hanna, Provincial Secretary, and J. P. Downey, M.P.P., for South Wellington will speak in the interests of Mr. McIntyre.

New registration will be necessary.

"CAP" TO SAIL THE VIGILANT.

Noted Mariner Doesn't Deny That Rumor May Be True.

Windsor, Jan. 4.—It is rumored here that "Cap" Sullivan has been appointed commander of the Canadian fisheries cruiser, Vigilant, to succeed Capt. Dunn, resigned. Capt. Dunn is on a holiday trip to Chicago.

Toronto, Jan. 4.—"I haven't got to-night's mail. I am living at 575 Euclid avenue," said genial "Cap" very sociably when he was asked if it was right that he was going to resume his duties as a marine commander. "Can't say anything about it for a while," he went on, and intimated that so far as any intimation he had received was concerned he might be admiral of the British navy and still not know it.

Opposition Now Numbers Two.

Calgary, Jan. 4.—Conservatives have gained another seat in Alberta, giving them now two in the Legislature. A. G. Robertson (High River) was declared elected by Chief Justice Sifton yesterday morning on a recount of the ballots. His plurality is 23. R. A. Wallace (Liberal) had been declared elected by the returning officer, by 6.

Carries In Forty-Eight Places.

Toronto, Jan. 4.—The latest returns as to local option bylaws show 133 licenses cut off. In 64 contests, 48 carried it and nine defeated, and seven places are yet to be heard from. In the years previous to 1904 only 18 municipalities carried local option. During 1904 the number jumped to 28.

For Uniform Game Laws.

Fruit Cures Constipation

"Fruit-a-tives" cure Constipation because they are made of fruit.

Constipation comes from just one cause—lack of bile. It is the bile—flowing into the intestines—that causes the bowels to move. More bile is the only thing that can cure Chronic Constipation.

Fruit acts directly on the liver. It stimulates and strengthens the millions of tiny liver cells—causes more bile to be made—and makes the liver give up more bile to the bowels.

MRS. KATE KURTZ, Dunnville, Ont., writes stating that for years constipation was her trouble, and says:—"I have used "Fruit-a-tives" with great benefit, and they are a grand medicine for constipation and other stomach trouble. I would not care to be without them in the house, they are so good."

Cathartics, pills, salts, aperient waters don't reach the liver. They merely irritate the bowels and make the bowels move by irritating the lining membrane. Constipation is made worst by such drugs.

Fruit-a-tives

or Fruit Liver Tablets.

contain no calomel, cascara, senna or other bowel irritants. They are concentrated fruit juices, combined and made more active medicinally by our process of uniting them. "Fruit-a-tives" are a liver tonic. They tone up and stimulate the liver—and cause the liver to secrete more bile. This means a healthy bowel action and a permanent cure for Constipation, Biliousness and kindred troubles.

All druggists should have them. Sent prepaid on receipt of price—50c. a box or 6 boxes for $2.50—by

No Need to Get Nervous.

Empire Will Not Sink to Fifth Rate Power Yet Awhile.

Winston Churchill's Answer to Chamberlain at Manchester—Makes Important Statement on Behalf of Colonial Office Regarding Prospective Colonial Conference—Government Will Not Enter Into Preference Involving Taxation of Food

London, Jan. 5.—(C. A. P.)—On behalf of the Colonial Office, Winston Churchill, speaking at Manchester last night, made an important declaration of policy in a statement regarding prospective colonial conference. In the event of a Liberal success, the Government would not enter into an arrangement for preferential union with the colonies, involving taxation of food. He said there was no need to get jumpy, or into a nervous state, about the empire, which would not sink to a fifth-rate power so soon as Mr. Chamberlain supposed.

Conference in 1907.

Lord Elgin had faced many difficulties, but the question of the colonial conference presented difficulties. To the Government the periodical assembly of representative men from all parts of the empire, to discuss questions of imperial interest was attended with great advantages. Such a policy would receive all possible assistance and encouragement. When the conference met in 1907 it would be free and unfettered. It would be open to colonial Ministers to bring forward any proposal which seemed to afford the prospect of more intimate co-ordination or a closer union of the various widespread dependencies of the crown.

Given Restrictions.

No doubt the colonial representatives at the conference would receive from their respective governments precise instructions as to the proposals they were authorized to put forward or accept. The representatives of the Home Government would also receive precise instructions. The nature of these instructions depended upon the wishes and feelings of the masses of British people.

If the result of the general election should provide Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman with an adequate majority for the conduct of public affairs, it would be the duty of the representatives of the British Government to inform their colonial colleagues that we would not enter into arrangements for a preferential union with the colonies, involving the protective taxation of food.

Following Precedent.

In making such a statement he said the Liberal Ministers would only be following the course taken by Mr. Chamberlain in 1897. There were many other questions of imperial importance lying outside the realm of fiscal reform, upon which a colonial conference would throw a most instructive light, and in regard to which the Government was hopeful of fruitful results. The South African Government would broadly allow the colony to manage its own affairs in its own way. Briton and Boer are now equal under the Union Jack.

Army Reform the Program.

London, Jan. 5.—Richard Burdon Haldane, Secretary for War, speaking at a free trade meeting in London last night, said it was the intention of the Liberal Government to maintain an adequate army, but that it would be necessary before real reform commenced to clear away much of the trash and little left by his predecessors.

Chamberlain Had to Quit.

London, Jan. 5.—It was a very disorderly audience to which Mr. Chamberlain preached his fiscal doctrine at Derby last night. Over 4,000 had been admitted to the drill hall without tickets. The interruptions started early, the speaker having to stop several times He finally cut his remarks short. Mr. Polford, the candidate, referred to the interruptors as cowards, and told them to go away and die of starvation in a ditch. "Mr. Chamberlain will be Prime Minister of England before you are dead, and I will be member for Derby to support him."

Indian School Burns.

Winnipeg, Jan. 5.—The St. Paul Industrial School at Middlechurch, seven miles from Winnipeg, was totally destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon. The total loss is $25,000, with no insurance. It was a Government institution for Indians of Manitoba. There were seventy pupils in attendance at the time, all of whom escaped and are being sheltered in the Anglican Church.

Bad Fire at High River.

High River, Alta, Jan. 5—Wednesday afternoon fire destroyed the Hyslop block, occupied by Hyslop, Young & Kelly, hardware and furniture merchants, and the adjoining general store of W. H. Thompson. Hyslop, Young & Kelly estimate their loss at $35,000, partially insured. Thompson's loss is $30,000, and is well insured.

Unknown Man Attempts Suicide.

Toronto, Jan. 5.—An unknown man attempted suicide in Munro Park by swallowing carbolic acid about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. At an early hour this morning he was still alive, though Dr. Bruce Rogers gives little hope of recovery.

Compton Goes Liberal.

Montreal, Jan. 5.—The bye-election in Compton yesterday was won by Munt (Lib.), whose majority is about 300. The Liberals carried the county in 1904, defeating Rufus Pope (Con.), who was again defeated yesterday by 298.

The Printers' Strike.

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 5.—The status of the printers' strike was not materially changed yesterday. There are working 504 men, and 233 men are out.

Sues For $20,000.

Quebec, Jan. 5.—The widow of the man, Henderson, killed by a car, is suing the Levis Electric Railway for $20,000.

Business Block Burned.

Ethel, Jan. 5.—About 1.30 yesterday morning fire broke out in John McDonald's store in the Simpson block here. The whole block was completely destroyed. The hardware store of Krauter & Ritchie, and the barber shop and dwelling of W. F. Heath were also completely consumed. The loss is estimated at about $20,000.

The Money Sharks.

The Montreal Star has unmasked its batteries and is firing hot-shot into the ranks of the money sharks of Montreal, while the Toronto News is following suit and relentlessly bayoneting this class of oney lenders. Both are doing good work in the interest of the poor whose necessities compel them to borrow.

There appears to have been for some time past a nest of money lenders in Montreal and Toronto, and probably in other cities in Canada, whose headquarters are in Chicago, who have been literally, under the free trade in money law, robbing the poor borrower. The News tells its readers that the "Loan sharks gather the poor into their clutches and "exact interest from 50 to 250 per "cent. from them." It then gives a case in which a "Toronto young "man had been paying 140 per cent. "interest to these vampires, and "bad to be released by an uncle," adding "Clerks had to assign their "salaries, and poor householders give "chattel mortgages, while the Shy-"locks grow fat by bleeding the illiterate poor." While this has been going on, "their nefarious work has "been kept from the public."

This is no fanciful sketch, facts are given to prove every statement made.

In Montreal things are just as bad, if not worse. The Star's campaign and exposures has set "justice after the usurers, if under the law they may be so termed. Attorney-General Gouin of Quebec, has ordered the taking possession of the offices of the Canadian Finance Company, as it is designated. Warrants were issued for the arrest of the manager of this company, charging him with "obtaining money under false pretences," and he has been arrested. Columns are filled with illustrations of the manner in which these money sharks lured the poor dupes into their clutches and then robbed them.

What the result of these arrests will be is problematical, for under the law, these money lenders claim they have the right to charge and exact just what interest they like, provided the borrower agrees, when he borrows, to pay the rate demanded. In this respect they are right. There may be cases of deception and fraud, which may bring them within the provisions of the criminal law. If so the Attorney-General of Quebec will enforce it. "Power to his elbows!"

Lastly, preservation of food by salt made long voyages possible and opened up the world to civilization.

British Columbia makes a good showing in the output of her mines for the year 1905. It is estimated that the output of ore by the British Columbia mines for the year 1905 will amount to about $20,000,000 more than in the year 1904, when the recorded output was $18,967,539. The gold production this year has not been as large as in 190., but lead, copper and silver have been produced in increasing quantities. It is expected that the Rossland properties will close the year with an output of 320,000 tons of gold ore, while the copper properties of the interior will export for the 12 months about 900,000 tons. British Columbia's principal copper producers are the Granby Consolidated and the British Copper Co.

There seems to be a shocking state of affairs in Toronto. One old man of 85 pleaded guilty and was let off on suspended sentence. This is a state of affairs not creditable to Toronto.

Graduates' Lecture Course.

The committee having in charge the proposed Graduates' lecture course have decided that it is inadvisable to proceed with it this year on account of the ladies' course of Shakespeare lectures now being held. It is expected that earlier arrangements will be made next year, and on a large scale, so that the citizens of Belleville may look forward to an intellectual treat to be furnished by lecturers from Toronto University, Queen's and McGill and also by some of Canada's foremost public men.

Unique Masonic Function.

Last night's meeting of the Belleville Lodge, 123, A., F. & A. M., contained some unique features. Two sons of past masters of the lodge were initiated, one having his degree conferred upon him by a lodge officered entirely by past masters, and the other by a lodge officered entirely by officers of the Fifteenth regiment. Distinguished visitors were present in the persons of the District Deputy Grand Master and District Chaplain of Frontenac district, and three Past District Deputies of Prince Edward District, as well as by brethren of Moira and Eureka lodges and of Ionic lodge, Toronto. A touching incident was the grouping together of the oldest living member of the lodge, the youngest living member of the lodge and the member of the lodge highest in rank in the district. At the banquet which closed the evening many eloquent speeches and enjoyable songs were given.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

HOCKEY.

Locals Walloped in Cobourg.

"Sandy" Burrows took his O.H.A. juniors to Cobourg last night, to play their first league match of the season, and the boys, playing on miserable ice and on the packing box rink which Cobourg boasts, got up against it to the tune of 8 to 3. The ice was in miserable condition, preventing the players on either side doing their best. A despatch from Cobourg says the game was fast from start to finish, but extremely rough, Referee Irving having very little control over the players. Judging by the names of the Cobourg team one would almost be led to believe that time was standing still in the town up west. Some of the men on its junior team have been playing for years, and should be in line for side whiskers by this time. The teams lined up this way last night:

Cobourg.		Belleville.
	Goal
Fesch		Phillips
	Point
Moffatt		Campbell
	Cover.
Smith		Connolly
	Rover.
Robertson		Weller
	Centre
White		Allen
	Right Wing
Deheny		Burke
	Left Wing
McNicholl		Pepper

When the locals get the Cobourgs down here, on decent ice, they promise to wipe out last night's defeat, and will, in the meantime, take satisfaction out of the Port Hopes, who perform here Monday evening next.

SPORTING NOTES.

In the pro. league last night, Portage Lake beat Pittsburg by 5 to 4, in a game which must have borne a striking resemblance to a Moscow riot, many players being laid out, and one being mobbed by the spectators.

Magistrate O'Keefe, of Ottawa, in order to punish rough play in hockey and to give an example of how breaches of the law will be dealt with, whether they occur on the hockey ice or elsewhere, imposed a fine of $15 and $2 costs on Hermas Lafreche, convicted in the police court yesterday of wilfully striking an opponent, Oscar Lepine, on the head with his hockey stick in the game New Year's day between the Young Canadians and the Richelieus.

The Eastern Canada Amateur Hockey Association has conceived the idea of forming an association, embracing all the senior, intermediate and junior clubs of Eastern Ontario and Quebec, and if possible those of the Maritime Provinces.

The Winnipeg hockey team defeated the somewhat badly crippled Rat Portage Thistles last night by a score of 2 to 1. The Thistles were still feeling the results of the hard series with the Ottawas, and Capt. Phillips was unable to play.

"Reddy" McMillan is expected to be able to play this week with the American Soo team. His broken collar-bone is mending rapidly.

Twenty-five dollars a week was the inducement for the Canadian hockey players who moved to New York within the last fortnight. As they are barred from playing the twenty-five will not be forthcoming.

Stratford Beacon: The wisdom of the new O.H.A. rule in allowing goalkeepers to pass the puck three feet in front of the goal was evident last night. The objectionable scrimmages in the corners were done away with to a certain extent. The referee had the nets lowered about six inches in compliance with the O.H.A. rules, before calling the game.

Sullivan, the English sculler who was beaten by Durnan on Toronto bay last summer, would like another match with the Toronto man on the Thames. Sullivan thinks he could make a better showing there.

A Canadian Diamond Field

Canada is so rich in almost everything else that it would seem superfluous to wish that the discovery of diamonds would add to its natural resources and its attractiveness and importance. Still it seems to be within the range not only of possibility, but of probability that the sparklers, upon which such enormous value is placed, may sooner or later be ranked among the regular products of the Dominion. It is remarkable how strong and persistent is the belief among scientific men that some day there will be found somewhere within our borders as rich a diamond field as any in South Africa, India or Brazil. From time to time, inklings of this theory have come to outsiders, but we notice that the question has now been definitely brought before the world by an exhaustive and interesting discussion on the subject at the great meeting of the Geological Society of America, which was held last week at Ottawa and which was attended by several hundred delegates from all parts of this continent. We quote from the report of the Free Press.;

Professor George F. Kunz, of New York, was to give a paper on "The Occurrence of the Diamond in North America." In view of the discovery of diamonds in certain parts of Canada recently, and for other reasons there was considerable interest in this address. Prof. Kunz could not be present, but the paper was read by Prof. J. F. Kemp, also of New York. To a certain extent it was a synopsis of what has been announced lately in reference to the doctor's views as to the possibility of diamonds being brought down from the far north in glacial drifts.

Naturally the paper touched on conditions and investigations concerning this question largely from an American standpoint.

There are four regions where diamonds have been met with in the United States. They are on the Pacific coast in Wisconsin, in Michigan, Indiana and Ohio, in these States along the line of the glacial drift; a few in central Kentucky and Tennessee; and others along the eastern base of the Appalachians in what is known as the Piedmont region from Virginia to Alabama.

Those found along the glacial drift have been transported from an undiscovered source somewhere in Canada. These are by far the most important of any, for they have been the most numerous.

The speaker, in giving a reason as to the origin, concluded that they must have come from either Labrador or a region in the Hudson Bay, where the glacial drift originates.

The speaker gave considerable detail as to size, weight, and color of the various diamonds that have been discovered in the United States since the first one which was picked up in 1830 in Central Indiana.

The many scientific men in Mr. Kemp's audience did not take Professor Kunz's explanation as to where the diamonds originated very seriously. It was upon this point that the discussion turned and the general opinion seemed to be that the diamonds might very possibly have originated in some less distant area in Canada, for they might have been picked up anywhere by the glacial drift in its powerful scoring over the surface rock or deposits.

The paper also showed that Dr. Kunz is of opinion that hundreds of these diamonds must be embedded in the vast mass of morained material passed over by glaciers. The argument thus is that there must be a lot of them, but where it would be hard to say. He thinks that there must therefore be a diamond field somewhere in Canada and that there might be important developments if discoveries could learn just where the glaciers pick up these deposits.

The paper also referred to the fact that surveyors on the Transcontinental survey, all the way from Quebec to Winnipeg were on the lookout for signs of diamond deposits.

After Prof. Kemp took his seat, Messrs. Bell, Lane, Clarke Coleman, Ami and Low took part in a discussion

Dr. Bell, Ottawa, seemed more inclined to think the diamond deposits came from Lake Superior region and intimated that the Lake Superior mineral formation was more likely to produce them there than that of the far north.

Some Grand Old Men.

(Toronto Star.)

Not long ago a British newspaper made the remark that Canada produced nothing but centenarians. While we own up to our share, we are far from laying claim to such an average of longevity for the inhabitants of the Dominion, and indeed we doubt whether human happiness would run with such extended length of days.

We have, however, a notable supply of grand, hale, old men who help to keep our reputation for physical vigor well to the front. There was until a few months ago Senator Wark, who, having attained the age of one hundred and one, was famous all over the world as the oldest living legislator still in active politics. Senator Wark retained his mental faculties unimpaired to the last. It was the bodily machine that gave out through the wear and tear of years.

Sir James Gowan, of Barrie, another Senator, has reached the ripe age of ninety, is alert as ever mentally, and capable of good work for his country yet. Still another Senator, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, has just celebrated his eighty-second birthday, and is still hale and hearty. Sir Mackenzie's hair is white, as one would expect, but his color is fresh, his eye clear, his hand steady, and his back unstooped. He is a splendid specimen of a sound mind in a sound body at a time when the physical frame is supposed to show signs of decrepitude. The atmosphere of the Red Chamber, is, perhaps, preservative. At any rate, the Senate can boast a baker's dozen of members who are seventy years of age or over, and who are still full of the joy of living. Senator Vidal, by the way, is an octogenarian.

Lord Strathcona, Canadian High Commissioner in London, is one of our public men whose vigor and activity at the age of eighty-five challenges universal admiration. Sir Charles Tupper, aged eighty-four, still takes a lively interest in political questions, and can, on occasion, take the stump in election campaigns.

There must be something in the climate of Canada which keeps our old men young.

ASTONISHING RESULTS.

Follow Each New Discovery of Science.

The great strides that medical science has made in the last few years is due to the germ theory. When the germ of a disease has been discovered, the doctors have not been slow in finding a drug to kill it. In a few years, it will be rare to find a bald-headed man or woman. The falling out of hair is due to a dandruff germ, and now it has been discovered how to kill this germ. The remedy used is called Newbro's Herpicide. Its success has been marvelous. Not a failure has been so far reported. It is also a delightful hair dressing, free from oil or sticky substances. Try it and be convinced of its actual merit.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

New York's Garbage

It is not many years since the Street Cleaning Department was accustomed to gather together the refuse of the home and the thoroughfares of New York city, load it into barges, tow it out past Sandy Hook and dump it into the sea. This primitive method of disposal of the city's wastes was adopted in the belief, or, perhaps, to speak more truly, under the pretext, that the heavier refuse would sink to the bottom, and the lighter portions would be taken in hand by the kindly winds of Heaven, and distributed everywhere but in the vicinity of Greater New York. As a matter of fact, the greater part of the floating matter came back, to form an unsightly and unsavory fringe along the foreshore of New York harbor and of the many seaside resorts located on the neighboring coasts. Largely owing to the efforts of the late Col. Waring, whose memory must ever be enshrined in the hearts of a grateful municipality, if not in its public places, we have changed all this, and to-day the barbarous method of dumping at sea has been practically abolished. Under the more scientific methods now adopted, the city's waste is waste no longer. What part of it is not sold is put to city uses, and much of it is actually made to render a profitable return. The heavier matter, which used to find its way to the bottom of the sea outside Sandy Hook, where, at times, it caused trouble and misgiving to mariners by tending to form bars and shoals, is now used in the production of new lands for the use of the city. Thus, at Riker's Island, the filling in with the city's heavier refuse has resulted in the production of 84 acres of land, each of which is estimated to be worth $10,000, and by the year 1910 it is estimated that the total amount of made ground will have reached 270 acres. Down at Coney Island the same work of reclamation is being carried on, and 80 acres of the sunken meadows that border Coney Island creek has been reclaimed and brought up to grade. We understand, moreover, that the United States Government is prepared to purchase ashes from the city to fill in the large section of ground which it is making at the southerly end of Governor's Island. So much for the heavier refuse. The lighter refuse has also been rendered profitable. In the first place, the privilege of picking over the rubbish is let by contract, and a good price is paid for the same. What the contractor rejects is used as fuel in the boiler room of the city's new plant at the Williamsburg bridge. The operating expenses of this plant are paid by the money received for the picking-over contract. The plant serves to light the Williamsburg bridge, the Street Cleaning Department's stables, and the public schools in the immediate district. It cost $83,000, and it produces a revenue equivalent to $52,000 a year. The chief of the Street Cleaning Department is certainly to be congratulated on the fact that the present methods of disposal of city wastes are at once scientific, sanitary, and commercially profitable.—Scientific American.

HOW TO GET CONSUMPTION.

Ninety per cent. of the "lungers" contract consumption by allowing power of resistance to fall so low that a favorable condition for the development of the bacilli is provided. In a healthy system consumption can't take root. But where there is weakness and debility, there you find tuberculosis. For developing strength and building up the weak, nothing equals Ferrozone. It makes the blood nutritious and the nerves enduring. The way it converts food into nutriment, the appetite it gives is surprising. Just what the man verging on consumption needs—that's Ferrozone. If tired and weak don't put off. Fifty cents buys a box of fifty tablets—at all dealers.

A FAMOUS SURGEON

TALKS ABOUT SMOKING AS A DEVELOPER OF CANCER.

London, Jan. 8.— As several Chicago surgeons have issued a terrible warning to smoking mankind, seeing the cancer lurking in the bowl of the extra pipe, seeing it stamped on the band of the fat cigar and in the slender shape of the insidious cigarette, an Express representative asked a famous London surgeon what he thought, and he said: "It is very difficult to give an opinion on the subject.

"A man may come to me with a malignant disease of the throat and mouth, he has never been seen without a pipe, and his friends say, 'I told you so.' But people forget that many non-smokers develop cancer. I saw a patient this morning, who is forty years old. He has carefully avoided tobacco all his life, believing in consequence that he would escape the universal curse, but he had cancer of the tongue, and I could only give him a few months to live.

"There is no doubt that those whose families show a long record of the disease should live by rule and smoke very little. A small wound in the mouth may have malignant tendencies, which, if the pipe or the cigarette had been forsaken for a couple of weeks, might have healed normally instead of developing into a cancerous growth."

On the other hand, a clever dentist, who is at the top of his profession, considers that smoking often safeguards against disease, and believes that the spread of cancer is due to unhealthy conditions of the mouth.

"Some people come to me," he said, "who evidently never expended a minute on the care of their teeth. I believe the supposed injurious effect of tobacco is greatly exaggerated."

"A case came under my notice a day or two ago of a lady whose teeth were in a terribly septic condition, and who suffered from ulceration of the gums. She informed me, when I wondered at her immunity from internal disease, that she owed it to smoking twenty cigarettes a day and thus purified and disinfected her system."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Experiment in Profit Sharing.

About two years ago, through the death of Herr Krupp, of Germany, the Central Vermont Railway company learned of the scheme of Herr Krupp for the division among employees of the profits of the stores of the company of which he was the head and at once the system was introduced by the Vermont concern into its three stores. Committees of employees were formed to assist in the management of the business, and it was determined to turn the entire profits of each store over to the employees trading at these stores, in proportion to their purchases. The company does not, however, divide profits among customers who are employees of the company. The total sales for the first 8 months—that is, from May 1, 1903, to January 1, 1904—were $251,620.11, of which $179,716.38 were sales to employees of the company, and the balance of $71,903.73 were sales to non-employees. The profits from the business of the three stores, including sales to both employees and non-employees, were, for the same period, $16,296, or 6 4.10 per cent. of the entire sales. The dividends resulting from this profit were paid to the employees in January, 1904, by bank check. A similar dividend on the profits of 1904 was paid to employees of the company in cash in the month of January, 1905, while the dividend to the employees on their purchases has averaged, in both years, at the three stores, over nine per cent. With the dividend there has been delivered both years to each trading employee a printed statement, showing the details of the business done and the settlement of the same, with the amount of the employees' purchases and dividend filled in. By this system the employees gets, not only the profit on the goods he buys, but the profit on sales made to non-employees. The company retains no financial interest whatever in the profits of the stores, except a reasonable rent for the store building and four per cent. interest upon the capital actually invested in the business. Thus a possible suspicion of self-interest on the part of the company is eliminated. The managers of the company feel that these stores have now been carried on long enough to demonstrate their practical success. Co-operative stores have long been profitable and popular in England, conducted on a purely business basis, without any altruistic motive whatever. It is clear from the experience of this Vermont company that the principle of commercial co-operation may be combined with the spirit of altruism in a practical fashion. Whatever advantage the company gets from this altruistic work is found in the greater content and happiness of the employees, their consequent greater efficiency, and their increased loyalty to the company for which they are working.—The Outlook.

BEWARE OF MINING BOOM.

PREPARATIONS BEING MADE FOR A RUSH OF PEOPLE TO COBALT DISTRICT.

Toronto, Jan. 4.—A note of warning against the possibilities of an injurious mining boom in Ontario during the year of grace 1906 was sounded to-day by Prof. W. G. Miller of the Bureau of Mines.

"The indications are for the biggest stampede in the spring that Ontario has ever seen," he said. "We are getting letters by the hundred from all over North America and many parts of Europe asking about this Cobalt region, and from what we have actual knowledge of there is going to be a tremendous rush."

GOOD THINGS ALL TAKEN.

"What is there for them to get?"

"Well, as far as we know the big things are all pretty well taken. The great trouble is that wildcat schemes are being floated, and another attempt to fleece the people will be made. The people who own good properties are, as a rule, not peddling stock around. But everyone has heard so much of Cobalt that they are ready to grasp any opportunity to get stock in what they think is a company with mineral assets there. There is not a community in the whole Province that is not talking about Cobalt. One hears the word everywhere in snatches of conversation. And the indications are that the sharpers are getting ready to offer bait.

EASY TO CATCH THEM.

"They do not need to make very reckless statements to get people in. For instance, I have seen one advertisement which announces a 'calcite' vein. Well, 'calcite' is only rock, but I suppose some people might think that it is some valuable mineral.

"The policy of the Department has been to try to keep out these 'wildcats,' and that is the reason that we have insisted on the 'valuable discovery' clause. But they have some land — veterans' claims and such—and these, I suppose will be exploited.

"These booms are the worst thing that can happen for the mining industry, and mining men are afraid of them. We have already had three of them in this Province. One in the 60's about Madoc gold, then one about Lake Superior silver, and finally in the 90's the Rainy River gold boom. Each one gave the industry a bad set-back. Why, only a couple of years ago you couldn't float the best mining proposition imaginable in all Toronto. People simply wouldn't listen to you."

Address and Presentation.

A very pleasant time was spent on Tuesday evening last at the home of Mr. Charles Westfall, Front of Thurlow. Mr. Westfall having sold his farm and being about to move away, his numerous friends in the neighborhood determined to show their appreciation of the kindness and generous hospitality always shown by him and his wife, so they arranged a surprise party, which proved a great success. Early in the evening the neighbors began to arrive and soon the rooms were filled to overflowing. The ladies at once took charge of the proceedings and for that evening Mr. and Mrs. Westfall were in their own home the guests of their uninvited, but very welcome visitors. After all had arrived Mr. and Mrs. Westfall were escorted to the parlor, where the following address was read by Mrs. Henry Leavens, Thurlow, Jan. 2, 1906.

Dear Friends,—We, your friends and neighbors, have met together this evening to express to you our sincere regret at your departure from our neighborhood. During the years we have associated together you have endeared yourselves to us in many ways and we ask you to accept this clock as a slight token of our regard. Hoping that you may be spared many years to use it and that heaven's blessings may rest upon you in your new home, we remain, your sincere friends, Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Leavens, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Hurley, Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Grass, Miss E. and Mr. John Hamm, Mr. and Mrs. George Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Bell, Mrs. J. Summers and family, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Palmer, Mr. and Mrs. E. McGowan, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Grass.

When the address had been read, Mr. Wm. Palmer, on behalf of those present, presented Mr. and Mrs. Westfall with a very handsome marble clock. Mr. and Mrs. Westfall were entirely taken by surprise, but in a few words Mr. Westfall, for himself and wife, expressed their very great appreciation of the kindness, friendship and good feeling always shown to them by those present. They were deeply touched by this act of theirs and sincerely hoped that, although removing from the neighborhood, they would often see their old and esteemed friends of the Front of Thurlow. After a bountiful repast provided by the ladies, songs, etc., filled in the time till midnight, when with three rousing cheers for Mr. and Mrs. Westfall and the singing of "For they are jolly good fellows," the company dispersed. Mr. and Mrs. Westfall leave the neighborhood after a residence of over 20 years, carrying away with them the love and best wishes of a very large circle of friends.

STOMACH CURE.

An Easy Way from Standpoint of Convenience

The so-called cures for indigestion are almost as numerous as the victims themselves, and scarcely a day passes without the hopes of thousands of sufferers being raised by the discovery of some novel method of cure for this prevalent disease.

Until a combination of unusual remedies, heretofore but little known in this country, was made in Mi-o-na tablets, no certain cure for indigestion had been found, and it is therefore hardly to be wondered at that our leading druggists who have the Belleville agency are selling large quantities of Mi-o-na.

Mi-o-na is a guaranteed cure for all diseases of the stomach excepting cancer. If you have pains or distress after eating, headache, belching of gases, sour taste in the mouth, dizziness, heartburn, specks before the eyes, furred tongue, sleeplessness, backache, debility or weakness it shows that the stomach needs to be strengthened with Mi-o-na.

Just one little tablet out of 50-cent box before meals for a few days and you will soon regain perfect health and strength.

If you cannot obtain Mi-o-na of your druggist, it will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. Write us for advice on your case from a leading stomach specialist which will be sent free. The R. T. Booth Company, Ithaca, N. Y.

British Investors.

(Brockville Times.)

We have more than once in these columns referred to the complaint of people in Canada that the British did not invest more of their capital in this country. We have also pointed out that British capital has been sunk in Canada in vast amounts with little or no chance of getting interest on the investment or in many cases of recovering the principal. Is it any wonder that the British investor is shy—especially when he sees Canadian capital being poured out into enterprises far from home?

The Vancouver Province recently commented upon this matter, taking as an example certain brewery properties in Toronto which were bought twelve years ago for a million and a quarter dollars by British investors, but which were sold a short time ago for three-quarters of a million dollars. The Vancouver Province writes as follows:

When we consider therefore that the price paid by the British investors at the time they took these industries over was probably not excessive, that it was calculated on the business which was then being done, we are confronted with the question why the value of the investment has so greatly depreciated—why Old Country capital, which was simply seeking a fair and profitable field of activity, has not only not been able, in the face of a greatly increased demand for the article it was engaged in producing, to make the business a lucrative one, but has failed so lamentably that it has finally sacrificed three-quarters of the original purchase money in withdrawing from the field? The question is one which is important not only in the East, but in the West; it is as desirable that it should be answered frankly in British Columbia as in Ontario, because in this province, as in older Canada, the opportunities for safe and profitable investment are becoming larger, and our aim should be to interest British capital rather than any other. The money available in Great Britain for development purposes where the resources are undoubted and for the establishment of great enterprises is immense, and it is invariably employed with more consideration for the welfare of the country where it is invested, than that of the United States, or indeed any other country. It is desirable therefore that British capitalists should be made to see that no country offers them the same absolute safety as Canada does. They will hardly be led to see this, however, if they are to be invariably losers as they have been in the past in the Dominion.

It may be said that much of the trouble lies with the English people themselves; that they appoint as managers of their enterprises men who come here with preconceived ideas of how they are to direct the business entrusted to their keeping, and will not adapt themselves to conditions under which only success is possible. That there is some truth in this charge cannot be denied, but it is by no means all the truth, and it is to be feared that they are, now and again the victims of a hostility which results in relieving them at once of their money and their confidence in the people among whom they came. Eventually such a policy connived at by the people of this country will assuredly have consequences which will far more seriously affect Canada than the English investors.

Joint Installation.

The newly-elected officers of Belleville and Mizpah Lodges, I.O.O.F., also the officers of Quinte and Moira Encampments, will be jointly installed to-night. The Grand Master of Ontario, Bro. F. R. Blowett, of Listowel, and the Grand Chief Patriarch, Bro. Garbutt, of Picton, will be present.

SIR JAMES WATSON'S OPINION.

He says that the commonest of all disorders, and one from which few escape, is catarrh. Sir James firmly believes in local treatment, which is best supplied by "Catarrhozone." No case of catarrh can exist where Catarrhozone is used; it is a miracle worker, relieves almost instantly and cures after other remedies fail. Other treatments can't reach the diseased parts like Catarrhozone, because it goes to the source of the trouble along with the air you breathe. Catarrhozone is free from cocaine, it leaves no bad after-effects; it is simply nature's own cure. Accept no substitute for Catarrhozone, which alone can cure catarrh.

Paris Restaurants.

A Chicago man just returned from a ramble in Europe declares that in Paris the traps for unwary travelers are innumerable as the sands of the seashore. One of the most familiar is the restaurant where the bill of fare is without prices, the check being made out according to what the customer seems able to pay. "I was bitten once or twice in this way," says the traveler, "but then I refused to order unless the menu mentioned the cost. Sometimes the proprietor protested feebly, but I told him that he didn't buy his victuals without knowing the price, and I should follow his example."

To Save One's Bacon.

"To save one's bacon"—that is, to make a narrow escape—is supposed to refer to the Dunmow flitch. For many centuries it was the custom at Dunmow, in England, to present a flitch of bacon to a married couple of twenty years' standing who would make oath on the Scriptures that they had never had a quarrel. To come close to a quarrel without an actual rupture was, in the popular dialect, "to save one's bacon."

Every Bit as Good.

"No, but I have something just as good," replied the young man who formerly worked in a drug store.

First Treaty of Portsmouth.

The first treaty of Portsmouth, N. H., was signed July 11, 1713, the contracting parties being belligerent Indians and the whites. The news of the treaty of Utrecht, which ended Queen Anne's war, reached the city Oct. 29, 1712. The Indians desired a treaty, and it was formally signed on the above date.

The Oldest Tale of a Tub.

The cynics, so called from the Greek word for a dog, were a rude, snarling sect of so called philosophers, who despised riches, the arts and all culture. Among these Diogenes was conspicuous. He was born in 412 B. C., and when a man he dressed in a coarse robe, which covered him day and night, and carried a wooden bowl and a bag for his alms and his food. His home was a large tub discarded from the temple of Cybele, a huge earthen jar, that had held wine or oil for the services and sacrifices of the temple. Though cracked and patched, it was large enough to hold him lying at full length. The story goes that Alexander the Great came up to him one day and asked what he could do for him. "Don't stand between me and the sun," was the curt reply, upon which the emperor is said to have exclaimed, "If I were not Alexander I would be Diogenes!"

Lightning as a Rock Driller.

"Lightning when in the mood has an ugly habit of drilling," writes an English observer. "It will drill the hardest rock, rock which would turn cold steel, and not only drill but vitrify it. They have found in Cumberland channels from thirty feet deep and from two to four inches in circumference. The interior was hard and glazed where the solid substance had been melted by the stabbing flashes. Artificial experiment has shown that a powerful shock from a battery will vitrify finely powdered glass, but not feldspar or quartz. The lightning, however, does it in the manner described—not in one place, but in many, showing that before striking the ground it divided into several branches, each strong enough to penetrate and liquefy the solid rock."

In a Man's Pockets.

A fairly well equipped gentleman true to his calling and to his friends carries quite a kit of tools. There are a jackknife, a match box, a cigar cutter, a nail file, a corkscrew, a finger nail tool and possibly a cigar holder and some good five centers to give away. And yet women wonder what he finds to put in his pockets. To facilitate further the business of just hanging around he must have a little money, a handkerchief, bunch of keys, fountain pen, some lead pencils and sharpener, eyeglasses, notebook, watch, old letters, papers of more or less supposed value and a cardcase. Not one pocket could be spared unless it is the one on his nightshirt, and that looks so sweet.

Told by the Watch.

To tell the points of the compass by a watch point the hour hand at the sun; then south is halfway between the hour hand and the figure 12 of the dial. To measure an angle by a watch lay two straight edged pieces of paper on the angle, crossing at the apex. Holding them where they overlap, lay them on the face of the watch, with the apex at the center. Read the angle by the minutes of the dial, each minute being six degrees of arc. It is easy to measure within two or three degrees in this way.

TIMELY TOPICS.

THE TALE OF THE CURFEW.

(Washington Star.)

I'm weary of paint and powder,
  I'm weary of eyebrows and curls,
And the busy soubrette who sings louder
  Than all the rest of the girls.
And my fancy turns to the past to dwell
  On the lassie who used to recite
    The story they tell
    Of the curfew bell
  Forbidden to ring to-night.

I'm tired of the leading lady
  With the frown and the alto voice,
In the past that's described as shady
  No more can my heart rejoice.
To that curfew lassie — the village pride—
  My memory once more inclines,
    Who sweetly tried
    And who almost cried
  Because she forgot her lines.

No queen of the drama is half so fair
  As the star of that night, in sooth;
There is none with such gold in her waving hair
  And none with such artless youth.
And how I resent each ruthless year
  That curtains the scenes of old!
    I'd pay right dear
    For a place to hear
  That tale of the curfew told.

Fish-curing experts in British Columbia are being congratulated on having made a success of curing herrings. Unlike mere mortals, it seems that when once these fish are cured they stay cured and require no more medicine. However, it is but justice to the medical profession to point out that no fish is cured until it is dead, which seems to indicate that there is a certain resemblance, after all.

The Court of Review, sitting at Quebec, has held an electric power company responsible to an insurance company for losses the latter had to pay because of damages to a policy-holder's premises caused by a fire started by the company's wires. The principle was laid down that when any accident happens by reason of the escape of a dangerous current of electricity it is for those who have charge of the wires to show that it happened from some cause beyond their control. There is, says the Montreal Gazette, more than a heavy legal lesson in such a judgment. It should be good economy to put the wires where the risks of dangerous leaks is the least—underground.

The reformed uniform for the bluejackets, which is to make the handyman of our navy a different looking sailor lad, came into force at Christmas, says the London Daily Mail. The familiar caps and blue collars will disappear, and Jack will be given a peaked cap and a jacket. Sailors have several objections to the old-time picturesque costume: The baggy trousers were liable to catch in machinery, the open jumper was nicknamed the "pneumonia catcher," and the white straw hats for hot weather were difficult to stow away. A jacket loosely fitting, comfortable around the neck, with a turned-down collar and five buttons; a peaked cap, light, ventilated, with broad, flat top and, for use in hot weather, a cover to protect the back of the neck; trousers moderately loose; this was the reconstruction favored by the lower deck of the Home Fleet.

REVENUE OVER SIX MILLIONS.

Ontario Finances Seem to Be in Very Fine Shape.

Toronto, Jan. 5.—The revenue of the Ontario Government for 1905 was over $6,000,000. The complete returns from all departments have not yet been compiled, however, and it may total considerably more.

There has been an increase of revenue in nearly every department, in addition to the $100,000 receipts from the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway.

During the year 1904, the sum of $1,664,000 was received as bonuses on timber sales; last year the amount received on that account was only $520,000. But the ordinary revenue from Crown lands last year was $548,000 more than in the previous year.

It is expected that Hon. Mr. Matheson, the Provincial Treasurer, will be able to show a surplus after meeting all expenses of the year.

To Probe Election Frauds.

Toronto, Jan. 5.—The Ontario Cabinet was in session for some time yesterday afternoon, but Premier Whitney stated afterwards that there was nothing to give out. Hon. Mr. Whitney stated that the Government had been strongly pressed to institute an enquiry into corruption, as practiced in Kingston and other elections, that the Cabinet had discussed it, and it will come up for further consideration. The proposition is that the enquiry be made by the committee on privileges and elections.

An Important Announcement.

Weston, Jan. 5.—Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Mines and Lands for Ontario, made an important announcement at the Conservative banquet here last night. It was to the effect that he hoped to introduce legislation at the forthcoming session of the Legislature which would result in all the nickel mined in this province being refined here as well. He also indicated that some kind of progressive policy was being contemplated by the Government in the direction of developing and distributing the great water power resources of this province.

GEN. RODRIGUEZ KILLED.

President Morales' Force Defeated in Sharp Engagement.

Cape Haytien, Hayti, Jan. 5.—Following the attack made Jan. 2 on Puerto Plata, on the northern coast of Santo Domingo, by Gen. Demetrio Rodriguez, commanding the troops of the fugitive president, Gen. Morales, which resulted in the repulse of the Morales forces by the Caceres garrison, after sharp fighting, the Caceres troops, commanded by Gen. Cespedes, attacked the Morales troops Wednesday in their position outside Puerto Plata. Stubborn fighting followed, during which many men were killed or wounded on both sides, resulting in the defeat of the Morales forces, who were dispersed by the Caceres troops.

Gen. Rodriguez Killed.

Among the killed was Gen. Demetrio Rodriguez, former Governor of Monte Christi, who, as reported in Monte Christi, had announced that if his attack on Puerto Plata was successful he would proclaim himself a candidate for the presidency of Santo Domingo. The streets of Puerto Plata are almost deserted, the stores are closed, and business is at a standstill. The Dominican exiles, who have been authorized by the Morales party to return to Santo Domingo, are landing at Monte Christi, not far from Puerto Plata.

BALLOTS ARE IRREGULAR.

Courts Will Investigate Hon. A. Calder's Election in South Regina.

Regina, Sask., Jan. 5.—Irregularities in connection with the election of Hon. A. Calder, Minister of Education in South Regina, have developed.

A peculiar system of voting was used in Saskatchewan for the election. Voters for Provincial Rights candidates used blue pencil in marking ballots, and for the Liberal candidate a red pencil.

In South Regina, many ballots were initialled and otherwise irregularly marked.

Provincial Rights ballots thus marked were thrown out, while Liberal ballots, equally irregular, were counted.

The case will be carried to the courts.

Haultain's Long Journey.

Winnipeg, Jan. 5.—F. W. G. Haultain arrived last night from the constituency of Kinistino, the election in ten northern polls of which were held on Dec. 27.

Haultain traveled, in addressing electors at various polls, hundreds of miles by pack sled.

The result of the election is still in doubt. The polls are hundreds of miles from the main roads or telegraph stations. At last reports Dr. Shadd, Provincial Rights candidate, was ahead.

Election Protests Dismissed.

Toronto, Jan. 5.—Chief Justice Falconbridge and Justice Street yesterday dismissed the petition against the election of W. Telford, Liberal, for North Grey.

Chancellor Boyd and Justice Teetzel performed the same duty of Col. Tisdale, Conservative, Norfolk.

There were no straight loads of shipping cattle offered, but several lots were picked out of the many loads of butcher cattle. Princes ranged from $4.50 to $4.80. There was a limited supply, with a fair demand for those offered, as will be seen by sales quoted. An Old Prescription.

Dr. William Osler in one of his Baltimore lectures recited a quaint old cure for the gout—a cure from a seventeenth century work that was designed to show gout's hopelessness.

"First, pick," said this odd cure, "a handkerchief from the pocket of a spinster of thirty-five who never wished to wed; second, wash the handkerchief in an honest miller's pond; third, dry it on the hedge of a person who was never covetous; fourth, send it to the shop of a physician who never killed a patient; fifth, mark it with a lawyer's ink who never cheated a client, and, sixth, apply it hot to the gout tormented part. A speedy cure will follow."

A Little Ambiguous.

Mr. Gladstone was much bothered by young, unknown authors, who sent him their published works for his judgment. So his secretary was instructed to use this ingenious formula of acknowledgment: "My Dear Sir—Mr. Gladstone instructs me to say that he is in receipt of your book, for which he returns thanks. Be assured that he will lose no time in perusing it."

The Lord's Prayer.

The question having arisen as to whether the English version of the Lord's Prayer is a true reproduction of the original as found in Matthew, a native Greek scholar proceeds to answer it. He deals with the petitions in order, translates each word with all the shades of meaning of the original and then presents the whole in this form:

"Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name—thy dominion come—thy (fixed) purpose be done, as in heaven, so, too, on earth. Give us this day our mere (or simple) bread and forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors theirs, and let us not fall into a tempter's snare, but deliver us from the evil one."

Very Lively.

A London paper relates that a crowd of sightseers scurrying across the road from the Strand caused a partial block in the traffic. The lagging of a particularly pompous old gentleman roused the ire of a held up cabby. "Now, then, hurry up there, can't yer?" he shouted.

"Am I not hurrying, cabman?" was the mild expostulation.

"'Urryin'?" snorted cabby, with a flick of his whip. "You're a-jumpin' about like a bit o' stickin' plaster!"

A Diplomatic Answer.

Admiral Drake when a lad at the beginning of his first engagement was observed to shake and tremble very much and, being rallied upon it, observed with a presence of mind, or, at all events, of humor, in which even Nelson was lacking, "My flesh trembles at the anticipation of the many and great dangers into which my resolute and undaunted head will lead me."

The Lust of Hate

BY GUY BOOTHBY

Author of "A Beautiful White Devil," "A Bid For Fortune," "The Marriage of Esther," "Dr. Nikola," Etc., Etc.

"If it will please you I will do so," she said, softly.

"God bless you, dear," I answered. And thus the matter was concluded.

CHAPTER XII.

Nearly a week had elapsed since I had made my confession to Agnes at the Falls, and in three days it was Mr. Maybourne's intention to set out on his return journey to the South. During the whole of that period not one word had been said by Miss Maybourne regarding my story. But if she did not refer to it in speech it was easy to see that the subject was never absent from her mind. On two occasions I heard her father question her as to the reason of her quietness, and I saw that each time she found it a more difficult task to invent a satisfactory reply. What this meant to me you will readily understand. I could not sleep at night for thinking of it, and not once but a thousand times I bitterly regretted having burdened her mind with my unhappy secret.

Two afternoons prior to our guests' departure I was sitting in my verandah reading the letters which had been brought to the mine by the mailman at midday. Mr. Maybourne was sitting near me, also deep in his correspondence, while his daughter had gone to her own room for the same purpose. When I came to the end of my last epistle I sat with it in my hand, looking out across the veldt, and thinking of all that had happened since I had said good-bye to old England. From one thing my thoughts turned to another; I thought of my wandering life in Australia, of poor old Ben Garman, of Markapurlie, and last of all of Bartrand. The memory of my hatred for him brought me home again to London, and I saw myself meeting Nikola in the Strand, and then accompanying him home to his extraordinary abode. As I pictured him seated in his armchair in that oddly-furnished room, all my old horror of him flashed back upon me. I seemed to feel the fascination of his eyes just as I had done that night when we visited that murderous cab in the room below.

While I was thinking of him, I heard a footstep on the path that led round the house, and presently Mackinnon appeared before me. He beckoned with his hand, and understanding that he desired to speak to me, I rose from my chair and went out to him.

"What is it?" I enquired, as I approached him, for at that hour he was generally in the depths of the mine. "Has anything gone wrong."

"That's as ye care to take my words he answered, wheeling about and leading me out of earshot of the house. There was something in his manner that frightened me, though I could not for the life of me have said why. When we reached the fence that separated my garden from the open veldt I stopped, and leaning on the rails, once more asked him why he had called me out.

"I told ye a fortnight ago that there was trouble brewing for us with the natives," he said impressively "I warned ye a week ago that 'twas no better. Now I tell ye its close upon us, and if we're not prepared, God help us all."

"What do you mean? Don't speak in enigmas, man. Tell me straight out what your are driving at."

"Isn't that what I'm trying to do?" he said. "I tell ye the whole country's in a ferment. The Matabele are out, and in a few hours, if not before, we shall have proof of it."

"Good God man!" I cried, "how do you know this? And why did you not make me see the importance of it before?"

"'Ye can lead a horse to the water but ye canna make him drink,' says the proverb," he answered. "Ye can tell a man of danger, but ye canna make him see it. An' so 'twas with ye. I told ye my suspicions a fortnight past, but 'twas only this minute I came to know how bad it really was."

"And how have you come to hear of it now?"

"Stop this way an' I'll show ye."

RAT PORTAGE, October, 1905

I was troubled for about two years with kidney trouble, so common among railway men. I doctored in the regular way and took a great deal of medicine, but received no benefit. My fireman recommended Gin Pills, and I am pleased to state that after taking the first box I got relief, and while I am not taking them regularly, if I feel any indications of a return of the trouble, a few doses puts me all right again.

CHAS. SIMMONS, C.P.R. Engineer.

This letter is the experience of hundreds. They try doctors and drugs without relief, but they find the cure for their trouble in GIN PILLS. Take advantage of our generous offer. Mention in what paper you saw this, with your name and address, and we will send you, absolutely free of charge, a sample box of GIN PILLS. They are sold by all druggists at 50c a box, or 6 boxes for $2.50.

THE BOLE DRUG CO. - WINNIPEG, MAN.

He led me to a small hut near the kitchen. On reaching it, he opened it and showed me a man stretched out upon a bed of sacks and grass. He was a white man, and seemed utterly exhausted.

"This man's name," said Mackinnon, as if he were exhibiting some human curiosity, "is Andrews. He's a prospector, and we've been acquent for years. Now tell your yarn, Andrews, and let Mr. Wrexford here see how bad the matter is"

"I've not much to tell, sir," said the man addressed, sitting up as he spoke. "It came about like this: I am a prospector, and I was out away back on the river there, never dreaming there was mischief in the wind. Then my boys began to drop hints that there was likely to be trouble, and I'd best keep my weather eye open. At first I didn't believe them, but when I got back to camp at mid-day to-day and found both my servants murdered, my bullocks killed, and my rifles and everything else of value stolen, I guessed who had done it. Fortunately, they had passed on without waiting for me, so I got into the saddle again and came here post haste to warn you. I tell you this, the Matabele are rising. The impi that murdered my men is under one of the king's sons, and by this time they are not twenty miles distant from this spot. There can be no doubt that they are traveling this way. From what my boys told me. Buluwayo is surrounded, while three more impis are traveling night and day with the same object as the one I now warn you of, namely, to cut off the advance of the troops being pushed forward to oppose them from the south."

"Do you mean this? On your oath, are you telling me the truth?"

"God strike me dead if I'm not," he answered, solemnly. Look at me, I've made my way in here as hard as a man could come, riding for his life. That should be proof enough; but if it isn't, Mr. Mackinnon here will speak for me, I'm sure."

"That I will," said Mackinnon. "I've known you long enough, and always found you a straightforward man."

I stood for a few moments deep in thought.

"How far do you think they are away from us at the present moment?"

"Not more than twenty miles at most, sir. I left my camp on the river about mid-day, and I've been here about a quarter of an hour. I came in as hard as I could ride; say five hours riding at twelve miles an hour, making a big detour of about twenty miles, to avoid them. That should make between fifteen and twenty miles away now if they did five miles an hour straight across country."

"And you're sure they mean war?"

"There's not a doubt of it, sir. I know the vermin too well by this time not to be certain of that."

"Then I must tell Mr. Maybourne at once. Come with me, Mackinnon, and you too, Andrews, if you can manage it. We must hold a council of war and see what's best to be done."

I led them across the small paddock to my office, and then went on to the house in search of my employer. I found his pacing up and down the verandah, looking rather disturbed.

"Wrexford, my dear fellow," he began, on seeing me, "I have been looking for you. I want a few moments' earnest conversation with you."

"And I with you, sir," I answered.

He led me beyond the verandah before he spoke again.

"You must hear me first. What I want to see you about is as important as life and death to us all. I have received a number of letters by the mail, and one all all warn me that there is likely to be trouble with the Matabele. The Chartered Company have seen it coming, I am told, and are taking all the necessary steps to secure life and property, but there is no knowing when the brutes may not be on us, and what they may not do if they start with the upper hand. Now, you see, if I were alone I should have no hesitation in remaining to see it out—but there is Agnes to consider; and, with a woman in the question, one has to think twice before one ventures upon such a course."

"That is the very thing I came over to see you about, sir. Serious news has just reached me, and—well, to tell you the truth, we are in danger now, this very minute. If you will step over to my office, I have a man there who has seen the enemy within forty miles of this place, and he tells me they are advancing in our direction even now."

His face, for an instant, became deadly pale, and I noticed that he glanced anxiously at the sitting-room door.

"Steady, Wrexford, for heaven's sake," he said. "Not too loud, or Agnes will hear. We musn't frighten her before we are absolutely obliged. Come to the office and let me see this man for myself."

Together we walked over to my den where Mackinnon and Andrews were awaiting us.

Mr. Maybourne nodded to the former and then looked searchingly at the latter.

"I am told that you have seen the Matabele under arms to-day," he began, coming straight to the point, as was characteristic of him.

"My servants were killed by them, and my camp was looted about forty miles from this office," replied Andrews, meeting Mr. Maybourne's glance without flinching.

"At what number should you estimate them?"

"Roughly speaking, from what I saw of them from a hill nearly a mile distant, I should say they were probably two thousand strong. They were in full war dress, and from what my servants had hinted to me that morning, I gathered that they are led by one of the king's sons."

"You have no doubt in your mind that they are coming this way?"

"I don't think there's a shadow of a doubt about it, sir. They're probably trying to effect a junction with another impi, and then they'll be ready to receive any troops that may come up against them from the South."

"There's something in that," said Mr. Maybourne, reflectively. "And now I am going to ask you the most important question of all, gentlemen. That is, what's to be done? If we abandon this place, the mine and the buildings will be wrecked for certain. At the best we can only reach the township, where we can certainly go into laager, but in my opinion we shall be even worse off there than we are here. What do you say?"

There could not be any doubt about the matter in my opinion. In the township we should certainly be able to make up a larger force, but our defences could not be made so perfect, while to abandon the mine was an act for which none of us were prepared.

"Very well then," continued Mr. Maybourne, when he had heard that we agreed with him, "in that case the best thing we can do is to form a laager here, and prepare to hold out until the troops that I have been told are on their way up can rescue us. How are we off for arms and ammunition, Wrexford?"

"I will show you," I said, and forthwith led the way through the office into a smaller room at the back. Here I pointed to an arm-rack in which twenty-two Winchester repeating rifles, a couple of Martini-Henris, and about thirty cutlasses were arranged.

"How many men capable of firing a decent shot can we muster?" asked Mr. Maybourne, when he had overhauled the weapons.

"Nineteen white men, including ourselves, and about half-a-dozen natives."

"And how much ammunition have we?"

"I can tell you in a moment," I answered, taking up a book from the table and consulting it. "Here it is. Two thousand cartridges for the repeating rifles, two hundred for the Martinis, and a thousand for the six revolvers I have in this drawer."

"A good supply, and I congratulate you on it. Now let us get to work. Ring the bell, Mr. Mackinnon, and call all the hands up to the house. I'll talk to them, and when I've explained our position, we'll get to work on the laager."

Ten minutes later every man had been informed of his danger, and was taking his share of work upon the barricades. Wagons, cases, sacks of flour, sheets of iron—everything, in fact, which would be likely to give shelter to ourselves and resistance to the enemy was pressed into our service, while all that would be likely to afford cover to the enemy for a hundred yards or so round the house was destroyed. Every tank that could be utilized was carried to the house and filled with water. The cattle were driven in, and when small earthworks had been thrown up and the stores had been stacked in a safe place, we felt we might consider ourselves prepared for a siege. By nightfall we were ready and waiting for the appearance of our foe. Sentries were posted, and in order that the township might be apprised of its danger and also, that the troops who were hourly expected, as Mr. Maybournehad informed us, might know of our peril, a man was despatched on a fast horse with a letter to the inhabitants.

Having accompanied Mr. Maybourne round the square, and assured myself that our defences were as perfect as the limited means at our disposal would permit, our store of arms was brought from the office and the distribution commenced. A Winchester repeating rifle and a hundred cartridges, a cutlass, and a revolver, were issued to each white man, and after they were supplied the native boys were called up. To our astonishment and momentary dismay only one put in an appearance. The rest had decamped, doubtless considering discretion the better part of valour. When, however, we saw the stuff of which they were made this did not trouble us very much.

As soon as every man had received his weapons, and had had his post and his duties pointed out to him, Mr. Maybourne and I left them to their own devices, and went up to the house. The former had told his daughter of our danger, and for this reason I was prepared to find her, if not terrified, at least showing some alarm. But to my amazement I discovered her hard at work preparing a meal for the garrison, just as calmly and quietly as if nothing out of the common were occuring. She greeted me with a smile, showed me her puddings boiling on the fire, and pointed to a number of buckets which stood about the verandah. These were filled with some peculiar-looking fluid; and I enquired what it might be. In answer I was told that was oatmeal and water.

"If we are to fight," said this daughter of war, "you will find it thirsty work. I shall put these buckets, with mugs, at convenient places, so that you may assuage your thirst if occasion serves."

I noticed also that she had prepared a large quantity of lint in case it should be required, and had arranged a number of mattresses in the verandah. Her courage put fresh heart into me, as without doubt it did into everyone else who saw her. I told her that she was braver than the boldest man amongst us, and she thereupon showed that she still had sufficient of the woman left in her to blush with pleasure at the compliment.

"If the enemy were only forty miles away at midday," said Mr. Maybourne as we carried the men's tea out into the open to them, "they ought to be close at hand now. When we've done our meal we'll post extra sentries; for though I do not for a moment expect they'll attack us in the dar, it would never do to allow ourselves to be surprised."

I agreed wih him; and, accordingly, as soon as our tea was finished, men were placed not only at the four corners of the laager, but at equal distances between them. The remainder lay down to rest wherever they could make themselves most comfortable. I found myself about the only exception to the rule; and, do what I would, I could not sleep. Having tried for an hour and a half, and found it still impossible, I went across to the verandah and sat down in one of the cane chairs there. I had not been there many moments before I was joined by Agnes, who seated herself beside me. I reproved her for not resting after her labors of the day.

"I could not sleep," she answered. "Brave as you call me, I am far too nervous to rest. Do you really think the enemy will attack us in the morning?"

"Not knowing their plans, I cannot say," I replied, "but I must confess it looks terribly like it."

"In that case I want you to promise me something, Gilbert."

"What is it?" I asked. "You know there is nothing I would not do for you, Agnes. What am I to promise?"

"That if we are overpowered you will not let me fall into their hands alive. You may think me a coward, but I dread that more than any thought of death."

"Hush! You must not talk like that. Have no fear, we will not let you fall into their hands. You know there is not a man upon the mine who would not give his life for you."

She leaned a little forward and looked into my face. "I know you would protect me, would you not?"

"Wait and see. The man who touches you, Agnes, will have to do it over my dead body. Do you know that to-night, for some reason or other, I feel more superstitious than I have ever done before. I can't rid myself of the thought that I am near the one vital crisis of my life."

"What do you mean, Gilbert? You frighten me."

"I cannot tell you what I mean, for I don't know myself. I think I'm what the Scotch call 'fey.'"

"I have prayed to God for you," she said. "He who has protected us before will do so again. Let us do our duty and leave the rest to Him."

"Amen to that," I answered solemnly; and then with a whispered "good-night" she got up and went into the house again.

Hour after hour I sat on in the verandah, as much unable to sleep as I had been at the beginning. At intervals I made a circuit of the sentries, and convinced myself that no man was sleeping at his post, but for the greater part of the time I sat staring at the winking stars. Though I searched the open space outside the laager over and over again, not a sign of the enemy could I discover. If they were there, they must have been keeping wonderfully quiet. The sighing of the breeze in the long veldt grass was the only sound that I could distinguish.

I heard the clock in the house behind me strike one, two, and then three. By the time the last hour sounded, it was beginning to grow light. From where I sat in the verandah, I could just discern the shadowy outline of the wagons, and distinguish the figures of the sentries as they paced to and fro at their posts.

Thinking it was time to be astir, I rose from my chair and went into the house to help Agnes by lighting the fire for her, and putting the kettles on to boil.

I had just laid the sticks, and was about to set a match to them, when a shot rang out on the northern side of the laager. It was immediately followed by another from the south. I waited to hear no more, but snatched up my rifle from the table and ran out into the open. Before I had crossed the verandah, shots were being fired in all directions, and on reaching my post, I discovered a black crowd advancing at a run towards us.

"Steady men, steady," I heard Mr. Maybourne shout as he took up his station. "Don't lose your heads whatever you do. Keep under cover, and don't fire till you're certain your shot will tell."

The words were hardly out of his mouth before the enemy were upon us, brandishing their assegais and shields, and yelling in a manner that would have chilled the blood of the oldest veteran. It was the first time I had ever fired a shot at my fellow man, and for the moment I will confess to feeling afraid. However, that soon passed, and I found myself taking aim, and firing as coolly as the best of them. Though I was hardly conscious that I had pulled the trigger, I saw the man directly in front of me—a fine, tall fellow with a nodding head-dress of feathers—suddenly throw up his arms and fall forward on his face, tearing at the ground with his hands in his death agony. But I was not able to do more than glance at him before two others were upon me. This time I fired with more deliberation than before, with the result that both went down, one after the other, like ninepins. Then for what seemed a year, but must in reality have been about three minutes, I continued to fire, depressing the finger lever between each shot and tipping out the empty cartridge with automatic regularity. In front of my defences a ghastly pile of bodies was fast accumulating, and by craning my neck to right and left, I could discern similar heaps before the shelters of my next-door neighbors.

This desire to ascertain how my friends were getting on was, however, nearly my undoing; for if I had been more intent upon my own concerns, I should have seen a man wriggling along on the ground towards me. Just however, as he was about to hurl his assegai I caught sight of him, and brought my rifle to the shoulder. Seeing this, he rose to his feet with a jump, and hurled his spear. I dodged with the quickness of lightning, and heard it strike the tyre of the wheel behind me. At the same instant I covered him and pulled the trigger. To my horror the rifle did not go off. I had fired my nine shots, and the magazine was empty. But my wits did not desert me for long. Before the savage had time to clamber on to the wheel and raise his knob-kerrie, I was within striking distance, and, swinging my rifle by the barrel high into the air, brought the butt down upon his head with a crash that might have been heard yards away. It crushed in his skull like an egg-shell, and he fell like a log and never moved again.

As he went down a sudden peace descended upon the field, and for a moment or two every man wondered what had happened. The smoke quickly cleared away, and when it did we saw that the foe had retired. I accordingly clambered back to my old position, and looked about me. My throat was like a lime kiln, and my eyes were dry as dust. But I was not going to take any refreshment, though a bucket stood quite close to me, until I had refilled my rifle. This done, I crossed to the bucket, filled the mug and drank its contents with a relish such as I had never known in my life before. When I had handed it to another man, I turned about and endeavored to take stock of our company. From where I stood I could see two men stretched out upon the ground. The one nearest me I knew instantly. It was Mackinnon, and a single glance was sufficient to tell me that he was dead. The other I could not for the moment identify. Mr. Maybourne, I was relieved to see, was unhure save for a wound on his left hand, which he explained he had received in a hand-to-hand encounter in his corner.

We've taught the brutes a lesson in all conscience," he said. "I don't fancy they'll be as eager next time. How many men have we lost?"

In order to find out, we walked quickly round our defences, encouraging the garrison as we went, and bidding them replenish the magazines of their rifles while they had the chance.

On the other side of the house we discovered Agnes, busily engaged binding up the wounds of those who had been hurt. She was deadly pale, but her bravery was not a bit diminished. When we got back to our own quarters we had counted three dead men, two placed hors de combat by their wounds, and five more or less cut and scratched. Of the enemy we estimated that at least a hundred had fallen before our rifles, never to rise again.

For something like half-an-hour we stood at our posts, waiting to be attacked, but the foe showed no sign of moving. I was just wondering what the next move would be when I heard a shout from the right. I gripped my rifle and peered ahead of me, but there was nothing to be seen save the foe crouching behind their shelters in the distance.

"What is it?" I cried to my right-hand neighbor. "What do they see?"

"A horseman," he replied, "and coming in our direction."

"Is he mad?" I cried, "or doesn't he see his danger?"

My informant did not reply, and a moment later I saw for myself the person referred to. He was mounted on a grey horse, and was riding as fast as his animal could travel in our direction. I turned my eyes away from him for a moment. When I looked again I saw a man rise from behind a bush and hurl a spear at him. The cruel weapon was thrown with unerring aim and struck the horse just behind the saddle. He leapt into the air, and then with a scream of agony that could be heard quite plainly where we all stood watching, dashed frantically towards us. He had not, however, gone a hundred yards before he put his foot into a hole, and fell with a crash to the ground, to lie there motionless. His neck was broken, so we discovered later.

From where I stood, to the place where the man and beast lay, was scarcely eighty yards; thence, on to the spot where the enemy were in ambush, not more than a hundred. For some reason—why, I shall never be able to explain—an irresistible desire to save the injured man came over me. I could not have resisted it, even had I wished to do so. Accordingly, I placed my rifle against the axle, sprang upon the box of the wagon wheel, vaulted over, and ran as hard as I could go towards the victim of the accident. Ahead of me I could distinctly see the nodding plumes of the foe as they crouched behind their enormous shields. They did not, however, move, and I was thus enabled to reach the man's side, and to take him in my arms unmolested. I had not gone ten yards on my return journey, however, before I heard their yells, and knew that they were after me. Fortunately, I had nearly a hundred and twenty yards start; but I had a heavy man to carry, and was quite out of breath. However, I was not going to be beaten, so putting out every ounce of strength I boasted in my body, I raced on. By the time I reached the wagons again, the foe were not fifty yards behind me. A couple of assegais whistled passed my ears as I climbed over the wheel and dropped my burden on the ground, but fortunately neither hit me. So exhausted was I that for a moment I leant against the wagon, unable to move. But the instinct of self-preservation gave me strength, and picking up my rifle I let drive blindly at the nearest of the foe who was already on the wheel before me. I saw the man's forehead open out like a cracked walnut as my shot caught it, and a moment later he fell forward on the tyre—dead. I threw him off in time to shoot the next man as he took his place. Of the following five minutes my only recollection is a sense of overpowering heat; a throat and mouth parched like the sands of the Great Sahara; a rifle growing every moment hotter in my hand, and dominating all the necessity of stemming, at any cost, the crowd of black humanity that seemed to be overwhelming me. How long the fight lasted I cannot say. But at last a cheer from the other side of the laager reached me, and almost at the same instant the enemy turned tail and fled for their lives. Then, with an empty rifle at my feet, a dripping cutlass in one hand, and a still smoking revolver in the other, I leant against the wagon and laughed hysterically till I fell fainting to the ground.

CHAPTER XIII.

When I recovered consciousness I found a stranger dressed in uniform kneeling beside me. What was more singular still I was not under the wagon as before, but was lying surrounded by a dozen or so of my comrades in the verandah of my own house. Agnes was kneeling beside me, and her father was holding a basin of water at my feet.

"There is nothing at all to be alarmed about, my dear young lady," the man in uniform was saying as he felt my pulse. "Your friend here will live to fight another day, or a hundred days for that matter. By this time to-morrow he'll be as well as ever." Then, turning to me, he asked: "how do you feel now?"

I replied that I felt much stronger; and then, ooking up at Mr. Maybourne, enquired if we had beaten off the enemy.

"They have been utterly routed," replied the gentleman I addressed. "The credit, however, is due to Captain Haviland and his men; but for their timely arrival I fear we should have been done for. Flesh and blood could not have stood the strain another half hour."

"Stuff and nonsense," said the doctor, for such I afterwards discovered he was, "all the credit is due to yourselves; and, by George, you deserve it. A finer stand was never made in this country, or for that matter in any other."

After a few minutes' rest and another sip of brandy, I managed to get on to my feet. It was a sad sight I had before me. Stretched out in rows beyond the verandah rails were the bodies of the gallant fellows who had been killed—twelve in number. On rough beds placed in the verandah itself and also in the house were the wounded; while on the plain all round beyond the laager might have been seen the bodies of the Matabele dead. On the left of the house the regiment of mounted infantry, who had so opportunely come to our assistance, were unsaddling after chasing the enemy, and preparing to camp.

After I had had a few moments' conversation with the doctor, Mr Maybourne and Agnes came up to me again, and congratulated me on having saved the stranger's life. The praise they gave me was altogether undeserved, for, as I have already explained, I had done the thing on the spur of the moment without for an instant considering the danger to which I had exposed myself. When they had finished I enquired where

MRS. HUBBARD A CANADIAN.

First Woman to Explore Labrador Wilds Born in Ontario.

In the Township of Hamilton, Northumberland, Ont., was born Mrs. Leonidas Hubbard, the celebrated woman who is the first Canadian lady to explore the wilds of Labrador. The announcement that the much-heralded New York explorer is a Canadian will cause surprise, but it is authentic. According to Dr. Morgan, author of Canadian Men and Women of the Time, Mrs. Hubbard, just returned from her adventurous journey to discover the secrets of her late husband's failure and subsequent death in that bleak and inhospitable country, is one of our own countrywomen.

She is the daughter of James Bennett, a farmer of Bewdley, Township of Hamilton, County of Northumberland, Ontario. As a girl she qualified as a trained nurse, and while in the performance of her duties as such took up her residence in New York, where she was called upon to nurse Dr. Leonidas Hubbard, Jr., through a serious illness.

It was a case on his part of love at first sight, and a marriage soon followed. The world knows how in 1903 her husband met his death in the Labrador wilds, and it was to clear up doubts and uncertainties, and also to complete the report of her husband's exploration, that she undertook the journey from which she has now returned.

When seen on her return to Quebec, she was found to be a small, slight, woman, of delicate and refined appearance, who would seem to be the last to face the dangers and hardships of such a journey through the wilderness. She politely but firmly declined to be questioned about her expedition. She would merely say that she had succeeded in her object, that she had followed the route taken by her husband from the coast to the point where he had met his death from exposure and starvation, that she had found where he had diverged from his route and lost his way, that she had cleared up some important points in regard to the head waters of the Northwest River, which flows into Lake Melville and Hamilton Inlet, as well as in regard to Lake Mishikaman, the height of land, and the George River, which flows into Ungava Bay, and that she had not suffered much from the hardships of the journey.

Mrs. Hubbard emphatically denied that she went to Labrador to locate mineral wealth said to have been discovered by Mr. Hubbard on his fatal trip. She simply set out to complete the work which he began, and has succeeded in doing so.

MARK HANNA ROCK GONE.

Stood on the Pacific Coast and Was Gravestone For Ships.

A recent despatch from Victoria, B. C., says: Notification has been sent by Lighthousekeeper Daykin of Cape Carmanagh to the resident agent of the Department of Marine, that "Mark Hanna" Rock, otherwise known to navigators of the North Pacific as one of the many marine gravestones that decorate the western seaboard of Vancouver Island, has strangely disappeared.

The rock until very recently reared 30 feet above the water, near Bonilla Point, off Carmanagh, the Canadian sentinel at the entrance of the Straits of San Juan de Fuca, opposite Cape Flattery, on the American shore.

The rock was named for the Ohio statesman and Republican organizer by Lighthousekeeper Daykin, because of the remarkable likeness its contour bore to a facial silhouette of the late American Senator. Apart from this distinguished feature, however, there was another peculiarity about Mark Hanna Rock which in earlier time might have invested it with superstitious dread. It is said that it possessed a remarkable magnetic power, for on its rugged and storm-beaten base many a vessel has pounded to destruction.

But the rock is no more. It was destroyed some weeks ago in the seismic and electrical disturbance felt in slight degree here and to a greater extent at Nanaimo. It was noticed, black and grim, rearing itself through the storm in the afternoon preceding the shake. In the morning Lighthousekeeper Daykin observed with amazement that the sea broke unruffled where it had lifted itself from the deep.

The question is now being debated among local scientists whether or not the strange magnetic force said to be a property of the rock had aught to do with its final demolition.

Adopting Ontario Methods.

The Provincial Department of Agriculture has received an interesting note from Scotland. Mr. George Bain, editor of the Nairnshire Telegraph, called at the Department last year, and among the publications given him were some of the Nature Study bulletins issued by the Department for Public School teachers. Mr. Bain states that some of the teachers of the Nairn district are very much interested in these, and intend to use them as the basis of their nature study work. The steady demand for these bulletins from Ontario Public school teachers has exhausted the bulletins on "Weeds," "Grasses" and "The Making of Collections." The bulletin on "Weeds" has been revised by Prof. Lochhead, making it more suitable for teachers, and it will be re-issued during the winter.

Flight of Birds.

Pigeons fly at the rate of fifty-five miles an hour, swallows at the rate of ninety-two, rooks at the rate of twenty-five. There was once a three-mile race got up for a wager between a dozen bees and a dozen pigeons. The first bee finished a quarter of a minute before the first pigeon, and the bees won all round, although they were handicapped somewhat by being previously rolled in flour for the purpose of identification.

How Canada Was Saved.

In reviewing Capt. Mahan's book, "Sea power in its relations to the war of 1812," The London Post says: "We doubt whether his narrative brings out as fully as the facts justify that it was the patriotism and gallantry of the Canadian militia which saved Canada during that uphill game of the first twelve months."

A TRAPPER RETURNS.

William Miller Back in Orkney After Thirty Years' Absence in the Canadian Far North.

No longer an explorer of the unknown Antarctic, but a prosaic trading vessel in the service of the Hudson's Bay Co., the famous Discovery has just been berthed in the West India Dock, London, after her first voyage to the Arctic regions. The Discovery brought home an interesting personage in William Miller, a man of nearly seventy years of age, who has spent half a century in the employment of the Hudson's Boy Co., and returned home to live in retirement in his native Orcadian town of Stromness.

Miller has had charge for nearly thirty years of the post named Mistessinee, on Rupert's River. He was the only white man in the Indian settlement of forty or fifty souls, yet the life was thoroughly congenial, and only failing eyesight has compelled him to give it up. His life was that of the hardy pioneer of the wilds of unknown Canada. The nearest settlement was twelve days' march, or 300 miles distant.

In winter, journeys were accomplished on snow-shoes, or by sledges, drawn by teams of Eskimo dogs. Black bears, reindeer, and numerous other kinds of game provided abundance of work for the rifle and food for the settlers. Miller made an annual journey down Rupert's River to Rupert's House, on the shores of Hudson Bay. The produce of this district was conveyed in a dozen large Indian canoes, manned by Indians, and on the return journey these were loaded up with stores for the coming winter.

With the exception of this brief interlude, Miller rarely saw a white man from one end of the year to the other; and until he arrived in London he had not set foot upon the streets of a civilized town for nearly half a century, except for one visit to Montreal.

Under the command of Capt. Gray, one of a well-known Peterhead family of whaling masters, the Discovery left the Thames on June 15, bound for the company's trading station on Charlton Island, at the extreme south end of James Bay, an arm of the greater Hudson Bay. A fairly good passage was made across the Atlantic, but when 100 miles from the entrance to Hudson Strait, the vessel entered a vast field of ice floes.

The Discovery, though specially constructed for ice work, found the floes impenetrable. Capt. Gray availed himself of every "lead," and rammed and butted with all the skill and daring he commands, but while the ship took no injury, she was firmly beset, and progress became almost impossible.

In this unfortunate position she remained for five weeks, when at length the movement of the floes permitted her escape.

Albani to Retire.

Madame Albani, the distinguished Canadian prima donna, has announced that she is to retire from the stage. She has had a long and successful career, her first appearance in opera dating back to 1870, at Messina. As most Canadians know, or ought to know, her maiden name was Marie Cecilia Emma Lajeunesse, and she was born at Chambly, near Montreal, in 1852. She first sang in public at the cathedral of Albany, N. Y. She then studied at Paris under Duprez, and subsequently under the elder Lamperti. She made her debut in London in 1872 at the Covent Garden Opera House, and won an immediate success. In 1878 she married Ernest Gye, the lessee of that theatre, and ever since she has been one of the greatest artists that England has delighted to honor. In oratorio she has specially excelled, and was always in request at the big English festivals on that account. In Canada she made her first appearance in Toronto at the Grand Opera House in the early seventies with her Majesty's Opera Co., taking the role of Lucia in the opera of that name. The late Col. Mapleson was the impressario of the company, and the late Signor Arditi the conductor. Two great singers who were in the same company at the time were the late Mme. Fursch-Madi and Mme. Scalchi. Mme. Albani has visited Canada several times since that memorable occasion and has given at least two farewell tours. It appears from her announcement that her last tour was really her farewell to her native country.

Cricket Story Told in Galt.

Sir Charles Kirkpatrick of the touring English football team was talking in Galt about cricket.

'In a northern garrison town last year,' he said, "a match was arranged between the officers of the garrison and the county lawyers.

"The officers prepared a superb luncheon for their visitors, and all sat down to the repast before the game.

"The lawyers did full justice to the good things. Like giants they attacked the champagne and black cigars. And the officers were more than hospitable. Bottle after bottle was brought in, and the costly black cigars from Havana lay in profusion everywhere.

"Finally the lawyers would have nothing more. Their faces, though, were already flushed, and as they emerged into the sunshine of the cricket field their glazed eyes blinked.

"The soldiers, who had partaken sparingly themselves, winked at one another. Victory seemed assured.

"But what was this? Out of a marquee a crew of athletic giants came running, and began to practice batting and bowling in admirable fashion.

"'Who are those chaps? We don't know them,' said an officer, frowning.

"'Oh,' said one of the lawyer guests, 'they are our—hic—our playing team. We are only the lunching team, you know.'"

The Saddest Words.

Of all sad words of tongue or pen
The saddest are these to the bargain maid:
"They have cut the price in two again,
And it's twice as cheap as what I paid!"

A Call Loan.

The Experienced One—Not gives, my boy—merely lends.

THE CONVERSATION LOZENGER.

"I'm growing old and feeble now;
I cannot work no more"—
That's the way, I think, 'twas sung
In happy days of yore.
Those times among the pretty girls
I made a fearful stir;
My weapon was the toothsome conVersation lozenger!

I uster wear a dickey neat,
Without a spot or speck;
A snowy paper collar sweet
Was fastened round my neck.
I uster make the ladies' hearts
With palpitation whirr;
I chiefly used the deadly conVersation lozenger!

In days of yore it must have been
A thrilling sight to see
Me slip my girl a candy marked
Thus: "Will you marry me?"
It made me warm from head to heels
When she would softly purr
"Ask mamma!" on another conVersation lozenger!

I think the candy that I prized
And won with most delight
Was nicely stamped in letters red
With "See me home tonight."
Alas! she always ate her words—
This thought to me occurs—
Yet words were sweet upon the conVersation lozenger!

Aunt Lucy says that when I write
My verses in the woods,
Each little verse, however lame,
Is quite the candy goods.
Thus every poem that you see
Upon this page occur
Is a kind of—well, a kind of conVersation lozenger!

MARKING THE LINE.

Parties on Alaska Boundary Find It Slow, Arduous Work.

Messrs. H. A. Brabazon and George White Fraser, of the atronomical branch of the Department of the Interior, have returned from the northwestern part of the continent, where they had been marking surveys in connection with the delimitation of the Alaskan boundary.

Each was in charge of a party. They were working during the summer northwestward from Portland Canal. The marking of the boundary is done by the erection of bronze monuments at places where they are needed.

The monuments bear on one side the inscription "United States," and on the other "Canada," each facing the territory it represents.

The work of the survey requires a great deal of hard climbing, and members of the party frequently ascended to heights of from 7,000 to 9,000 feet. In conjuction with the delimitation of the boundary accurate maps are being made of the topography of the country and measurements of the heights of the mountains.

Half of the survey of the boundary will be done by the United States and half by Canada. During the summer each country had three parties at work. Each of the parties was accompanied by a representative of the other nation, for verification of the observations and to prevent in the future such disputes as have proved so expensive and the cause of so much ill-feeling in the past.

The work is being carried on in conformity to the finding of the recent international tribunal. So far the work accomplished has been but comparatively small in extent, and it will take a number of years yet to complete it.

Would Increase Factory Age.

At the eighth annual conference of Charities and Correction in Toronto, Col. J. E. Farewell, Whitby, president of the conference, in his annual address, spoke of the useful character of such a body, in which there could be free and intelligent discussion of all questions relating to the distribution of public and private benevolence, the best means for preventing crime, punishing it when committed and reforming or improving the criminal. The treatment of inebriates, the president said, must be made a subject of vigorous and rational legislation, and the probation system must be introduced for that class as well as for first offenders. Desertion of families was also a matter for early legislation. If the probation system did not work in any case of that kind flogging or long terms of imprisonment should be imposed.

The lamentable and increasing practice of employing children in factories called for great vigilance and prompt action on the part of factory inspectors. The opinion was gaining ground that the factory age should be raised from fourteen and sixteen years. One of the best means of preventing suffering, avoiding the necessity for charity, and saving the expense of inquests and trials would be the enactment and strict enforcement of proper regulations for preventing accidents in mines and from unprotected machinery. Donors were reminded that "the gift without the giver is bare," and were urged to give their time and experience as well as their money.

A Modest Canadian Author.

It is a pleasure to discover a writer who does not take himself too seriously and is inclined to doubt if the great public who reads his books and the greater public that doesn't, is yearning for the most intimate information in regard to his life and habits from childhood's happy hour. The Rev. Robt. E. Knowles, author of "St. Cuthbert's," is such a rara avis, as the statement which he has finally given out in response to requests by admirers of his book sufficiently indicates. He writes: "I do not wish to boast, but my father and mother were both Irish, the one from Ballymena and the other from Cork. My education was accomplished at Queen's College, Kingston, and Manitoba College, Winnipeg, which institutions total only two, thus being fewer by three than the cities in which the impartial Homer first saw the light. This fewness will contribute to the peace of the future ages. My career in college was animated and varied, other fellows taking scholarships, while I took fellowship alone. My ministry has had no special celebrity or success, its only outward distinction being that I am not a Doctor of Divinity, which I may humbly claim to be somewhat an original achievement.—New York Tribune

OUR COUNTRY'S FOREST

CANADA HAS LARGER AREA THAN ANY LAND EXCEPT RUSSIA.

Northern Forests of the Dominion Cover an Area About Forty-Four Times Greater Than England — Serious Dangers Which Threaten Timber—Suffer Dreadfully From Fire—Causes of Forest Fires — Forestry Convention.

The value of the forests of Canada is being realized more fully with the increasing price of lumber and forest products. It is therefore opportune that a Forestry Convention should have been called by the Premier of the Dominion to meet in Ottawa in January next to consider how best to deal with this important national asset.

Canadians do not realize the large position the Dominion holds to-day in the eyes of the world. But if we consider for a moment what immense stretches of forest land there are in the Dominion the reason may be understood why such should be the case. The area of forest lands in Canada has been estimated at between 700,000,000 acres and 800,000,000 acres, although of this only one-third is covered by mature forest, or say 250,000,000 acres, the remainder being burnt over land, either entirely waste or in various stages of recovery. This is the largest forest area possessed by any country in the world with the exception of Russia. It has been figured that the northern forests of Canada cover an area about forty-four times greater than England.

There are, however, serious dangers threatening this timber. The northern forests are mainly composed of coniferous trees, spruce predominating, and are therefore easily burned. Hardwood forests offer considerable resistance to fire, but the soft woods with their resinous leaves and wood are a most inviting fuel. As has been stated, those who traveled our northern districts and have made close observation of the situation, make the statement that fire has at different times run over two-thirds of the country. If such should be the case again the wealth of these forests may easily be dissipated.

A recent writer speaking of Northern Quebec and Labrador states that the immense forests of those districts have suffered dreadfully from fire, and in many places the vegetable part of the soil has been so completely burned out that a couple of centuries must elapse before it is fully restocked. These fires are of annual occurrence and occasionally burn throughout the entire summer, destroying thousands of square miles of valuable timber to the south of the central watershed. It is authoritatively stated that at least one-half of the forest area of the interior of this part of Canada has been totally destroyed by fire within the past twenty-five or thirty years.

The same is largely true of every part of the northern forest area of the Dominion, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Any one who has traveled through the forest districts of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick or Ontario, will see the devastation which the fires have made. Northern British Columbia has suffered in the same way. Reports show that what explorations of some years ago indicated to be areas of splendid spruce forest, are now largely depleted and burned over.

The question arises whether anything can be done to prevent further destruction in these forests. The answer depends somewhat on the cause of the fires. Unquestionably fires occur through natural causes. Lightning is not infrequently a cause. It is sometimes surmised also that the friction of one tree against another may be sufficient to cause a fire, or that a globule of resin may be formed in such a way as to act as a burning glass. Much the larger number of fires are, however, occasioned by the action of man. It is along the canoe routes and the routes of travel that the fires usually start. The placing of warnings against fire along such routes and the presence of fire rangers patrolling them will do much to help. But the public who may travel through these districts are careless in handling fire, and if the Forestry Convention arouses public interest in such a way as to help the preventive work it will do much good.

There is another direction from which danger may come. The Dominion is expanding and is now preparing to build a transcontinental railway which will pass largely through the northern forest districts. The history of railway construction in Canada has as a rule been the destruction of the forests along the route. So important is it in these northern districts that the wood should be preserved that it is to be hoped means will be devised to prevent a repetition of what has so often occurred before.

A Destructive Fish.

The Perth Expositor tells some remarkable stories of the voracity of that inferior fish, the lyng, which does so much injury to game fish in Ontario waters. Some time ago, The Expositor says, Mr. Robert Moore was granted a license to net bull pout in Christie's Lake, and the other day he brought to The Expositor office one large lyng caught in the lake referred to, and it was dissected. This lyng had swallowed a pike which measured almost fourteen inches in length and also a full-sized sunfish. Mr. Ephraim Deacon, the fishery inspector at Bollingbrooke, called at Mr. Moore's to make an inspection, and he found the fisherman with quite a number of catfish, dozens of lyng, but no protected fish. Three lyng were dissected, with the following result: One contained three whitefish, eight inches long, and one bass; the second one had recently swallowed 39 pickerel minnows and three bass; and the last one opened was found to contain a large number of partially decomposed pickerel minnows and ten recently swallowed.

GOVERNMENT BY PARTY.

Mr. R. L. Borden Points Out Some of Its Defects.

Mr. R. L. Borden, leader of the Opposition in the Dominion Parliament, who was the guest of honor at a recent luncheon of the Empire Club, Toronto, spoke interestingly on the development of Parliamentary institutions in Great Britain and Canada. His address, which was, of course, non-political, was frequently heartily applauded by the large audience. The party system of government in Great Britain and Canada, he said, was often treated as if it were a rather discreditable system. Yet it was to a certain extent the basis of the institutions under which the people of both countries lived. Until some better method could be found for the purpose of carrying on the affairs of the country the people would have to submit to it. However, it could be said that representative Government in Canada was at least more in the interests of the great mass of the people than any other system devised up to the present time.

The Cabinet system was an essential feature of party government, and there had been a tendency in the last sixty or seventy years, and more especially in the last thrity or forty years, to shelve the power formerly vested in the Crown and transferred to Parliament upon the Cabinet. The latter, strictly speaking, was not a committee of Parliament, because it was a partisan committee, and not only a partisan but a secret committee. A further development in this connection was the formation of a conclave of the Cabinet—a Cabinet within a Cabinet, so to speak—so that all the Ministers of the Crown did not possess equal initiative with regard to policies of administration or measures which were brought down.

A striking development in Canada was the party caucus. The important debates upon great questions in this country, the debates that settled the fate of measures, were those which took place in caucus. The experience of the last fifteen or twenty years proved that debates in the House had little or no influence. One result of these developments was to aid in giving the head of the Government the power of a dictator if he was a strong man; if he was not a strong man, one or two of his Cabinet would control him. Another result was the obedience of the members of the parties to the decision of the majority in caucus.

The power of the Government, Mr. Borden proceeded, was certainly not less in Canada than in Great Britain; perhaps a little more, for two reasons: First, the greater need of small public works in this country; secondly, patronage, happily removed from the sphere of political action in Britain owing to reforms in the civil service, was an incubus in Canada. For his part, he would willingly see Canada follow in this regard along the lines of Britain and the United States, and take away from political parties the power to deal with many important matters of patronage.

The speaker, who quoted freely from Sidney Low and other British publicists in support of some of his contentions and conclusions, summed up by pointing a moral. "In the first place," he said, "a very great responsibility is cast upon the press of this country, the fourth estate, whether it be Liberal or Conservative. But there is a far greater responsibility cast upon the electorate, which should be alive to check a Government."

That brought him to a text from which he said he often preached. He alluded to that duty which fell to every citizen to contribute to public life. Unless each man contributed a little of his time to that line of duty we never could have those high standards in public life which were to be found in British institutions.

Birthrate in Canada.

The large birthrate of French-Canadians is receiving comment on account of the recent repeal of the law which in the Province of Quebec gave 100 acres of forest land to each man who had twelve children, says American Medicine. The desire to be more populous has led the French-Canadian Government into several schemes, mostly to facilitate immigration, although, curiously enough, the flow of population has long been out of Canada into the United States, as though the north were overpopulated. It was this exodus which alarmed the Quebec authorities, who thereupon revived their traditional policy to stimulate the birthrate by rewarding a large family, actuated no doubt, by a desire to make this part of Canada solidly French. It has been learned that the land grant was of no use to the father of such a large family, as he was anchored on his own farm and could not break a new one in the wilderness. The grants were consequently sold to lumber companies at ridiculouly small rates, and the exodus of the younger element continues. It is now openly stated that it is no longer possible to support these large families. It was an easy matter formerly, for a large farm could be divided among the children, but the later subdivisions have made the farms too small. Migrations were necessary, and the easiest way was toward the south, to get employment in the factories. A large birthrate, then, is no longer of use to Canada, and is, indeed, rapidly diminishing. It is also stated that the death rate among the children has been inordinate, because it is not possible nowadays to give the proper care and attention to the infants, so that no matter what the number born it will never be possible to rear as many in one family as formerly. It is now recognized that Canada will not suffer from population if the present reduction of the birthrate does continue—her emigration will be less. Indeed, it is also recognized that density of population depends solely upon ability to make a living and the only way to increase it is to stimulate the productivity of a country—the present Canadian policy. He who makes two blades of grass grow where one grew before, does more than he, who brings infants into the world but cannot feed them.

When Lincoln Had Few Friends.

In 1864 Lincoln was of all men the least commended by the Republicans in congress. On one occasion an editor visiting Washington asked Senator Thaddeus Stevens to introduce him to some members of congress who were favorable to Lincoln's re-election. Stevens led him to the desk of Mr. Arnold of Illinois. "There," said he, "is the only Lincoln member of congress that I know!" Stevens himself regarded Lincoln as incompetent and weak. Henry Wilson (afterward vice president) spoke of him as politically a failure. Greeley had a low opinion of his ability. His personal friends, such as Washburn, Raymond and Thurlow Weed, believed his re-election an impossibility. Even Lincoln himself at one time doubted it.—H. T. Peck in Bookman.

Sacred Concert and Lecture Last Night.

FINE ENTERTAINMENT IN ST. MICHAEL'S CHURCH — TALENTED LADIES AND GENTLEMEN SANG—FATHER TWOMEY TALKED ON "A DAY IN ROME."

There was, considering the inclement weather, a very large audience at the sacred concert and lecture in St. Michael's Church last night, and the programme presented amply repaid those who braved the storm. One pleasing fact soon became apparent, namely, that the acoustic properties of the new church are quite as good as were those of the old, and it is to-day what it was before the fire, the auditorium which better lends itself to singing than any in the city. As to the programme last night, there were a whole lot of talented ladies' and gentlemen's names on it, and everybody sang but Father Twomey—he gave one of the most cultured and interesting talks ever listened to in this city. To be sure, he had an entrancing subject, but of that later on. As before remarked, there were a whole lot of talented ladies and gentlemen on the programme. Incidentally it may be remarked that they were all in fine voice. It is to be regretted that several of them felt called upon to use that cheap and meretricious effect, the "wobble," but perhaps they enjoy making their hearers do penance. However, the concert as a whole was highly successful, for, as will be gathered from the names on the programme, many of the vocalists have been too well grounded in the correct principles of first-class vocalism to allow themselves to be led away by anything cheap and florid. With these few preliminary remarks, we will proceed to lay before our readers

A DAY IN ROME.

Next came Rev. Father Twomey's lecture, "A Day in Rome." It was a large subject, handled in a masterly way, full of scholarly diction, delightful imagery. One could not help but feel, as he listened to the eloquent periods of Father Twomey last night, that the mantle of Monsignor Farrelly had fallen on a worthy successor. The Rev. lecturer began by saying that it was but natural that men of different countries should think and contend that the chief cities of their countries were the best, but if men differed in certain respects they must all agree in one respect, namely, that there were two cities in particular which, by tradition and association, were calculated to appeal to the souls of Christian men — Rome and Jerusalem. One was full of classic interest, the other full of religious significance to every Christian. The name of Rome echoes in the ear of the classical scholar, and his most delightful years are spent in the study of her poets, artists and philosophers. Rome was the mistress of the arts and sciences long before the rest of European civilization was born. It was founded seven centuries before the Christian era, and the early days of its history weave a charm of romance around the Eternal City. It was the great Catholic city, in which were seen the early struggles of the Christian church. In a word, the Rome of the Twentieth century was dear to every Catholic heart because it was the centre of Catholicity. The Rev. lecturer then gave a description of the most noted points of interest in Rome, namely, St. Peter's, the Vatican palace and the Coliseum, and told of how he, personally, had been present at a reception given in St. Peter's by the late Pope, Leo XIII. It was a beautiful and vivid bit of word painting. His picture of St. Peter's was a glowing one. The presence of the body of St. Peter in the crypt of the church, he said, gave it the first place in the affections of Catholics everywhere. In 1460 the present great church was projected, and it had been eulogized, in undying words, by the greatest travellers, scholars and poets. To stand in the centre of St. Peter's and look up at its matchless dome gives one some faint idea of the transcendent beauty of Heaven. In an impassioned outburst the Rev. lecturer eulogized the martyrs buried in the crypt of St. Peter's, saying their memory was more to be revered than the memory of the world's greatest poets, soldiers, ors or inventors. The chu[illegible] Peter's would contain [illegible] six times the popu[illegible] There ne[illegible] been in history, or was anythin[illegible] sience, a building which [illegible] St. Peter's. The art of man had been strained to its utmost in raising this magnificent temple of Christianity. The Palace of the Vatican was next described, and the Rev. lecturer said it was the largest and richest palace in existence. It contained some 12,000 rooms, and the masterpieces of the greatest artists the world had ever seen, proving that the Popes of Rome had always been the guardians of and patrons of the arts and sciences. As to the Pope himself, to-day he held a position commanding and unique, surpassing all other rulers in extent and power, for, as successor of St. Peter, he was revered and looked up to by the greatest organization the world had ever seen. While this old world lives, the Rev. lecturer said, there will always be a Pope of Rome, to preserve and guard the old traditions and hand them down to generations yet unborn. Though a captive at the present time, he receives the allegiance of many thousands more than any ruler in the world. The Rev. gentleman then told of how he had seen Pope Leo XIII. receive an English delegation headed by the Catholic Duke of Norfolk. His great thought was, as he gazed upon that scene, that between Leo and St. Peter there was an unbroken chain. The lecture ended with a description of the Coliseum, which was described as the wonder of Rome and the wonder of the world. In the Eighth century it was prophecied that when the Coliseum falls Rome will fall, and when Rome falls the world will fall. The lecturer spoke of early scenes in the great Coliseum, when, before the brutal Nero, the Christian martyrs were given as victims to the wild beasts. For three centuries Paganism held sway in Rome and tried in vain to put down Christianity. The sad memories caused by dwelling on those early scenes were brightened by the glorious thought that, in ancient Rome, the light of Christianity had taken the place of the darkness of Paganism, and that since then she had enlightened the world. Such thoughts as these, the Rev. lecturer said in conclusion, could not be avoided by anyone who spent a day sight-seeing in Rome.

DEATH CALLS EMINENT METHODIST DIVINE.

REV. DR. BADGLEY, ONCE WELL KNOWN AND POPULAR IN THIS CITY, PASSED AWAY YESTERDAY.

Rev. Dr. Badgley, one of the youngest of the first group of the faculty of Victoria University, died yesterday in Toronto, aged 62 years. Early last spring the doctor was taken seriously ill, but went back to his work at the college in the summer, apparently fully restored to health. Some time about the middle of November he had a recurrence of the malady, and failed rapidly, but pluckily continued at his labors until about three weeks ago, although it was found necessary to relieve him of a part of his duties. It was found that an operation was necessary, but an examination disclosed that Dr. Badgley's heart was so affected as to render an operation out of the question.

Dr. Badgley was a man of wide culture, good judgment and deep charity. He was a deep thinker, of kindly disposition and tolerant to a degree. He was highly esteemed not alone by the faculty, students and graduates, but by a wide circle of friends and acquaintances who came in contact with him outside his sphere or scholastic duties.

Rev. Erastus Irvine Badgley was the son of a farmer of U.E.L. descent. He was born in Prince Edward County in April, 1844, and received his primary education at the Public schools, after which he proceeded to Albert College, this city. He received his B.A. in 1868, the degree of M.A. in 1872, LL.B. in 1876, and LL.D. in 1878. He studied theology at the same university, and received the degree of bachelor of divinity in 1873. He entered on the work of the ministry in connection with thee Methodist Episcopal Church, but after three years he returned to his alma mater as an adjunct professor of metaphysics and mathematics. Later he succeeded Dr. Carman in the chair of mental and moral philosophy, which he filled for ten years. After the union of Albert with Victoria University he took the chair of mental philosophy and logic together with that of ethics and apologetics in the faculty of theology. While in this city the deceased was for some time superintendent of the Tabernacle Sunday School. Dr. Badgley was a valued contributor to the religious publications of the Methodist church. At the Ecumenical Methodist conference in London in 1881 he read a paper on "Ministerial Education."

In 1870 Dr. Badgley married Emma, daughter of the late John S. Bell, of Napanee. His widow and one son, Dr. Fred N. Badgley, survive. One son and one daughter preceded him to the grave.

The funeral will take place to-morrow from the college at 2.30 p.m. to Mount Pleasant cemetery. The arrangements will be under the direction of the faculty. Rev. Dr. Wilson, of Trinity Methodist Church, will conduct the services.

YORK LOAN MONEY.

SHAREHOLDERS' COMMITTEE ASK A CONTRIBUTION OF 10 CENTS PER SHARE.

Toronto, Jan. 4.—Mr. S. J. White, secretary of the York Loan Shareholders' Committee, Toronto writes as follows:

"As some misunderstanding seems to have arisen about our taking York County pass books and certificates, I beg that you will correct it, or, rather, explain fully what the committee of the Toronto shareholders purposes doing.

"With the knowledge and approval of the National Trust Company, we are collecting the books, indexing them for our own guidance, arranging and classifying them in such order as we can, sending them for audit to the liquidator, and it is our intention to have a legal representative appear whenever necessary on behalf of each and all who entrust their books and certificates to us, to see that none shall escape full consideration or proper ranking.

"This has and will cost no small amount, but where many join the expense to any one will be very [illegible] ing. For this reason we are [illegible] all who care to give us [illegible] and place themselves [illegible] to pay towards [illegible] sum of 10 ce[illegible] moneys [illegible] Jan. 4. — The temporary [illegible] count [illegible] tors of the York County Loan Company have decided, in view of the interim investigation held by Mr. [illegible] Cross, bringing out the most essential facts, not to go on with their examination to-morrow at Osgoode Hall. The liquidators are of the opinion that further official inquiries prosecuted now would be merely spending shareholders' money. The line they will take will be decided after the permanent liquidators are appointed. When this is done, it is believed liquidators' main effort will be [illegible] swelling the [illegible] centrated towards [illegible] assets, and court examinations will be called for only where it seems necessary to make the title clear to a property or collateral to which the company seems entitled.

It will be after that time that the move to have a street railway line put through Roncesvalles avenue will be pushed. It was said to-day that a petition signed by individuals representing a great mass of shareholders, might be submitted to the Premier before Parliament [illegible] asking that the city be empowered to build this line, which would be calculated, it is thought, to force the Street Railway Company to take the initiative and lay down the tracks.

George Faulkner, the real estate broker, has handed to the shareholders' committee a rough draft of a petition which may go out to shareholders, asking for such action.

It has been reported that in the final striking off of the cash balances, many discrepancies, amounting in all to a large sum, had been discovered to be due by agents to the York Loan Company in outside towns and cities.

Mr. White was asked to-day if much money had gone amiss that way.

"I consider that there is little or no evidence of what might be called 'graft'," he replied, "Taking the size of the company, its great working force, and the fact that with such a vast concern such losses must necessarily occur, I don't think we have much to complain of."

At the office of Clarkson & Cross to-day it was stated that the report to the Attorney-General would be sent to-morrow morning in all probability.

It is a play that appeals to most of us, for it is a clean, pure, heart story." Local theatre-goers will have a treat in this play.

DEATH CALLS EMINENT METHODIST DIVINE.

REV. DR. BADGLEY, ONCE WELL KNOWN AND POPULAR IN THIS CITY, PASSED AWAY YESTERDAY.

Rev. Dr. Badgley, one of the youngest of the first group of the faculty of Victoria University, died yesterday in Toronto, aged 62 years. Early last spring the doctor was taken seriously ill, but went back to his work at the college in the summer, apparently fully restored to health. Some time about the middle of November he had a recurrence of the malady, and failed rapidly, but pluckily continued at his labors until about three weeks ago, although it was found necessary to relieve him of a part of his duties. It was found that an operation was necessary, but an examination disclosed that Dr. Badgley's heart was so affected as to render an operation out of the question.

Dr. Badgley was a man of wide culture, good judgment and deep charity. He was a deep thinker, of kindly disposition and tolerant to a degree. He was highly esteemed not alone by the faculty, students and graduates, but by a wide circle of friends and acquaintances who came in contact with him outside his sphere or scholastic duties.

Rev. Erastus Irvine Badgley was the son of a farmer of U.E.L. descent. He was born in Prince Edward County in April, 1844, and received his primary education at the Public schools, after which he proceeded to Albert College, this city. He received his B.A. in 1868, the degree of M.A. in 1872, LL.B. in 1876, and LL.D. in 1878. He studied theology at the same university, and received the degree of bachelor of divinity in 1873. He entered on the work of the ministry in connection with thee Methodist Episcopal Church, but after three years he returned to his alma mater as an adjunct professor of metaphysics and mathematics. Later he succeeded Dr. Carman in the chair of mental and moral philosophy, which he filled for ten years. After the union of Albert with Victoria University he took the chair of mental philosophy and logic together with that of ethics and apologetics in the faculty of theology. While in this city the deceased was for some time superintendent of the Tabernacle Sunday School. Dr. Badgley was a valued contributor to the religious publications of the Methodist church. At the Ecumenical Methodist conference in London in 1881 he read a paper on "Ministerial Education."

In 1870 Dr. Badgley married Emma, daughter of the late John S. Bell, of Napanee. His widow and one son, Dr. Fred N. Badgley, survive. One son and one daughter preceded him to the grave.

The funeral will take place to-morrow from the college at 2.30 p.m. to Mount Pleasant cemetery. The arrangements will be under the direction of the faculty. Rev. Dr. Wilson, of Trinity Methodist Church, will conduct the services.

YORK LOAN MONEY.

SHAREHOLDERS' COMMITTEE ASK A CONTRIBUTION OF 10 CENTS PER SHARE.

Toronto, Jan. 4.—Mr. S. J. White, secretary of the York Loan Shareholders' Committee, Toronto writes as follows:

"As some misunderstanding seems to have arisen about our taking York County pass books and certificates, I beg that you will correct it, or, rather, explain fully what the committee of the Toronto shareholders purposes doing.

"With the knowledge and approval of the National Trust Company, we are collecting the books, indexing them for our own guidance, arranging and classifying them in such order as we can, sending them for audit to the liquidator, and it is our intention to have a legal representative appear whenever necessary on behalf of each and all who entrust their books and certificates to us, to see that none shall escape full consideration or proper ranking.

"This has and will cost no small amount, but where many join the expense to any one will be very trifling. For this reason we are asking all who care to give us their books and place themselves in our hands, to pay towards these expenses the sum of 10 cents per share. All such moneys received will be fully accounted for."

Toronto, Jan. 4. — The temporary liquidators of the York County Loan Company have decided, in view of the interim investigation held by Mr. Cross, bringing out the most essential facts, not to go on with their examination to-morrow at Osgoode Hall. The liquidators are of the opinion that further official inquiries prosecuted now would be merely spending shareholders' money. The line they will take will be decided after the permanent liquidators are appointed. When this is done, it is believed the liquidators' main effort will be [illegible] concentrated toward [illegible] assets, and court examinations will be called for only where it seems necessary to make the title clear to a property or collateral to which the company seems entitled.

It will be after that time that the move to have a street railway line put through Roncesvalles avenue will be pushed. It was said to-day that a petition signed by individuals asking that the city be empowered to build this line, which would be calculated, it is thought, to force the Street Railway Company to take the initiative and lay down the tracks.

George Faulkner, the real estate broker, has handed to the shareholders' committee a rough draft of a petition which may go out to shareholders, asking for such action.

It has been reported that in the final striking off of the cash balances, many discrepancies, amounting in all to a large sum, had been discovered to be due by agents to the York Loan Company in outside towns and cities.

Mr. White was asked to-day if much money had gone amiss that way.

"I consider that there is little or no evidence of what might be called 'graft'," he replied, "Taking the size of the company, its great working force, and the fact that with such a vast concern such losses must necessarily occur, I don't think we have much to complain of."

At the office of Clarkson & Cross to-day it was stated that the report to the Attorney-General would be sent to-morrow morning in all probability.

In speaking of Rowland and Clifford's production of "Dora Thorne," which will be seen at the Carman on Tuesday next, the Toledo, O., Times says: "Decidedly out of the ordinary run of attractions at the Burt is "Dora Thorne," which opened yesterday. The play has not the lurid clap-trap of many deep-dyed melodramas and as such is a welcome innovation, making good before two big audiences yesterday. It is a play that appeals to most of us, for it is a clean, pure, heart story." Local theatre-goers will have a treat in this play.

COD LIVER OIL.

It almost makes you sick to think of it, but it isn't nearly as bad as it used to be. The improved method of refining it makes it much easier to take, and when made into Scott's Emulsion almost every one can take it. Most children like it and all children that are not robust are benefited by it. When the doctor says "Take cod liver oil," he generally means Scott's Emulsion; ask him if he doesn't. They know it is more easily digested and better than the plain oil.

21 MINERS LOSE LIVES

Explosion of Mine Gas at Coaldale, West Virginia.

First Calamity of the Year 1906—Gas Stops the Work of Rescue — One Body Recovered So Badly Mutilated As to Be Unrecognizable — Mining Cars and Mine Property Blown to Pieces.

Bluefield, W. Va., Jan. 5.—Twenty-one miners were killed in an explosion of mine gas in the shaft of the Copper Mine Co., at Coaldale, W. Va., at noon yesterday. Up to midnight only one body had been recovered. Immediately following the explosion, which was heard for several miles, rescue parties set to work to explore the wrecked shaft.

Coaldale is a mining town situated on the line of the Norfolk and Western Railroad and is fifteen miles west of Bluefield.

The mining cars and most of the property used in the mines are supposed to have been blown to pieces. At 5.30 p. m., the body of one of the miners was discovered some hundred feet away from the mine entry so mutilated that it is unrecognizable.

All hope of recovering alive the miners entombed by the explosion was shattered by the pouring forth of gases from the different entries. If the twenty-one men were not all instantly killed by the explosion, it is believed that they must have succumbed to the great accumulation of gas following the explosion.

THE REVOLUTION'S END

Moscow to Be Absolutely Clear by Christmas Eve.

Plot to Murder the Czar—Rojestvensky Says His Statement Was His Own, But Britain Is Not Satisfied With Explanation — Workmen Killed Troops as They Slept But Later Surrendered Up Their Leaders.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 5.—The Government advices from the Baltic provinces are fairly satisfactory. The troops are acting energetically in all directions. Three columns are operating in Livonia. The cities of Walk, Reitzburg, Jacobstadt and Stockenshof have been retaken. Small expeditions are being sent to the villages to arrest the ringleaders. Gen. Warnoff has been placed in command of the troops operating in Esthonia.

End of Revolution.

Moscow, Jan. 5.—"Against the brilliant conduct of the troops and police the resistance of the insurgents in Moscow has been scattered. The legions have been dispersed and are fleeing in disorder. Many of their chiefs have been arrested and the others have fled far and wide."

With these words, Governor-General Doubassoff begins a long account of the rising here, which he issued yesterday.

Continuing, the account says:

"Though organized revolt has been crushed, some of the most desperate fanatics remain and continue to fire on the troops. I cannot suffer the shadow of this terror to hang over the people during the joyful Christmas festival. I have, therefore, given positive orders that by Christmas eve, next Saturday, according to the Russian calendar, every quarter of the city must be swept clear of the last traces of the revolution, and I have called on the peaceful part of the population for co-operation in running down the revolutionists and in restoring tranquility."

Plot to Murder Czar.

London, Jan. 5.—A St. Petersburg despatch under yesterday morning's date says a plot by anarchists to assassinate the Czar was frustrated by accident. Trusted artillery officers are implicated. The chief conspirators are two students, who, with the army officers, have been arrested. The plot was discovered by one of the officers losing a carefully-drawn plan of the Tsarskoe-Selo Palace.

Britain Not Satisfied.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 5.—As a result of the representations made by Mr. Spring-Rice the British charge d'affaires, to Foreign Minister Lamsdorf, Admiral Rojestvensky explained in the Novoe Vremya yesterday morning that the Minister of Marine was in no way responsible for the letter published Wednesday, which was merely the admiral's personal opinion, which Rojestvensky maintains he had the right to express.

The British Embassy is not satisfied and has reported the matter to London, whence it is expected something in the nature of a formal disavowal will be demanded.

Killed Troops as They Slept.

Riga, Livonia, Russia, Tuesday, Jan. 2, by courier to St. Petersburg, Jan. 5.—About 5,000 armed workmen before daylight this morning invaded and took possession of the Provodnik rubber factory, and the military, as this message is forwarded, are bombarding the factory.

The revolutionists killed the policemen who were guarding the building, and a detachment then crept into an adjoining structure, where a patrol of dragoons was asleep, and murdered eight dragoons and six stablemen, and wounded eleven others. The troops awake opened a terrific fire, but it is impossible to ascertain the number of killed or wounded, but many men have been killed, and over a hundred wounded have already been carried to the hospitals. The soldiers are almost insane with fury.

Workmen Surrender.

London, Jan. 5.—A special despatch from Copenhagen yesterday says that the workmen who seized the Provodnik rubber factory at Riga, Tuesday, surrendered and delivered up their leaders to the commander of the troops. The prisoners will be tried by court-martial.

Czar Gives $50,000.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 5.—Emperor Nicholas has sent $50,000 to Governor-General Doubassoff for the relief of needy sufferers of the revolt at Moscow.

20 Years Writing One Book.

London, Jan. 5.—Harrison W. Weir, the artist, author and journalist, died yesterday. He was born in 1824, and was the author and illustrator of Poetry and Nature, and of several animal stories. "Our Poultry and All About Them" was one of his most remarkable works. The writing and illustrating of this book occupied his attention for upwards of twenty years, and for its size is unique as the work of one man. It contains 600,000 words of letter press, 37 colored pictures and over 350 black and white drawings.

DON'T EXPECT TROUBLE.

British Official Opinion Can See No Gloom in Situation.

London, Jan. 5.—"So long as Germany confines her demands at the conference to opening Morocco to foreign trade on an equal basis there will be no difference of opinion at Algeciras," said an official of the Foreign Office to the Associated Press yesterday.

Official and unofficial circles in Great Britain do not consider the Franco-German situation as serious.

BRITISH OFFICER SUICIDES.

Believed to Have Been Concerned in War Stores Scandal.

Pretoria, Transvaal Colony, Jan. 5.—Capt. J. Hopkins, quartermaster of the 2nd Dragoon Guards, whose name had been mentioned in connection with the war stores scandal, was found dead yesterday morning under circumstances pointing to suicide.

AFTER DIGESTION—WHAT?

It's not enough to digest your food, and reduce it to pulp or liquid inside you, but it must also be properly absorbed, carried to the proper organs, filtered, purified, and carried by your blood to the various parts of your body, which are worn out and stand in need of repair.

This is a system of complicated machinery, engineering, chemistry and physics, before which all of man's most wonderful achievements since the world began, pale into insignificance.

And, when you come to think of it, next to the marvel of any complicated piece of mechanism itself, is the man who, when it has broken down, can repair it and make it go again.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Really, the most marvellous achievement in the vast field of man's many-sided endeavors.

A perfect medicine, which never fails to cure, or set in running order again, the complicated mechanism of man's internal digestive arrangements.

The secret of the great success of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is simply this, that they have been prepared upon the firm foundation of the most thorough research into the real origin and cause of all disorders, due to the improper digestion and absorption of food.

Knowing the cause, further research led to the knowledge of how to relieve and cure.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are the only medicine founded upon certain scientific rules of treatment, which make success a certainty.

They penetrate into all the channels of your being, into the minutest arteries, the tiniest lymphatics, the faintest tracery of nerve tissue; and renew, build up, refresh, and restore to health every disorder which improper food, poor digestion, or incomplete absorption has caused, in any portion of your anatomy.

No need to consult a physician.

At the least sign of distress after eating, take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

On the least pain or discomfort, in stomach, liver, back, or bowels, take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

For any craving for improper food, continual hunger, continual thirst, or loss of appetite in greater or lesser form, take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

By following these simple rules, you will save yourself much pain, suffering and discomfort, and will add greatly to your span of life.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will make you live long and happily.

Try them.

SHIPPERS WILL BENEFIT.

Railways Must Be More Considerate of Their Interests.

Ottawa, Jan. 5.—The Railway Commission will very shortly issue an order bringing into effect the new car service rules that have been agreed upon after consultation with the railway interests and with shippers all over the Dominion.

Hereafter the companies must be less exacting in the imposition of what are known as demurrage charges. Moreover, where a shipping concern applies for so many cars per day the railways must make more of an effort to maintain a steady supply.

When the new car service rules go into effect the railway companies will be required to notify shippers of the arrival of any cars that the latter have ordered. Twenty-four hours will then be allowed for the shipper to say where he wants the car placed. Forty-eight hours after this again are given for the loading or unloading of the cars as the case may be, and it will only be further delays that will leave shippers open to demurrage charges. The rules will at first be only provisionally approved in order that the railway board may have an opportunity to remedy any defects that their enforcement may disclose.

Later on it will be for the commissioners to consider whether they will make the railways liable for damages to shippers when the latter suffer financial loss through delay in the supply of cars.

PAID PHYSICIAN $25.

Howard Camp Gives Sensational Evidence Against Dr. Preston.

St. John, N. B., Jan. 5.—The Dr. Preston case began yesterday. Howard Camp, who was acquitted Wednesday, gave sensational evidence against accused in the afternoon.

Camp, after many pointed questions, asked by the crown, had been objected to by both his counsel and Dr. Preston's lawyers, swore he had been engaged to Edith Clark, the deceased. Some time ago he went to Preston and told him he had got the girl into trouble and wanted him to help her. Preston agreed and Camp paid him $25 as a fee. He escorted Miss Clark several times in the direction of Preston's office, but could not swear she had ever been operated on. He had got several prescriptions for her from Preston and had consulted the latter several times about the girl.

Witness was forced to tell court about his associations with the unfortunate girl.

Other witnesses examined told practically the same as at the preliminary examination.

FOR CLEAN ELECTION.

Hon. Mr. Hanna Opens the Campaign at Kingston.

Kingston, Jan. 5.—Under auspicious circumstances last night Hon. W. J. Hanna and J. P. Downey, M. P. P., opened the Kingston bye-election campaign at a bumper meeting for Donald M. McIntyre, who is again opposing E. J. B. Pense, unseated recently on charges of corruption. The Provincial Secretary and his colleague were given a most enthusiastic reception. Hon. Mr. Hanna made a strong plea for a clean election declaring the Government's policy was strict punishment to the election corruptionist. The City Hall was filled to the doors, and on the platform were a large number of ladies. On the walls were streamers expressing welcome to Hanna and Downey, "New men, new measures, new methods." Mr. McIntyre, the candidate, made a good speech in opening.

Will Soon Ask Tenders.

Ottawa, Jan. 5.—Towards the end of this month or the beginning of next, tenders will be invited for the construction of 244 miles of the National Transcontinental Railway from Winnipeg to the point of meeting with the Lake Superior branch of the Grand Trunk Pacific running up from Fort William, the latter being 220 miles in length. The first seventy miles from Winnipeg will pass through good prairie country; interspersed through balance with rock and muskeg. This portion, with perhaps one or two stretches in Northern Quebec, will be the most expensive of the whole line to construct.

New York, Jan. 5.—A verdict for $5,080,333, against Edward Harper, once vice-president of the Fidelity National Bank of Cincinnati, was affirmed yesterday by Judge Coxe in the United States Circuit Court. Eighteen years ago Harper was convicted of causing the failure of the Fidelity Bank and served six years in prison. The verdict which he was yesterday ordered to pay grew out of this failure. The original amount sued for was $2,500,000. Harper is at present vice-president and general manager of the Union Iron & Steel Co., with offices here.

HOSTILITIES HAVE CEASED

Morales Defeated and Caceres Apparently Successful—Jiminez a Candidate.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 6.—Advices received at the State Department from naval sources yesterday as to the collapse of the Morales' rebellion in San Domingo and the resulting conditions are as follows:

"The rebel gunboat Independencia was seen Thursday night off Peurto Plata. Desultory firing all day. Caceres apparently successful. Thirty men killed and sixty wounded on Caceres' side. On the other side unknown. Medical assistance is being sent from the American warship to the wounded ashore under the red cross flag. The death of Rodriguez was a great blow to the party. Seven American citizens have been taken aboard the Scorpion. No casualties among the Americans. Hostilities have ceased."

Defeat Was Complete.

Cape Haytien, Hayti, Jan. 6.—Further advices received here yesterday from the scene of hostilities between the troops of the temporary president of Santo Domingo, Gen. Caceres, and the forces of the fugitive president, Gen. Morales, it is said that the defeat of the latter before Puerto Plata Jan. 3, during which Gen. Demetric Rodriguez, the Morales commander, lost his life, was complete.

About 150 men were killed or wounded. The remainder of Morales' followers embarked on board the gunboat Independencia.

Gen. Jiminez, the former president of Santo Domingo, has left Puerto Plata for Monte Cristo and, it is understood, will, with the assistance of Morales, compete for the presidency of the republic against the other candidates for that office.

According to the reports brought here by messengers a large part of the population of Northern Santo Domingo is in favor of Gen. Jiminez.

Early and provident fear is the mother of safety.—Burke.

D. V. SINCLAIR & CO.

$10,000,000 OF COBALT

Illegally "Blanketed" Area to Be Thrown Into the Courts.

Writs to Be Issued by Wholesale to Protect Individual Prospectors and General Public—Attorney-General Will Open as Much Country as Possible and Will Have a Thorough Investigation in the Courts.

Toronto, Jan. 6.—A sensational move on the part of the Attorney-General, Hon. J. J. Foy, to open up a large area of the Cobalt district which, it is claimed, have been illegally "blanketed," will be inaugurated this morning when Wm. Pinkerton, of Pinkerton, Clute & Cook, will issue a first instalment of writs on a wholesale scale.

By noon 50 writs will have been issued at Osgoode Hall; by 6 o'clock it is expected there will be an additional half hundred, and on Monday a third instalment of a like number.

It was asserted last night by one interested that fully half the Cobalt district is affected by the action taken, and that the property could be easily sold to-day for ten millions of dollars.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOY.

The action is a result of representations made to the Government by miners and prospectors concerning the holdings of the Temiskaming and Hudson Bay Mining Co., Limited.

As told last night, this company was organized and incorporated during the final months of the Ross Government. Under its charter it was empowered to locate 640 acres of land for mining development.

It is alleged that not only was this allotment taken up, but that the eleven men who constituted the original shareholders also took up all the claims possible, and that each then made a declaration of trust, handing over these claims to the company, and thus making a breach of the mining laws.

As a result the company controls, it is said, an immense area of mining claims in and surrounding the Cobalt district. The Government have had representations made in regard to the legality or otherwise of the rights of the company to control all these claims. It is understood that affidavits of discovery filed are in the name of one and the same person, and on the same day. If so this would indicate that the lands have been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation.

Now the Attorney-General proposes to test the legality by bringing the whole question before the courts for their award.

Mr. Pinkerton, when seen last night, admitted that he was under instructions from the Attorney-General to proceed as above stated.

"Mr. Foy," he said, "will not tolerate the blanketing of the section of Cobalt, as has been charged, and is determined that the rights of the individual prospectors and general public will be safeguarded and he will open up as much of the country as rests in his power. He wants to have a thorough investigation in the courts."

There are a large number of mining men from Cobalt in the city now in connection with the matter. The company, it is claimed, has already had troubles with prospectors over its offer of 20 per cent. bonuses to prospectors who discovered claims in its properites.

The directors of the Temiskaming & Hudson Bay Mining Co. are New Liskeard men.

SEYMOUR GOURLEY DEAD.

Picturesque Figure in a Recent Parliament Passes Away.

Halifax, Jan. 6.—Seymour E. Gourley, ex-M. P. for Colchester, died yesterday at Truro from cirhosis of the liver. He sat only in one Parliament, being defeated in 1904.

He was lawyer by profession, and made a name for himself by his fervid imperialism as expressed in the House, and on one occasion he declared that Canadians and Britishers were continually giving way to the people of the United States for fear of giving them offence. He urged Canadians to stand by their guns, whether Yankees liked it or not, and he announced that he and his family were willing to die in the last trench in defence of Canada.

Dan Gallery Will Appeal.

Ottawa, Jan. 6.—Dan Gallery of Montreal, who has been unseated and disqualified for the manner in which his election as M. P. was gained in St. Anne's division last winter, will appeal to the Supreme Court, "but not for the purpose of retaining my seat in Parliament," he says, "or to draw the sessional indemnity. I shall never take my seat until such time as my character shall have been vindicated."

The engine caught the sleigh in the centre and carried it many yards.

The horses managed to cut loose, and in doing so jerked Johnston clear.

He was badly shaken up but not seriously injured. The sleigh was demolished.

MEASLES NOT FATAL.

WHAT A NEW YORK PHYSICIAN SAYS ABOUT THAT DISEASE.

New York, Jan 5. — "No deaths ever really occur from measles," said Dr. William H. Guilfoy, registrar of records of the department of health, yesterday in speaking of the epidemic that is now threatening children.

"Deaths attributed to the disease are the results of complications, generally an inflammation in the bronchial tubes, called acute bronchitis, or in the air cells of the lungs, which develop into pneumonia.

"Measles without complications," he continued, "is little more than an uncomfortable rash with slight fever, and because the disease is not dangerous many mothers either don't take ordinary precautions to protect their little ones from taking cold, or, thinking it is one of the ailments that all young children must have, give them some home remedy, keep them in the house for a few days and then let them go out of doors to play. They take cold and the result is often fatal. Allowing them to go among other little ones before they have recovered is one reason that when measles is in a community there is usually an epidemic.

"It seems strange, but every other year, as I know from the statistics, there is an epidemic of measles among the babies and young children from one to three years of age. This wave is due in 1906 and already there are evidences of it, for last week there was a much larger increase in the reported cases than in any other contagious disease.

"The cases of Bright's disease reported last week also showed an increase, and in the last thirty years both it and organic heart troubles have more than doubled. I think this is the result of our habits of eating, drinking and the general way of living in not following the physical laws of well-being, and as a result in the city there are many cases of premature deaths from both of them."

The death rate for the last week in the year was much lower than that for the preceding year, for it was 18.03 against 19.43.

Hats in Korea.

The traveling hat of the monks in Korea is a large, umbrella-like framework of cane, a foot and a half in diameter at the brim and closing to a sharp point at the top. The whole is covered with smooth rush matting, bound at the brim into a hexagon by a narrow edging of white cotton and fitted inside with a circle of cane to clasp the head. Nuns may often be seen trudging along, staff in hand, and their hats are even more striking—a wisp of fine, flexible straw, elaborately bound at one end, cut sharply off at the other, so as to make it a foot long, and quaintly dumped on the crown of the head. The courtiers also have their distinctive hats. They are of huge dimensions, in some cases two or more feet in diameter, and are made of clay.—"Far Eastern Impressions," by E. F. T. Hatch, M. P.

A Fair Exchange.

An original scheme evolved by a certain tobacco merchant to introduce his goods worked to the satisfaction of a physician to whom this dealer sent a box of cigars with a bill for $5 and an explanatory letter, which read:

"Although you have not ordered these cigars, I take the liberty of sending them, feeling sure you will find them excellent."

After the doctor had smoked the cigars, says the Medical Times and Hospital Gazette, he mailed five prescriptions to the tobacconist, with a note, saying:

"Although you have not asked for my professional advice, I take the liberty of sending you these prescriptions, feeling sure you will find them excellent."

There is no policy like politeness, since a good manner often succeeds where the best tongue has failed.—Magoon.

Many foolish things fall from wise men if they speak in haste or be extemporal.—Ben Jonson.

Reorganize the Police Force.

If there is one thing more than another that Belleville needs, it is POLICE FORCE REORGANIZATION. Not next year, or next month, but now; men who are efficient officers and civil to the public are required, not men who have grown insolent, fat, and writ and execution proof. Clean out that sort. Let the aldermen ask for the resignation of the entire force, reinstating only those who are efficient. If a commissioner in any way interferes with the will of the Council (which means the people) take all fair means to remove the said commissioner. Do not allow Belleville's Police Force to be longer run on the down grade.

Public Accounts for 1905.

SURPLUS $7,863,089 — DEBT INCREASED $7,621,366.

People may well ask themselves how it is that with a surplus over expenditure of nearly $8,000,000, the debt of the Dominion is increased by $7,621,366. The answer is easy. The Government spent not the surplus, but seven or eight millions additional for which they ran into debt.

The public accounts of the Dominion, just published, show the consolidated fund revenue to have been $71,182,772 during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1905, and the ordinary expenditure $63,319,683 a "surplus" on consolidated fund account of $7,863,089. But this "surplus," together with $2,261,616 of sinking fund investments, failed to meet the capital expenditure by $5,356,448, by which latter amount the public debt was increased during the year, the net debt at the close of the year being $266,244,166.

The total expenditure of the Dominion during the fiscal year was $79,804,138, an increase of $6,549,931 over 1904, and an increase of $34,707,755 over the total expenditure of 1896.

The capital expenditure of 1905 was $15,484,455, made up of $9,839,117 expended on Government railways, canals and public works, $794,409 on Dominion lands, $1,299,964 on militia, $1,275,629 on railway subsidies, $2,234,685 in bounties on iron, lead, coal oil, etc., and $40,614 on expenses in connection with the extension of the loan of 1874.

The Deputy Minister of Finance, in his report, noted that Canada's note circulation has advanced to $47,334,222, or an increase of $5,759,438 over the previous year; that the increase in the public deposits in the chartered banks average over a million dollars a week, while the amounts held in deposit amount to over five hundred million dollars; also that "Dominion loans in Great Britain maintain their high position."

During the next seven years however, loans to the extent of $134,595,665 will have to be refunded. The number of these coming under the operation of the old Superannuation Act has fallen from 2,176 in 1904 to 2100 in 1905. Withdrawals from the post office and Government banks exceeded deposits by $1,950,827.

Excuse these tears, which are shed because of the decay of that once-popular and noble institution, the Mayor's banquet. Time was when the giant minds of the city foregathered at the Quinte, at the invitation of the Mayor—whoever he was—and proceeded to upholster themselves with all the delicacies of the season, after which they would inaugurate a talking match which lasted till the lights burned blue and the newspaper men present were tired enough, almost, to wish they were dead. Ah! the happy days which have passed away! How many world-jarring ideas had their birth at those banquets!

Our hint that suggestions were in order re a site for the new library has brought forth the following:

My dear sir,—To my mind there is only one suitable site for the new library, and that is the place on which the present library stands. I consider that a site on Pinnacle street would not do at all. It would not be central enough, and, besides that, the presence of the railroad might make it dangerous for young girls and boys who so liberally patronize the institution. To my mind, the present site is the very best one that could be found.

• • •

It was, we heard it whispered, hoped that some large-hearted citizen, suffering from a sudden attack of enlargement of the heart, would "loosen up" and present the city with a site for the new library, but so far such a public benefactor has not loomed into view. However, it is altogether likely that, when that forceful document, the Mayor's annual message, is read next Monday, it may contain some references to the new library. In the meantime, let us possess our souls in patience.

Dr. Yeomans, Medical Health Officer, says the general health of this city is at present good, barring a lot of mild cases of diphtheria. The fact that children with slight attacks of the disease are allowed to run around and mingle with other children is responsible for the numerous cases in the city. This being the festive holiday season, of course, the children like to make little presents to their little friends, so they give each other the diphtheria.

A politician who is a trifle provoked over the anti-pass order, suggested that the Pennsylvania's New Year card be returned with this indorsement:

"It will be remembered that Shylock draws upon Holy Writ to make a point in 'The Merchant of Venice,' and that Bassanio retorts that 'The Devil can quote scripture to his purpose.'"

Everybody in this vicinity knows "Dave" Gerow, the old veteran who lives on Gerow's island, near Massassaga. This morning Mr. Gerow told The Intelligencer that, in his almost 83 years of residence in this district, he has never before seen what he saw yesterday, namely, open water between his island and Point Ann, just opposite. On December 30 he and some others crossed the bay in an open skiff, and yesterday they did the same. This is unprecedented in Bay of Quinte history. Mr. Gerow does not believe, judging by the signs, that there will be any really cold weather to speak of this winter, though there may be a few severe days in February.

The economical Laurier Government spent over $78,000,000 last year, and increased the public debt of Canada by $5,356,448. The net debt now stands at $226,244,166. These are growing times so far as expenditure by the Liberals is concerned, yet less than ten years ago, Sir Richard Cartwright and others protested against the "overwhelming and extravagant expenditure of $38,000,000." How times do change and perhaps convictions as well.

It is to be feared that there is more truth than poetry in the following, from the Woodstock Express: "The saddest thing about the stinginess which keeps down salaries is the indication of how rural trustees regard education. The teacher is given a job in much the same way as the hired man of the farm is taken on, except that the farmer is more careful to make sure of getting a capable helper. To many school boards teachers are teachers, and if one can be engaged at fifty dollars less than another it is considered that fifty dollars has been saved. The idea in many quarters seems to be that the pedagogue is, as he was considered in olden days in Greece, merely a slave who leads his master's children to school."

"I was a freshman at Yale," said Mr. E. P. Dodge, president of the Colorado Springs Association, and a member of the International Committee, in relating the following experience, which indicates the relation of the Physical Department to the Association as a whole in the making of Christian men. "The particular occasion was the Yale-Princeton football game, and the contest was severe. The score was tied and there was about five minutes to play. It was an evenly matched game. Suddenly, at a given signal the right end of the Yale team, a splendidly built young man, received the ball, and by a clever interference and skilful dodging made a magnificent run around the right end of the Princeton team for a touchdown, saving the day for Yale. A few days later I was invited to attend a meeting of the students' Young Men's Christian Association. I said to my friend "No, I do not care to attend the meeting, as I do not desire to have anything to do with such institutions. I am not in sympathy with religious matters; in fact I don't think they are for strong men." But finally, to please my friend, I did attend the meeting. To my great surprise, when I entered the room where the meeting was being held, I noticed that the young man who had played right end so successfully was the president of that association, and associated with him in the work of the Young Men's Christian Association were some of the star athletes and the most manly young men of the university. This was a revelation to me. I said, "If such men as these are identified with this movement there must be something in Christianity which I have not recognized before. It created a great impression on me, and to make a long story short, it was largely responsible in bringing about my conversion. And since I have received this true vision of the Christian life I have given my services freely to the work of the Y.M.C.A. and in behalf of young men.

FRUIT NOT UP TO MARKING

INFORMATION TO BE LAID AGAINST APPLE DEALERS AT TRENTON.

Ottawa, Jan. 5.—On Dec. 28 Robert Coyle, sr., was packing apples at Trenton under the brand of Coyle and Peterson. Mr. Carey, Dominion Fruit Inspector, entered the warehouse and examined a few barrels, and found them far from satisfactory. During the dinner hour the remaining barrels were rushed into a car, and when Mr. Carey returned to continue his examination an engine was attached, ready to pull the car out of the yard. Mr. Carey insisted on the car being held until he continued his examination, and found fruit marked No. 1 was little better than trash. Mr. Coyle signed a declaration admitting that the 50 barrels in the car were the same grade of stuff. An information will be laid under the Fruit Marks Act against the members of this firm.

"Honor the Flag"

Onward, the organ of the young people of the Methodist church, edited by the Rev. W. H. Withrow, D.D., F.R.S.C., thus joins in the chorus of approval of the action of the local Board of Education: "The Public School Board of the progressive City of Belleville, has made a new departure in this respect. On the motion of that patriotic citizen, Mr. William Johnson, it ordered that the Union Jack should be displayed in all the Public schools and should be saluted by the scholars every day after morning prayers. Thus will reverence for the old red cross flag, which stands for law and order and liberty wherever it waves, be duly inculcated. In no place in the world, we think, is more conspicuous honor rendered the Union Jack than in Britain's oldest colony, the island of Newfoundland. Not merely in the towns and cities does it wave on all public occasions, but almost every farm has its flagstaff and its flag, which on public holidays flutters gaily in the breeze. In many places it is used instead of a bell to summon the people to church, and deep enfibred in the heart of the people there grows love and loyalty for the old flag and all that it stands for."

THE HOMER OF PORTUGAL.

Camoens, the Gifted and Unfortunate Author of "The Lusiad."

"The Lusiad" is one of the noblest records ever written of national glory and success. Camoens, its gifted author, determined to do for Portugal what Homer had done for Greece. The great poem was written in the sixteenth century, which has been called the heroic age of Portugal, and its main feature is the rounding of the Cape of Good Hope by Vasco da Gama, while a most interesting episode is the crowning after death of Inez de Castro as queen of Portugal. "The Lusiad" took its name from Lusius, who was said to have founded Lisbon.

Its author was born about 1520, and his career, which began brilliantly, was blighted by the death of a broken heart of the lady of his love, for whose sake he was banished from the land. He wrote "The Lusiad" in his banishment and was recalled in 1571, losing on the way all his property except his poem. Pensioned at first by the king, this great epic poet of Portugal died in great poverty in 1579, when his patron was also dead.

To-morrow's International Sunday School Lesson.

WHEN THE WORLD CHANGED ITS CALENDAR—GOLDEN TEXT IS "FOR UNTO YOU IS BORN THIS DAY IN THE CITY OF DAVID A SAVIOUR, WHICH IS CHRIST THE LORD."

(By William T. Ellis.)

A Baby hand reaches up from the food trough of the bare, rough stable of an oriental caravansary and tears down from the high wall of imperial Rome's history, and from the ancient Hebrew scrolls, the centuries-old calendar of time.

All that ever had been, of war and conquest and discovery and achievement must now be reckoned backward from the lowly appearance of this Child, whose lot was so humble that only the gentle beasts would give him the hospitality of his first couch. And all that would be, henceforth throughout the ages, must be dated from that greatest of all created days, when the plaintive cry of Mary's new-born Son was heard from the Bethlehem manger.

The event is of stupendous moment to man, eve[illegible] [illegible]art from its religious significance. Fo[illegible] it marked history's most memorable day, a time of beginnings, the bursting forth of a spring that has swollen to an immeasurable river whose waters have changed the face of the whole world. Were there not a brighter season, the twenty-six million Sunday school members of the world would be warranted in entering upon this year's study of the life, the words and the works of Jesus, purely on historical, political, social and ethical grounds. There is none so infidel as to deny that the Bethlehem Babe has become the most potent Personage in the life of the race.

WHEN ROME BECAME A SERVANT.

Whole libraries have been insufficient to tell the great story in its completeness, and only the outstanding facts, with their plainest meaning, can be set forth here. The entire machinery of the Roman empire, then at the dazzling apex of its glory, was set in motion—so does God make men and nations his unwitting tools—to secure the presence of a maid and her betrothed husband at the ancestral town of Bethlehem, for this carpenter and the village Virgin to whom he was affianced, and whom his noble magnanimity alone sheltered from the shafts of slander and shame, were of the royal line of David's Israel's shepherd king. Why was it important that they should come to Bethlehem, down in the province of Judea, when their home was up in Nazareth of Galilee? Because, centuries before, the inspired seer had predicted that in Bethlehem—significantly meaning "the house of bread"—the Messiah should be born. Thus, all unsuspected by the millions affected, a divine purpose underlay the great Roman enrolment.

Amid the hurry and tumult that attended the influx of many visitors into the little hill town, small heed was given to the two weary, unattended travellers from the north country, whose simplicity was equalled by their modesty. It was not in Joseph's heart to join the clamorous claimants for lodging, and, perhaps, at the suggestion of the shrinking Girl who was the object of his anxious care, they made for themselves a hurried shelter in a remote corner of the stable of the khan.

There, in surroundings so lowly that the humblest could scarcely have fared worse, occurred the wondrous event that even in the commonest, from the birth of Cain to the birth of the last of the sons of woman, is always tinged with mystery and romance and possibility. In this case, what words can portray the marvel of it—maid become mother, heaven touching earth, eternity's highest bending to earth's lowliest, God revealing himself to man in the person of this tiny Babe, born to be King of Kings and Lord of Lords! Song, story, sermon, pencil and brush, all have reserved their loftiest powers for the effort to picture that indescribable manger scene.

GREAT NEWS FOR PLAIN PEOPLE.

The soft-eyed oxen looked on in wonder, but the world was unheeding, as it usually is of its most momentous events. Travellers sat in the inn yard and talked of their journeyings, their high voices penetrating to the maiden of Nazareth in her travail; reunited relatives chattered of trivialities the night through; all the uncouth noises of a public stopping place disturbed the darkness. But none knew or cared what was happening in the secluded corner of the stable.

Heaven cared, however. The divine estimate of events differs from the human. The eternal realm beyond the stars could not keep silence while their Prince and Master made his entrance upon the scene of his humiliation to reveal the highest glory of God. So an angel of the Lord—these had been busy months for the heavenly messengers, for the greatest fact of eternity was coming to pass—was sent down to announce the good tidings of great joy which should be to all people. With the angel came the Shekinah—the mysterious effulgent shining "the glory of God," which had been in the holy of holies of the tabernacle and of the first temple, to represent the presence of Jehovah—in token that God had come again to dwell among men.

There are many reasons why the plain people have always been the best friends of Jesus; perhaps the first of these is that He has always been the best friend of the plain people. Not to kings or priests was the first news of the birth sent, but to a company of simple shepherds, engaged in their nightly employ; once more reminding us that the post of duty is the place of revelation and inspiration. Godly men those must have been, for the secret of Jehovah is with them that fear Him. That to earth's toilers, the good news first came was appropriate, for was not the new King to have for regalia during most of His manhood's years, the garb of a peasant toiler? And to shepherds, for He, Son of the shepherd king, was to wear for his proud title, "The Good Shepherd." As we recall the tremendous consequences of that holy night—the exaltation of motherhood, the sanctification of childhood, the revelation of the Godhead—it is to be remembered that the common people and the men who work, have been forever crowned with honor by Mary's Son, who made himself one of their number.

THE NEWS THAT OPENED HEAVEN.

A little Greek word, doxa, figures thrice in this story, and it is also the root of our present day doxology, to link the two may make more impressive and meaningful the latter. First it is in the "glory" of the Lord that shone round about the shepherds, then it is in the angelic song "glory to God in the highest, and again in the "glorifying" of God which the shepherds rendered upon their return from the manger. Highest glory, laud, honor and praise should be evoked from man and angels by the news that "Unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given."

Of course the shepherds at first "feared with great fear" at the appearance of their celestial guest as men are wont to fear when they should only rejoice. Blind fear has kept myriads from perceiving, enjoying and benefitting by the message which the angel brought. His reassuring word—wherein we may discern the genius of all the happiness of Christmastide—was "Be not afraid, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all the people, for there is born to you this day in the city of David a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord."

That was the news for which a sin-sick, weary and discouraged race had waited for centuries. That was the realization of the oft-repeated promise, first made in the garden, that One should come to conquer sin and bring liberty to men's spirits. That was the long-deferred hope of Israel, the Immanuel who should reconcile man and His Maker. Small wonder that "Suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God and saying:

> Glory to God in the highest
> And on earth peace among men in > whom He is well pleased."

Heaven would not have been heaven had it not burst forth into jubilation over this event, even to the rending of the immemorial stillness of the skies.

Thrilled, amazed, enraptured, the shepherds made their way to the manger: toilers thus being the first to render homage to the new-born Messiah. Straightway they began to share in the work of the angels, as announcers, messengers, missionaries of the gospel of peace for all the world when it should be of good will toward God. They were the first mortals of that innumerable company, even now scattered over the whole earth, who through twenty centuries have been telling the story that makes the world new.

NEW CURE FOR DRUNKARDS.

CHURCH ARMY SUPPLIED LOZENGES AS AN ANTIDOTE.

London, Jan. 5.—The Church Army is trying to make people sober by lozenge.

Experiments have been on the way for a month, and in that time one hundredweight of the new patent euro-preventive sweets have been sold. The experiment has succeeded, and testimonials from rescued drunkards are pouring in by scores.

Rev. Wilson Carlile sketched out the life history of the sweetmeat yesterday. "Three physicians have put their heads together and made the lozenge. It is a successor to the Church Army nerve tonic, another older aid to temperance.

"People told me that when they felt like drinking alcohol a draught of the tonic saved them," said the chief of the Church Army, "but one cannot always be drinking out of a bottle in the street; hence the lozenge."

Mr. Carlile hopes to establish a lozenge factory in the near future, but he was careful to point out that the charge of sixpence for some fifty-one lozenges leaves no margin of profit for the inventors. The lozenges are white and odorless; their shape and general appearance do not betray the user.

A FRIEND OF THE KING

EARL SPENCER, WHO HAS BEEN STRICKEN DOWN BY APOPLEXY.

Red Earl is Consequently Out of British Politics as Liberal Leader, But He Will Retain Those Fine Personal Qualities Which Have Made Him One of the Great Parliamentary Figures of His Day.

English politics undergoes a new change through the retirement of Earl Spencer. A stroke of apoplexy is the answer to the question, "Will Earl Spencer be the next Liberal Premier?" The Red Earl, had his health not forsaken him so suddenly, was admitted to have the better chance for the leadership of his party than any other prominent Liberal. He is a man popular with the rank and file of the party. It may be that he will still be able to aid his old colleagues and associates with advice, though disqualified from active participation in the great game he has played so steadily for a generation. Though his health has broken down, Earl Spencer will retain those fine personal qualities which have made him one of the great Parliamentary figures of his day.

A Likely Premier.

According to the well-informed "Marquis de Fontenoy," Earl Spencer has been regarded as the one Liberal statesman possessed of sufficient prestige and popularity to admit of the various dissentient leaders of the Liberal party serving under him as Premier. Lord Rosebery, who would have hesitated to work under Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, would have readily consented to accept the seal of Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in an Administration formed by Lord Spencer. And it would not have been by any means the first instance of a former Prime Minister consenting to serve under a colleague who had previously been one of his own subordinates. Lord Spencer, moreover, since the death of the late Lord Kimberley, has been the leader of the Liberals in the House of Lords, and possesses in a very marked degree the intimate friendship of the King. He may be said to have known the latter from boyhood, for he was Chief of the Household to the Prince Consort at the time of his death, and for more than a quarter of a century Groom of the Stole; that is to say, the principal dignitary of the court of the King prior to his accession.

Twice Lord Lieutenant.

One is tempted to remark parenthetically that the confidence and friendship of King Edward are important assets to a British statesman, and that a Premier could have no shrewder adviser than His Majesty; for while the King could not and would not take sides with one party against another, he is probably susceptible to the appeals of personal friendship. The title of the "Red Earl," by which Earl Spencer is commonly known, was bestowed not on account of a sanguinary disposition (although he has publicly championed the sport of cock-fighting), but was won by his long red beard, white these many years. Twice he has been Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and the murder of Lord Frederick Cavendish was an event of one of his terms of office. Earl Spencer was not a Home Ruler at the time, although he subsequently supported Mr. Gladstone's unavailing efforts in this direction. He is famous as a sportsman, and for more than forty years was Master of the Pytchley Hunt, perhaps the most renowned organization of the kind in the world.

The Honor of the Spencers.

No man can say who will be Earl Spencer's political heir, but his title and estates will descend in the course of time to his half-brother, the Right Hon. Robert Spencer, M. P., who married into the famous Baring family. The Right Hon. Robert was a forerunner of the Marquis of Anglesey in the matter of dress, although he never was such an exquisite as the marquis. Nevertheless, for years he held the record of being the best-dressed man in the House of Commons. One can, therefore, understand the burst of laughter which greeted "Bobby" when he began a speech by announcing, "I am not an agricultural laborer." From their father both the Spencers have inherited a fine sense of personal honor, and financial circles in London well remember that when the Barings were in difficulties some fifteen years ago Hon. Robert came to the rescue of his father-in-law by sacrificing his wife's dowry. It is true that since then the Barings have regained their position as one of the great money-houses of the world, but at the time of Spencer's heroic sacrifice it seemed unlikely that he would ever see a penny of it again.

The Humorous Jack Spencer.

The Spencers are descendants of the Duke of Marlborough. The duke died without leaving any sons, and the line was carried on through his eldest daughter, Henrietta, a duchess in her own right, the wife of the Earl of Godolphin. The duchess, who left no children, was succeeded by her nephew, Charles Spencer, eldest son of her youngest sister, Anne Spencer, Countess of Sunderland. A younger brother of Charles, known far and wide as Jack Spencer, was a great favorite of Sarah, the first duchess, whose influence it was secured for him the Earldom of Spencer, and who made him her principal heir. But on one occasion he nearly fatally offended his august grandmother, and had she not had such a strong affection for the young scapegrace, he would have lived to repent his wit. The occasion was a family reunion, at which the old duchess presided. She had compared the family to "a great tree, of which she was the root, with all her branches flourishing around her." To which her dutiful grandson replied audibly that "the branches would flourish a damned sight more if the root was under ground."

Spenser and Spencer.

Of course the Spencers can trace their ancestry a good deal further back than the first Duke of Marlborough. Indeed, Althorp, the country seat and ancestral home of the Earls of Spencer, was already in possession of the Spencer family prior to the reign of King Henry VIII., and among the members of this house was Edmund Spenser, the poet and author of "The Faerie Queene," who died from starvation on his return from Ireland, but who lies buried in Westminster Abbey. In fact, many of the poems of Edmund Spenser are dedicated to the daughter of Sir John Spencer, then master of Althorp, stress being laid in the verses upon the kinship which existed between the writer and the young girl. Many, indeed, are the historical links that connect the stricken earl with the splendid past. His own mark upon the story of his times will not be as distinct as his qualities make possible, but if he is not destined to go down to posterity as one of Britain's leading statesmen, he may be remembered as one who filled an important position through a long lifetime in a great party. That there are still many years of rest before him, is the wish of his strongest political opponents.

As to Fags.

Oh, yes, we've heard of brain fag. But isn't it strange that so few people have chin fag?—Chicago Tribune.

"SMART" LONDON.

"Took a Run Up to Scotland" During Recent Visit of the King.

On every side one is told that "smart" London is now in Scotland, writes Cityonne in Toronto News from London. The King's visit to Glenquoich (Lord Burton's beautiful estate at Invergarry) has made it doubly incumbent upon the devotee of fashionable life to "take a run up to Scotland." "Glenquoich" means the "glen of the cup," so called from the shape of the glen within the hills, which rise abruptly from the loch. This is Lord Burton's last season at Invergarry. During his tenancy of the place he has made an immense number of improvements in the "lodge," as the residence is called.

Glenquoich has not a little interest to Canadians who are familiar with the story of Ralph Connor, "The Man From Glengarry," for the Canadian "Glengarry" was named by the Macdonells, the last of the clan in Canada being, I believe, Mr. Jack Macdonell, who still lives at the spot made famous by our Canadian author. The last great chief of Glengarry at Inverary, Scotland, was Alastair Ronaldson Macdonell, who died in 1828, and in 1838 the estate was purchased by Mr. Edward Ellice, M. P.

It is not generally known that a ghost story hangs about the residence where the King, surrounded by a decidedly gay house-party, has been disporting himself recently. It is connected with the story of the deer forest, for "Glengarry's Sanctuary," as the forest is called, is famous in the annals of Scotland. This great forest extends from near Loch Garry, on the east, to the sea at Kinloch Hourn, on the west, the distance between these places being about nineteen miles—a nice little stretch of property when one comes to think of it. The story of the phantom which haunts the "lodge" was confided to the writer by an old friend of the former owner, Mr. Ellice, but it was only told on the condition that it was not to appear in print, as it might damage the prospects of a "let" or "sale" later on, a tantalizing proviso for a newspaper correspondent to submit to!

Tom Paine's Brain.

A portion of the brain of Thomas Paine removed at the time his body was taken from the tomb in New Rochelle, N. Y., and carried to England by William Cobbett in 1819, was recently exhibited by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., to thousands who attended the public transfer of the key of the Paine monument to the city of New Rochelle. Dr. Foote was chairman of the meeting and turned the key over to Mayor Clarke.

M. D. Conway, author of a life of Paine, bought a relic in an auction shop in London a few years ago and kept its possession a secret until the city of New Rochelle appropriated sufficient money to properly inclose and preserve the plot in North street, where Paine's body was buried and where his monument now stands. Mr. Conway asked permission to put the relic in the tomb, which was granted. It will be incased in a copper box and reburied in New Rochelle.

This discovery of the brain of Paine leaves little doubt that the story told concerning the theft of his body and that it fell finally into the hands of vandals, who cut it up and sold it for relics, is true.

The key will be hung in the City Hall of New Rochelle, where visitors to that city can borrow it to inspect the tomb.

Spoilt Children.

What rollicking times they must have been for little children in the pre-chimney sweeping-machine days, says Lloyd's Weekly. Five years, or thereabouts, was their age at apprenticeship, because they had to be small; and when a chimney caught fire—say a blazing kitchen chimney half-an-hour before dinner-time—the sweep was sent for, and up went one of his tiny imps into the midst of the flames to put them out. Here is a verbatim extract from the evidence taken at the Parliamentary inquiry into the business:—"Did you ever know a boy get burnt up a chimney?" "Yes." "Is that usual?" "Yes, I have been burnt myself up more than forty chimneys." "Did your master ever compel you to go up a chimney when it was on fire?" "Yes, many times; two of us had to stop at home on Sunday to be ready in case of a chimney being afire." "Were you ever forced up a chimney on fire?" "Yes; and because I couldn't put it out I was taken home and well hided with the brush." "Is that common in the trade?" "It is the custom." Sometimes the youngsters stuck fast in the chimney and died there, and sometimes the "climbing children," as they were called, were girls!

In the Bad Old Times.

With what unmitigated savagery property used to be protected may be gathered from the following incident:—During "an alarm about the Falkland Islands," in 1770, a young workman was seized by a press-gang while on his way home from his employment. His wife, being thus suddenly and without warning deprived of her breadwinner, was presently reduced to such straits to provide food for her babes that in her distraction she, unsuccessfully, attempted to steal a few pence worth of coarse linen from outside a shop on Ludgate hill, for which, despite her piteous defence, she was, in the words of a contemporary chronicler of the event, "dragged to the gallows a raving maniac, with her infant suckling at her breast, and put to death!"

The Real Worry.

"Yes, I am concerned about myself. You see, of late I have got into the habit, if one may so term it, of talking in my sleep," says the man who has been waiting to see the doctor.

"Ah, yes," says the doctor. "And you want to stop it some way? Really, it is not a cause for worry. I should give it no attention if I were you."

"But it bothers me a great deal."

"Tut, tut! You needn't feel any alarm over talking in your sleep."

"But I am afraid my wife listens in her sleep."—Chicago Tribune.

The Difference.

Most people are afraid to be different. Some people are different for the express purpose of showing that they are not afraid. And then there are a few who are big enough not to care whether they are different or not. They are the ones that win out, but nine times out of ten they do things in the ordinary way.—Judge.

Relief.

The moment the nurse turned her back the rich baby ran over and kissed the poor baby frantically.

"It's such a relief to get hold of somebody who isn't sterilized!" he exclaimed in baby talk, for he spoke no English.

"I understand, old man," rejoiced the poor baby indulgently.—Life.

COUNTESS OF ABERDEEN

A Worker for the Good of Humanity.

A warm-hearted, earnest woman, serene, simple, sincere and sympathetic, with a special talent for human helpfulness and inspiration to higher living—this is Lady Aberdeen.

In "Guisachan," the romantic Scotch estate in Invernesshire, Ishbel, youngest daughter of Sir Dudley Coutts Marjoribanks, later Lord Tweedmouth, was born in 1857. A right royal welcome was given to visitors in this hospitable home in the Highlands, and from the lips of the prominent statesmen that gathered there little Ishbel learned politics at an age when she should still have believed in fairy tales. When she was eleven, a young man of twenty-one who had ridden across the country, lost his way and unknowingly trespassed on the Marjoribanks estate. A chance interview with Sir Dudley proved him to be John Campbell Gordon, son of Sir Dudley's good old Parliamentary friend, Earl of Aberdeen, and he was invited to spend the night. The love at first sight between the two young people led to their marriage in 1877.

In 1886, Gladstone offered to his friend, young Lord Aberdeen, the post of Viceroy of Ireland. It was a delicate, difficult position, strewn with pitfalls which taxed the watchfulness, tact and diplomacy of the Viceroy to avoid. There was great distress in the country; the crops and fisheries had failed, the people grimly tolerated the occupants of Dublin Castle because protest was useless; but soon the sunshine and glow of affection from Lord and Lady Aberdeen melted the stolid, sullen reserve, and love reigned where force had proven worse than useless. Perhaps the Countess, herself a descendant of the old Irish and Scotch kings, struck some sympathetic chord that vibrated in kinship and unity. Her practical nature realised that the people should be helped to help themselves through their own labor, not pauperized by gifts. She devoted herself with great energy to reviving the domestic industries of Ireland—weaving, knitting, embroidery and lace-making—and made the wearing of Irish poplin an essential to admission to official functions at the Castle.

In Canada, where Lord Aberdeen was Governor-General from 1893-8 they endeared themselves to the people by their many acts of kindness. The Countess' first effort in syndicating sunshine and sweetness was her organization of the "Onward and Upward Society" among the tenants, domestics and the poor on the Scottish estates, which has spread over the world. The Women's Liberal Federation which she organized and led as President has over 80,000 members; but her club work and labors for humanity never for a moment eclipse her home, with her three children remaining in her loving care.

Ottawa, Jan. 6.—The loss in operation of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways for the fiscal year 1905 was $1,876,678. Besides this, there was spent on "capital account" upon these two Government railways the sum of $5,346,950 during the year.

A Cure For Pneumonia.

Owing to the prevalence of pneumonia in winter and spring boards of health in northern New Jersey are taking measures to protect citizens at their towns. The health board of Washington, Warren county, has published this remedy, which is said to be "a sure cure" for pneumonia:

"Take six or ten onions, according to size, and chop fine. Put in a large spider over a hot fire, then add the same quantity of rye meal and vinegar enough to form a thick paste. Stir the mixture thoroughly, letting it simmer five or ten minutes. Then put in a cotton bag large enough to cover the lungs and apply to chest as hot as patient can bear. In about ten minutes apply another, and thus continue by reheating the poultices, and in a few hours the patient will be out of danger."

It is said that this remedy has never failed to effect a cure after three or four applications.

With less than this they cannot leave school as well equipped for the struggle in life as if allowed generous hours of rest. How does this tally with the habits of Canadian school children?

ADMITS INSOLVENCY.

Southern Light and Power Co., Limited, May Be Wound Up.

Toronto, Jan. 6.—The crisis in the affairs of the Southern Light & Power Co., Limited, came yesterday morning, when, at a meeting of the directors, a resolution was carried declaring the company insolvent and that the same should be wound up.

Having been underwritten by the President of the York County Loan to the extent of $212,500, the step is one of great significance and must have its bearing on the winding-up of the loan company. This amount has always been listed in the published statements of assets of the York County Loan.

Shortly after the meeting Mr. Joseph Barrett, President of the Southern Light & Power Co., sent an affidavit to Mr. Fulford Arnoldi at Osgoode Hall, setting forth the facts in connection with the meeting as given above.

Events Moved Rapidly.

Within an hour an application arrived at the Hall on behalf of the Dominion Portland Cement Co., creditors for $1,700, who asked for an order winding up the Southern Light & Power Co. A few minutes later another application for a winding-up order was filed by Edward Gegg of Toronto, a creditor for $1,493. The applications were brought hurriedly before Justice Teetzel, who declined to consider them in his private chambers. The hearing will, therefore, take place on Tuesday morning.

EMBARGO AFTER ELECTIONS.

New British Minister of Agriculture Will Then Consider It.

London, Jan. 6.—(C. A. P.)—"Encouraging, but not definite," was the answer Lord Carrington, the new Minister of Agriculture, gave yesterday afternoon to a large deputation urging the removal of the embargo on Canadian cattle. He viewed the subject in the imperial as well as national aspect, but said he could not decide in the hurly burly of the general election. After the election he would bring it before his colleagues, keeping in mind always the importance of protection against disease. In his remarks his lordship cited the resolution of the Dominion Parliament with a strength which much impressed them.

Disagrees With Earl Grey.

He referred also to the recent speech by Earl Grey at Guelph, who is reported as saying that the embargo was a protection for British graziers. With this view, that the restriction was to keep up the price of store cattle here, Carrington emphatically did not agree.

Body Found After Long Search.

Cornwall, Jan. 6.—The body of Duncan McGregor, a wealthy citizen of Green Bay, Wis., has been found under a jam of logs, and his friends believe that he was murdered. McGregor went out for a walk one night last summer, from his home in Green Bay, and never returned. He was known to have a large sum of money on his person, and it was feared that he met with foul play. A reward of $1,000, offered by Mrs. McGregor, and a similar amount by the City of Green Bay, for information of his whereabouts, or the recovery of his body, incited a long search, with the above result.

All were severely shaken up. Their rig slewed on the ice, and swung into a tree.

Auditor Cross Makes Report.

Toronto, Jan. 6.—The report of W. H. Cross, appointed by Attorney-General Foy, to audit the books of the York Loan Co., was yesterday handed to the Minister. Cuban Murderers Garrotted.

Havana, Jan. 6.—Boningo Bocourt, an old negro, and Victor Molina, a mulatto, were garrotted at the prison here yesterday morning. Both men were regarded as "witches" by their associates. Their crime was the hideous murder of a white baby, whose body was found, smoked and salted, weeks after the crime.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL

FEW PEOPLE KNOW HOW USEFUL IT IS IN PRESERVING HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics, in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

Your stomach is like the mainspring of your watch. When it's all right, you are all right. When it's wrong, you are ALL wrong.

A morning glass of

Abbey's Effervescent Salt

will keep your stomach in "right to the second" condition.

High Constable of Quebec

After Suffering For 10 Years With Pain In The Back He Was Completely Cured By "Fruit-a-tives."

"Fruit-a-tives" cures diseased and irritated kidneys when all other treatment fails.

The proof that "Fruit-a-tives" is the greatest kidney cure known to science is demonstrated by these tablets removing all pain in the back—making the kidneys healthy—and curing chronic constipation.

St. Hyacinthe, P.Q., June 10th, 1905.

I have much pleasure in testifying to the great good which "Fruit-a-tives" have done me. I was a constant sufferer from severe constipation and severe pain in the back for the last ten years. I tried many kinds of pills and tablets and physician's medicines but the relief was only temporary. Not long ago

I tried "Fruit-a-tives" and now I am entirely well, no pain, no constipation and my stomach and bowels act naturally. I cannot say enough in praise of "Fruit-a-tives"—they are a grand medicine, mild as fruit in their action and easy to take.

(Signed)
H. Marchessault,
High Constable.

Do you know that every drop of blood in your body goes to the kidneys to get rid of some of the impurities?

When the bowels don't move regularly, the blood takes up poisons in the bowels and carries them to the kidneys. Then the kidneys get overworked—inflamed. Then comes the pain in the back—headaches—constant desire to urinate—nervousness—sleeplessness.

"Fruit-a-tives acts directly on the Kidneys—cleans, heals and strengthens them—makes the liver give up more bile to move the bowels regularly—and stimulates the glands of the skin to increased action. These rid the system of all poisons and every trace of Kidney Disease disappears.

Fruit-a-tives have cured hundreds of cases of Kidney Disease by stimulating and healing the Kidneys.
At all druggists or sent postpaid on receipt of price—50c. a box or 6 boxes for $2.50.

The Lust of Hate

BY GUY BOOTHBY

Author of "A Beautiful White Devil," "A Bid For Fortune," "The Ma[illegible]f Esther," "D[illegible] Nikola," [illegible], Etc.

the man was, and in reply they led me into the house.

"The doctor says it is quite a hopeless case," said Agnes, turning to me in the doorway; "the poor fellow must have injured his spine when his horse fell with him."

I followed her into the room wh[illegible] had once been my own sleeping apartment. It was now filled with wounded. The man I had brought in lay upon a mattress in the corner by the window, and, with Agnes beside me, I went across to him. Once there I looked down at his face, and then, with a cry that even on pain of death I could not have kept back, I fell against the wall, as Agnes afterwards told me, pallid to the very lips. I don't know how to tell you who I saw there; I don't know how to make you believe it, or how to enable you to appreciate my feelings. One thing was certain, lying on the bed before me, his head bandaged up, and a bushy beard clothing the lower half of the face, was no less a person than Richard Bartrand—my old enemy and the man I believed myself to have murdered in London so many months before. I could hardly believe my eyes; I stared at him and then looked away—only to look back again half expecting to find him gone. Could this be any mistake? I asked myself. Could it be only a deceiving likeness, or an hallucination of an overtaxed brain? Hardly knowing what I did I dragged Agnes by the wrist out of the house to a quiet corner, where I leant against the wall feeling as if I were going to faint again.

"What is the matter, Gilbert?" she cried. "Oh, what is the matter with you?"

"Matter!" I almost shouted in my joy. "This is the matter. I am free—free—free! Free to marry you—free to do as I please, and live as I please, and go where I please! ! ! For there in that bed is my old enemy, the man I told you I had killed."

For a second she must have thought me mad, for I noticed she shrank a step away from me, and looked at me with an apprehensive glance. But she soon recovered her composure, and asked if I were certain of what I said.

"As certain as I am that you are standing before me now," I answered. "I should know him anywhere. Where is the doctor?"

A moment later I had found the doctor.

"Doctor," I said, "there is a man in that room yonder whom, I am told, you say has a broken back. He is unconscious. Will he remain so until he dies?"

"Most probably," was the other's matter-of-fact reply as he began to bind up the arm of the man he had been operating on. "Why do you ask?"

"Because it is a matter of the most vital importance that I should speak with him before he dies. All the happiness of my life and another's depends upon it."

"Very well. Don't worry yourself. I'll see what I can do for you. Now go away and be quiet. I'm busy."

I went away as he ordered me, and leant against the verandah rails at the back of the house. My head was swimming, and I could hardly think coherently. Now that Bartrand was alive, every obstacle was cleared away—I was free to marry Agnes as soon as her feelings would let me; free to do whatever I pleased in the world. The reaction was almost more than I could bear. No words could over-estimate my relief and joy.

Half an hour later the doctor came to me.

"Your man is conscious now," he said. "But you'd better look sharp if you want to ask him anything. He won't last long."

I followed him into the house to the corner where the sick man lay. As soon as he saw me, Bartrand showed with his eyes that he recognized me.

"Pennethorne," he whispered, as I knelt by the bed, "this is a strange meeting. Do you know I've been hunting for you the[illegible]ne months past?"

"Hunting fo[illegible]" I said. "Why, I thought you d[illegible]"

"I allowed [illegible] supposed that I

Pennethorne, that money I swindled you out of never brought me an ounce of luck—nor Gibbs either. He turned cocktail and sent his share back to me almost at once. He was drinking himself to death on it, I heard. Now look at me, I'm here—dying in South Africa. They tell me you saved me to-day at the risk of your life."

"Never mind that now," I said. "We've got other things to talk about."

"But I must mind," he answered. "Listen to what I have to tell you, and don't interrupt me. Three nights before I disappeared last winter, I made my will, leaving you everything. It's more than the value of the mine, for I brought off some big speculations with the money, and almost doubled my capital. You may not believe it, but I always felt sorry for you, even when I stole your secret. I'm a pretty bad lot, but I couldn't steal your money and not be a bit sorry. But, funny as it may seem to say so, I hated you all the time too—hated you more than any other man on God's earth. Now you've risked your life for me, and I'm dying in your house. How strangely things turn out, don't they?"

Here the doctor gave him something to drink, and bade me let him be quiet for a few moments. Presently Bartrand recovered his strength, and began again.

"One day, soon after I arrived in London from Australia, I fell in tow with a man named Nikola. I tell you, Pennethorne, if ever you see that man beware of him, for he's the Devil, and nobody else. I tell you he proposed the most fiendish things to me and showed me such a side of human nature that, if I hadn't quarrelled with him and not seen so much of him I should have been driven into a lunatic asylum. I can tell you it's not altogether a life of roses to be a millionaire. About this time I began to get threatening letters from men all over Europe trying to extort money from me for one purpose or another. Eventually Nikola found out that I was the victim of a secret society. How he managed it, the deuce only knows. They wanted money badly, and finally Nikola told me that for half a million he could get me clear. If I did not pay up I'd be dead, he said, in a month. But, I wasn't to be frightened like that, so I told him I wouldn't give it. From that time forward attempts were made on my life until my nerve gave way—and in a blue funk I determined to forego the bulk of my wealth and clear out of England in the hopes of beginning a new life elsewhere.

He paused once more for a few moments; his strength was nearly exhausted, and I could see with half an eye that the end was not far distant now. When he spoke again his voice was much weaker, and he seemed to find it difficult to concentrate his ideas.

"Nikola wanted sixty thousand for himself, I suppose for one of his devilments," he said, huskily. "He used every means in his power to induce me to give it to him, but I refused time after time. He showed me his power, tried to hypnotize me even, and finally told me I should be a dead man in a week if I did not let him have the money. I wasn't going to be bluffed, so I declined again. By this time I distrusted my servants, my friends, and everybody with whom I came in contact. I could not sleep, and I could not eat. All my arrangements were made, and I was going to leave England on the Saturday. On the Wednesday Nikola and I were to meet at a house on special business. We saw each other at a club, and I called a hansom, intending to go on and wait for him. I had a dreadful cold, and carried some cough drops in a little silver box in my pocket. He must have got possession of it, and substituted some preparations of his own. Feeling my cough returning, I took one in the cab as I drove along. After that I remember no more till I came round and found myself lying in the middle of the road, half covered with snow, and with a bruise the size of a teacup on the back of my head. For some reason of his own Nikola had tried to do for me; and the cabman, frightened at my state, had pitched me out and left me. As soon as I could walk and it was daylight, I determined to find you at your hotel, in order to hand over to you the money I had stolen from you, and then I was going to bolt from England for my life. But when I reached Blankerton's I was told that you had left. I traced your luggage to Aberdeen; but, though I wasted a week looking, I couldn't find you there. Three months ago I chanced upon a snapshot photograph taken in Cape Town, and reproduced in an American illustrated paper. It represented one of the only two survivors of the Fiji Princess, and I recognized you immediately, and followed you, first to Cape Town and then, bit by bit, out here. Now listen to me, for I've not much time left. My will is in my coat-pocket; when I'm dead, you can take it out and do as you like with it. You'll find yourself one of the richest men in the world, or I'm mistaken. I can only say I hope you'll have better luck with the money than I have had. I'm glad you've got it again; for, somehow, I'd fixed the idea in my head that I shouldn't rest quietly in my grave unless I restored it to you. One caution! Don't let Nikola get hold of it, that's all—for he's after you, I'm certain. He's been tracking you down these months past; and I've heard he's on his way here. I'm told he thinks I'm dead. He'll be right in his conjecture soon."

"Bartrand," I said, as solemnly as I knew how, "I will not take one halfpenny of the money. I am firmly resolved upon that. Nothing shall ever make me."

"Not take it? But it's your own. I never had any right to it from the beginning. I stole your secret while you were ill."

"That may be; but I'll not touch the money, come what may."

"But I must leave it to somebody."

"Then leave it to the London hospitals. I will not have a penny of it. Good heavens, man, you little know how basely I behaved towards you!"

"I've not time to hear it now, then," he answered. "Quick ! let me make a new will while I've strength to sign it."

Pens, paper, and ink were soon forthcoming; and at his instruction Mr. Maybourne and the doctor between them drafted the will. When it was finished the dying man signed it, and then those present witnessed it, and the man lay back and closed his eyes. For a moment I thought he was gone, but I was mistaken. After a silence of about ten minutes he opened his eyes and looked at me.

"Do you remember Markapurlie?" he said. That was all. Then, with a grim smile upon his lips, he died, just as the clock on the wall above his head struck twelve. His last speech, for some reason or other, haunted me for weeks.

Towards sundown that afternoon I was standing in the verandah of my house, watching a fatigue party digging a grave under a tree in the paddock beyond the mine buildings, when a shout from Mr. Maybourne, who was on his way to the office, attracted my attention. When I reached his side, he pointed to a small speck of dust about a mile to the northward.

"It's a horseman," he cried; "but who can it be?"

"I have no possible notion," I answered; "but we shall very soon see."

The rider, whoever he was, was in no hurry. When he came nearer, we could see that he was cantering along as coolly as if he were riding in Rotten Row. By the time he was only a hundred yards or so distant, I was trembling with excitement. Though I had never seen the man on horseback before, I should have known his figure anywhere. It was Dr. Nikola. There could be no possible doubt about that. Bartrand was quite right when he told me that he was in the neighborhood.

I heard Mr. Maybourne say something about news from the township, but the real import of his words I did not catch. I seemed to be watching the advancing figure with my whole being. When he reached the laager he sprang from his horse, and then it was that I noticed Mr. Maybourne had left my side and was giving instructions to let him in. I followed to receive him.

On reaching the inside of our defences, Nikola raised his hat politely to Mr. Maybourne, while he handed his reins to a trooper standing by.

"Mr. Maybourne, I believe, he said. "My name is Nikola. I am afraid I am thrusting myself upon you in a very unseemly fashion, and at a time when you have no desire to be burdened with outsiders. My friendship for our friend Wrexford here must be my excuse. I left Buluwayo at daylight this morning in order to see him."

He held out his hand to me and I found myself unable to do anything but take it. As usual it was as cold as ice. For the moment I was so fascinated by the evil glitter in his eyes that I forgot to wonder how he knew my assumed name. However, I managed to stammer out something by way of a welcome, and then asked how long he had been in South Africa.

"I arrived two months ago," he answered, "and after a week in Cape Town, where I had some business to transact, made my way up here to see you. It appears I have arrived at an awkward moment, but if I can help you in any way I hope you will command my services. I am a tolerable surgeon, and I have the advantage of considerable experience of assegai wounds.

While he was speaking the bell rang for tea, and at Mr. Maybourne's invitation Dr. Nikola accompanied us to where the meal was spread—picnic fashion—on the ground by the kitchen door. Agnes was waiting for us, and I saw her start with surprise when her father introduced the newcomer as Dr. Nikola, a friend of Mr. Wrexford's. She bowed gravely to him, but said nothing. I could see that she knew him for the man Bartrand had warned me against, and for this reason she was by no means prepossessed in his favor.

During the meal Nikola exerted all his talents to please. And such was his devilish—I can only call it by that name—cleverness, that by the time we rose from the meal he had put himself on the best of terms with everyone. Even Agnes seemed to have, for the moment, lost much of her distrust of him. Once out in the open again I drew Nikola away from the others, and having walked him out of earshot of the house, asked the meaning of his visit.

"Is it so hard to guess?" he said, as he seated himself on the pole of a wagon, and favored me with one of his peculiar smiles. "I should have thought not."

"I have not tried to guess," I answered, having by this time resolved upon my line of action; "and I do not intend to do so. I wish you to tell me."

"My dear Pennethorne-Wrexford, or Wrexford-Pennethorne," he said quietly, "I should advise you not to adopt that tone with me. You know very well why I have put myself to the trouble of running you to earth."

"I have not the least notion," I replied, "and that is the truth. I thought I had done with you when I said good-bye to you in Golden Square that awful night."

"Nobody can hope to have done with me," he answered, "when they do not act fairly by me."

"Act fairly by you? What do you mean? How have I not acted fairly by you?"

"By running away in that mysterious fashion, when it was agreed between us that I should arrange everything. You might have ruined me."

"Still I do not understand you! How might I have ruined you?"

This time I took him unawares. He looked at me for a moment in sheer surprise.

"I should advise you to give up this sort of thing," he said, licking his lips in that peculiar cat-like fashion I had noticed in London. "Remember I know everything, and one word in our friend Maybourne's ear, and—well—you know what the result will be. Perhaps he does not know what an illustrious criminal he is purposing to take for a son-in-law."

"One insinuation like that again, Nikola," I cried, "and I'll have put off this place before you know where you are. You dare to call me a criminal—you, who plotted and planned the murders that shocked and terrified all England!"

"That I do not admit. I only remember that I assisted you to obtain your revenge on a man who had wronged you. On summing up so judiciously, pray do not forget that point."

Nikola evidently thought he had obtained an advantage, and was quick to improve on it.

"Come, come," he said, "what is the use of our quarrelling like a pair of children? All I want of you is an answer to two simple questions."

"What are your questions?"

"I want to know, first, what you did with Bartrand's body when you got rid of it out of the cab."

"You really wish to know that?"

He nodded.

"Then come with me," I said, "and I'll tell you."

I led him into the house, and, having reached the bed in the corner, pulled down the sheet.

He bent over the figure lying there so still, and then started back with a cry of surprise. For a moment I could see that he was non-plussed as he had probably not been in his life before, but by the time one could have counted twenty, this singular being was himself again.

"I congratulate you," he said, turning to me and holding out his hand. "The king has come into his own again. You are now one of the richest men in the world, and I can ask my second question."

"Be certain first," I said. "I inherit nothing from Mr. Bartrand."

"What do you mean by that? I happen to know that his will was made in your favor."

"You are quite mistaken. He made a later will this afternoon, leaving all his money and estates to four London hospitals."

Nikola's face went paler than I had ever seen it yet. His thin lips trembled perceptibly. The man was visibly anxious.

"You will excuse my appearing to doubt you, I hope," he said, "but may I see that will?"

I called Mr. Maybourne into the room and asked him if he had any objection to allowing Dr. Nikola to see the paper in question. He handed it to him without hesitation, keeping close to his elbow while he perused it. The Doctor read it slowly from beginning to end, examined the signature, noted the names of the executors, and also of the witnesses, and when he had done so, returned it to Mr. Maybourne with a bow.

"Thank you," he said, politely. "It is excellently drawn up, and, with your evidence against me, I fear it would be foolish for me to dispute it. In that case, I don't think I need trouble your hospitality any further."

Then, turning to me, he led me from the house across to where his horse was standing.

"Good-bye, Pennethorne," he said. "All I can say of you is that your luck is greater than your cleverness. I am not so blase but I can admire a man who can surrender three millions without a sigh. I must confess I am vulgar enough to find that it costs me a pang to lose even my sixty thousand. I wanted it badly. Had my coup only come off, and the dead man in there not been such an inveterate ass, I should have had the whole amount of his fortune in my hands by this time, and in six months I would have worked out a scheme that would have paralyzed Europe. As it is, I must look elsewhere for the amount. When you wish to be proud of yourself, try to remember that you have baulked Dr. Nikola in one of his best-planned schemes, and saved probably half-a-million lives by doing so. Believe me, there are far cleverer men than you who have tried to outwit me and failed. I suppose you will marry Miss Maybourne now. Well, I wish you luck with her. If I am a judge of character, she will make you an able wife. In ten years time you will be a commonplace rich man, with scarcely any idea outside your own domestic circle while I—well the devil himself knows where or what I shall be then. I wonder which will be the happier? Now I must be off. Though you may not think it, I always liked you, and if you had thrown in your lot with me, I might have made something of you. Good-bye."

He held out his hand, and as he did so he looked me full in the face. For the last time I felt the influence of those extraordinary eyes. I took the hand he offered and bade him good-bye with almost a feeling of regret, mad as it may seem to say so, at the thought that in all probability I should never see him again. Next moment he was on his horse's back and out on the veldt making for the westward. I stood and watched him till he was lost in the gathering gloom, and then went slowly back to the house thinking of the change that had come into my life, thanking God for my freedom.

Three months have passed since the events just narrated took place, and I am back in Cape Town again, finishing the writing of this story of the most adventurous period of my life, in Mr. Maybourne's study. To-morrow my wife (for I have been married a week to-day) and I leave South Africa on a trip round the world. What a honeymoon it will be!

"The Pride of the South," you will be glad to hear, has made gallant strides since the late trouble in Rhodesia, and as my shares have quadrupled in value, to say nothing of the other ventures in which I have been associated with my father-in-law, I am making rapid progress towards becoming a rich man. And now it only remains for me to bring my story to a close. By way of an epilogue let me say that no better, sweeter, or more loyal wife than I possess could possibly be desired by any mortal man. I love her with my whole heart and soul, as she loves me, and I can only hope that every masculine reader who may have the patience to wade through these, to me, interminable pages, may prove as fortunate in his choice as I have been. More fortunate, it is certain, he could not be.

King Edward Cuts Some Kissing.

Until the assesion of King Edward not only each peeress, but every daughter of a peer, was entitled to a ceremonial kiss from the sovereign on presentation at court, and at Dublin castle, the Viceroy, as Lord Lieutenant of the Monarch, was required by etiquette to accord a similar salutation to every woman presented, no matter whether young or aged, married or single, homely or beautiful. Fortunately the vast majority of the daughters of Erin are extremely attractive, so that the Lords Lieutenant seldom complained, and it is doubtful whether the reform instituted by Edward VII. in abolishing viceregal osculation at Dublin castle was quite as popular as most of the other innovations which he has inaugurated. He, however, justly took the ground that since he himself had sacrificed the Monarchical prerogative of kissing debutantes at court there was no reason whatsoever why the Viceroy of Ireland should continue to enjoy it as his representative. It may be added that until now the Nationalists have not seen fit to add this measure on his part to the long list of wrongs to which they claim the Emerald Isle has been subjected by the British Crown.

There are certain forms of ceremonial kiss, however, which Edward VII. has not attempted to abolish. Thus, Archbishops and Bishops of the church of England, Ambassadors and Ministers plenipotentiary, Cabinet officers, and the great dignitaries of court and state, kiss his hand at the audience at which he confers upon them their appointment, and the fact that they have "kissed hands on appointment" is always recorded in the royal Court Circular and The London Gazette. Similar homage is paid to Emperor William, to the venerable Francis Joseph of Austria, to the Czars of Russia, to the Sultan of Turkey, to the Kings of Sweden and Denmark, to the Sovereigns of Spain and Portugal, and to many of the minor rulers of Germany. Indeed, one of the most picturesque incidents of the ceremony of the accession to the Crown of Emperor William, was when at the close of his first speech from the throne old Prince Bismarck and the still more aged Field Marshal Count Moltke, both stepped forward and bowed low to kiss the hand of the young Monarch, whom they had known intimately ever since his earliest infancy.

Railways Kill An Army Yearly.

The annual report of the U. S. Interstate Commerce Commission, giving the railroad statistics for the year 1904, shows that there were at the end of the year 297,073 miles of railroad in the United States. Total number of casualties was 94,201, 10,046 having been killed and 84,155 injured. Of those killed 441 were passengers and of the wounded 9,111, or one passenger killed out of every 622,267 carried and one injured out of every 78,523 carried.

The number of passengers reported carried in the year was 715,419,682, increase 20,508,147. The passenger mileage, or the number of passengers carried one mile, was 21,923,213,526, increase 1,007,449,655. The number of tons of freight carried was 1,309,899,165, increase 5,504,842 tons. The ton mileage, or the number of tons carried one mile, was 174,522,089,577. The gross earnings were $1,975,174,091, increase $74,327,184. The operating expenses were $1,338,906,253, increase $81,357,401. The number of persons on the pay rolls of the railroads of the United States, as returned for June, 1904, was 1,296,121, decrease 16,416 .The wages and salaries paid for the year amounted to $817,598,810.

Chip Hats.

Every woman knows what a chip hat is, but probably few know why it is called by that name. The reason is simply because it is made not exactly of chips, but of wood shavings, which are dyed in dainty colors, curled and crimped almost beyond recognition.

The Warning Angels.

According to the Koran, the angels who gave warning of the coming destruction of Sodom were Israfeel, Gabriel and Michael.

English Royal Stables.

All the horses in the royal stable at Windsor are specially trained before they are considered safe for riding or driving. After they have been broken in they are driven past military bands and are made to stand by railway trains and to hear them rattle. The horses are also accustomed to firing by taking them down on a field day to Aldershot.

Tuesday In Spain.

Tuesday is considered an unlucky day in Spain. Sometimes on a Tuesday there is not a single marriage registered in the whole of Madrid. On Tuesdays, too, railway carriages are almost empty, so that foreigners traveling in Spain can always insure a carriage to themselves merely by arranging to start on their journeys on Tuesdays.

Coroner.

The term coroner is derived from the word "corph-connel," which means a corpse inspector.

English Oysters.

In Australia they have an oyster that is bigger than a dinner plate, and the oysters of England have the taste of old copper nails. This is said to arise from the fact that the oyster beds of England lie over copper mines.

Raffle For Heirs.

One of the oddest wills was one recently executed by which the estate of W. H. Mainwaring of England was divided into six equal shares. The six children of the testator drew from a box envelopes containing numbers corresponding to these portions, and each accepted without question that portion assigned by chance.

A MOTHER'S PRAISE

In every part of Canada you will find mothers who speak in the highest praise of Baby's Own Tablets. Among these is Mrs. Jas. H. Konkle, Beamsville, Ontario, who says: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets for over three years and I would not be without them. They have done more for my children than any medicine I have ever used. My little girl, now four years old, was always troubled with indigestion and constipation, and although other medicines helped her temporarily, Baby's Own Tablets were the thing needed to cure her. I also gave the tablets to my baby from time to time since she was two days old, and they always worked like a charm. She is now two years old and a more healthy child would be hard to find. The Tablets are certainly a life-saver." These Tablets cure all minor ailments of infants and young children. They contain no poisoning soothing stuff, and there is no danger of giving an over-dose as there is with liquid medicine. Sold by all druggists or sent by mail at 25 cents a box by writing The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville

CAUSES OF INSANITY.

50 Per Cent. of Inmates of Asylums Are of Farming Class—Interesting Paper by Dr. W. R. B. Smith.

The cause of insanity was the principal subject discussed one morning at the Normal School, on the resumption of the eighth Canadian Conference on Charities and Corrections. Dr. Helen MacMurchy, in an address on "The Care of the Feeble-Minded," argued that feeble-minded women should be placed in special institutions, and that defective children should receive special attention.

Dr. W. R. Bruce Smith, Inspector of Hospitals and Prisons, read a paper entitled "Suggestion for Preventing the Increase of Insanity."

"In every refuge, rescue home and orphanage may be found," he said, "deplorable evidence of the necessity of some action being taken that will check the ever-increasing number of mental degenerates that are being brought into the world. There are hundreds of feeble-minded girls in this province that should be cared for in some institution specially set apart and conducted as an industrial refuge. Only last week in one of the smaller cities of Ontario I counted at least a dozen young women who could be classed only as high-grade imbeciles, and who had either just become, or were about to be, mothers. The probable destiny of their offspring need be little questioned. Then, when I looked about and saw the marks of degeneracy so evident in many of the other children, I could only wonder how long it will take to awake public conscience to a proper comprehension of the importance of this great question."

The time had come, Dr. Bruce Smith contended, when as much attention should be given to the prevention of insanity as to the care and custody of its unfortunate victims. He also said that the province was too lax in regard to the admission of undesirable immigrants, and by the pernicious system of bonusing emigration agents abroad mental and physical degenerates had been landed here and finally drifted into one of the great public charities.

"There is no doubt," Dr. Bruce Smith proceeded, "that 50 per cent. of the inmates of Canadian asylums are drawn from the farming community. This must be accounted for largely by the mode of living which obtains in many farm-houses. Socially they are isolated from the world, especially in the newer districts. Imperfect hygienic surroundings, the monotony of their daily lives, a dietary that seldom varies, often the entire absence of bathing facilities, and we might draw a picture that reveals a state of domestic life that no wonder often ends in despair. The human brain demands diversity, and we must teach the farming community that they owe it as a duty to themselves as well as to the nation to cultivate a higher ideal of home life."

There were books published which were not conducive to soundness, as well as purity, of mind.

Finally, Dr. Bruce Smith gave the following conclusions:—(1) That if the conditions under which many cases of insanity originate were properly understood many attacks of the disease might be avoided: (2) that the public should be enlightened in regard to the nature of insanity, in order that they may properly estimate the influence of heredity as the most potent factor in the causation of the disease; (3) that care should be taken to provide a special refuge for feeble-minded women of the child-bearing age, in order that a deplorable condition now manifest in Ontario may be checked; (4) the prevention of insanity is not promoted by merely studying the phenomena of the disease; (5) that the study of child character and the careful consideration of the variability in the development of mental phenomena during the period of growth in the child are all-important; (6) the burden must be adjusted to the capacity of the individual in order that it can always be carried with safety when this is possible, and when it is not possible that the line of descent and every such defection shall terminate in the individual himself.

THE REASON WHY.

Pathetic Incident in Life of Englishman Who Came to Canada.

Here is one of the many incidents which happen in a great city, and which contains much heart interest.

During the early part of last summer there came to Toronto, from England, a man who had been trained in the insurance business. He left behind him a wife and daughter. His object in coming here was to find employment. He was not successful. He wrote to his family regularly, but refrained from telling them of his hard luck, but at last he had to tell them of his failure here. They wrote him immediately, advising him to come home, and asking what money he required. He never received the letter, nor have his friends in England heard from him since.

Several letters for him came from England to his old address. They were "returned" marked "not here." The daughter wrote to an acquaintance in Toronto, a pathetic letter, asking him to try and find some trace of her father.

One day the father found himself penniless. He passed a worthless cheque for $5 and received in change after making a purchase $1.30.

He was arraigned in the Police Court, pleaded guilty, was sent to the Kingston "pen" for one year. That is the reason he has not written his wife and daughter, and that is the sad news the friend has to send them.

New Waterways Chairman.

It is announced that Mr. George C. Gibbons, K. C., of London, has been appointed Chairman of the Canadian Waterways Commission, in succession to Judge Mabee. Mr. Gibbons was born at St. Catharines in 1848 and was educated at the Grammar School there and at Upper Canada College. He was called to the Bar in 1869 and commenced the practice of his profession at London. He was created a Q. C. in 1891, and in 1897 he was elected president of the Middlesex Bar Association. Mr. Gibbons was president of the London & Western Trusts Co. and was also president of the London Philharmonic Society.

Caffeine.

Caffeine, the active principle of coffee, was discovered by Runge in 1820. In a pure state it takes the form of long silky needles. In ordinary coffee it is present to the extent of about 1 per cent, but Java coffee contains 4.4, and Martinique has as much as 6.4. It is said by some chemists that caffeine in its essentialities is identical with theine, the active principle of tea. Claus affirms that the inferior qualities of tea contain more caffeine than the best commercial grades.

Among the Heathen.

Helen, aged four, was spending a night away from home. At bedtime she knelt at her hostess' knees to say her prayers, expecting the usual prompting. Finding Mrs. J. unable to help her out, she concluded thus: "Please, God, scuse me. I can't 'member my prayers, and I'm staying with a lady that don't know any."

FALSE THEORIES.

Lead to Worthless or Harmful Remedies.

Stimulating the scalp may allay the itching of the dandruff, but that does not cure the scalp. The disease won't yield to quinine or capsicum nor alcohol, because it is caused by a germ or parasite. To cure dandruff the germ must be destroyed. Until recently there was no hair preparation, or dandruff cure, or hair restorer on the market that would kill that insidious germ that dries up the scalp in little scales called dandruff, and absorbes the vitality of the hair, causing falling hair, and finally baldness. Newbro's Herpicide is the only really scientific preparation to cure dandruff, prevent falling hair, and baldness. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Cleansing Silk.

I tried washing a mud stained white silk waist in gasoline, but "the scars remained." Then a friend advised the use of white soap with the gasoline, and the spots disappeared like magic. Since then, if my gloves or ribbons are much soiled, I always rub on white soap and then let them lie in the gasoline for some hours before rubbing out. I always rinse any article in clean gasoline to make sure that it will not be streaked with the sediment, then let the gasoline settle and bottle for future use.—Housekeeper.

Sunlight Soap is better than other soaps, but is best when used in the Sunlight way. Buy Sunlight Soap and follow directions.

BACK FROM THE ARCTIC.

First "White" Woman in the Far North—Wife of Major Moodie Tells Her Experiences.

Mrs. Moodie, wife of Major Moodie of the Northwest Mounted Police, was the only woman with the Hudson Bay expedition of the Dominion Government steamship Arctic, of which her husband was commander. She was the only "white" woman ever seen in those regions, and was, therefore, regarded by the natives with much curiosity. The party were for nine months frozen in the ice, going in on the 17th October and breaking out on the 5th July, the whole expedition occupying thirteen months.

"We experienced no discomfort whatever," said Mrs. Moodie, in speaking of her Arctic tour, "and had a most interesting time of it. One has, of course, to dress entirely in furs and skins, but then there is no danger of being frost-bitten. The thermometer overages 38 below; it is not so very severe, but it keeps low all the time."

The people are not like the Esquimaux of farther south (the Arctic went just north of 64), many of them appearing more like Canadian or European types. The race is decreasing rapidly, however, owing to starvation, and Mrs. Moodie thinks they would soon become extinct, unless, as she expects, the Government comes to their aid with food, as for the Indians. The children have been dying off fast, a fact which may be due to the custom of their mothers of not clothing them at all, allowing them to play around naked, only skins being spread for them on the floors of the "igloos" or ice-houses.

"Could not those splendid people be brought down to a more moderate climate, where they would have a chance to live?" Mrs. Moodie was asked.

"Yes, and I think it would be a good thing to do for them; not to bring them down to civilization exactly, but along the shores of Hudson Bay further south. I think the Government will come to their rescue now, after the expedition has found out about their condition."

Speaking of the country, Mrs. Moodie was enthusiastic over the beauties of the scenery, saying she never saw such rich colorings in blooms as in the profuse, though low, growths of wild flowers along the shores of Ungava Bay. The fishing, too, is excellent, both of salmon and of cod. "They speak of twenty hours' night, but there is really no night, for the twilight lasts so long, the sun dips such a short distance below the horizon and the northern lights are so vivid, that it is always partly light, except on stormy nights. There is no soft snow and no heavy snowfalls, only a continual light drifting, sort of fog of snow, which hardens on the ground and is cut into blocks to build the igloos."

Prefontaine Harbor, in Ungava Bay, is a magnificent land-locked roadstead, nine miles long, capacious enough for the whole British navy to anchor in it. The party thought well to give it the name of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. They named the promontory at its entrance Cape Laurier, and the island which shields the entrance they called White Island, after Col. White, the leader of their expedition. The party expects to cruise further north, going even to Greenland, next summer.

ALIENS ARE BARRED.

Marriage Licenses Must Now Not Be Sold to Them.

The Provincial Secretary's Department is taking action to prevent the issuing of marriage licenses at frontier points in Ontario to persons from the American side, a business which is quite a flourishing one, particularly at Windsor. This follows upon the handing down of an opinion by the Attorney-General that these licenses should not be issued. He based his finding upon sections of clause 17 of the act respecting the solemnization of marriages. These sections provide that the affidavit made personally by one of the parties to the intended marriage, before a license is granted, shall state that one of the parties has had his or her usual place of abode in the county or the judicial district in which is the municipality where the marriage is to be solemnized, for fifteen days immediately preceding the issue of the license. If the county or district in which it is intended that the marriage shall take place is not that in which either of the parties has resided, as stated, the affidavit must show that the reason for solemnizing the marriage shall take place is not that in which either of the parties has resided, as stated, the affidavit must show that the reason for solemnizing the marriage in such place is not in order to evade due publicity or for any other improper purpose.

In effect the ruling of the Attorney-General is that the licenses should not be issued to people who are not bona fide residents of the province, and the Provincial Secretary's Department will try to enforce that ruling. Some frontier license issuers and some ministers will naturally suffer financially, and those at Windsor to a greater extent than others.

To Make a Barometer.

A simple barometer that can be made for one's self, and which, though old, may be new to some, is made as follows: Two drachms of camphor, half drachm of muriate of ammonia, and two ounces of proof spirits, in a glass tube or narrow phial, will make a very good weather guide. In dry weather the solution will remain clear. On the approach of change, minute stars will rise up in the liquid, while stormy weather will be indicated by the very disturbed condition of the chemical combination.

HOW TO GET CONSUMPTION.

Ninety per cent. of the "lungers" contract consumption by allowing power of resistance to fall so low that a favorable condition for the development of the bacilli is provided. In a healthy system consumption can't take root. But where there is weakness and debility, there you find tuberculosis. For developing strength and building up the weak, nothing equals Ferrozone. It makes the blood nutritious and the nerves enduring. The way it converts food into nutriment, the appetite it gives is surprising. Just what the man verging on consumption needs—that's Ferrozone. If tired and weak don't put off. Fifty cents buys a box of fifty tablets—at all dealers.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

HOCKEY.

Bankers Beat Y. M. C. A.

The first match in the schedule of the city league took place last night, the competing teams being the Bankers and Y.M.C.A. Like all events which are not properly advertised, the attendance was small but very select. The spectators cheerfully tried to make up in enthusiasm what they lacked in numbers, and very nearly succeeded. The teams were very evenly matched. At half-time the score was 2-2 in favor of the Bankers. In the second half each team scored a goal, the Cash Handlers thus winning by 4 to 3. Towards the end the Y.M.C.A. team had the Bankers strictly on the defensive, but they could not score. "Sandy" Burrows made an impartial referee. He sent a few on each side to the fence, the chief offence being tripping. Following was the line-up:

Bankers.		Y.M.C.A.
Williamson	Goal	Dolan
W. Hamilton	Point	Acton

TROTTING.

Peterboro Man Makes Charges.

Dr. Thos. H. Johnston, of Peterboro, writes to the Buffalo Horse World:

"If you will give me space in your valuable paper, I will furnish its readers with some information regarding the way our races are conducted and dealt with when they come before the Board of Review. I asked for the identification of the mare Orillia Belle. The parties owning the mare filed papers to show she was six years old. I had two veterinary surgeons examine the mare's mouth and they called her 12 years old. These certificates were sent to Gocher, of which he acknowledged receipt. The veterinary surgeon must be wrong, or the Board of Review, probably time will tell.

Another matter of interest to horsemen of this section, was regarding the Gananoque races. The time was suppressed on Orillia Belle from 2.16 1-4 to 2.22 1-4. This suppressed time was sent in with an affidavit, but it was dismissed by the Board of Review. Every one that held a watch at this meeting knows this to be true, but when the case of White Blaze came up for winning a heat at Peterborough Fair where the time was suppressed, there is placed against her a fine of $100 notwithstanding the owner entered her under the National Trotting Association rules and protested against the suppression of time. The Board in their finding to the owner of White Blaze, said he was not concerned in the wrong, yet they fine his mare. Why don't they fine the responsible parties, the managers of races. The mare is disqualified and is ready for the races and the owner has placed his case in his lawyer's hands and will investigate the matter regardless of cost.

SPORTING NOTES.

Belleville's O.H.A. team will surely put its best foot forward on Monday evening next. Manager Burrows tells us that there may be some changes from the team which played in Cobourg. Anyhow, the strongest bunch Belleville can produce will face Port Hope when the bell rings, and the team which beats us in the remaining matches will have to go some, and that's no mild winter dream.

A Canadian team visiting New York gets $200 to $400. Harvard is paid $130 a game, Yale about $90, Princeton $35 to $40, and these amounts are sent to the athletic associations of the universities for expenses.

Playing at Peterboro last night, the Peterboro intermediates beat Cobourg 16 to 1. The Cobourg bunch appear to be outclassed.

Smith's Falls Federals beat Queen's 7 to 0 last night. Harry Brown of this city seems to have caught on with a swift crowd.

In an exhibition game last night, at Deseronto, Picton beat the sawdust team by 3 to 2.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"DORA THORNE."

"Dora Thorne," Bertha M. Clay's popular novel, has been dramatized. The production of this play has proven to be one of the best melodramas of the season. The book has already achieved a reputation for the author, now the play is establishing or rather adding to the splendid reputation of the producing managers, Messrs. Rowland and Clifford. It is a beautiful love story, simply told and in a manner that every one enjoys. Even the "gallery gods" sit throughout the performance with rapt attention and afterwards say it's "a bully show." "Dora Thorne" will be the attraction at the Carman on Tuesday evening, Jan. 9.

OFFICERS OF LOCAL I. O. O. F. LODGES AND ENCAMPMENTS JOINTLY INSTALLED LAST NIGHT — BANQUET FOLLOWED —COVERS LAID FOR TWO HUNDRED — SPEECHES AND SONGS FILLED OUT PLEASANT EVENING.

Members of Belleville and Mizpah Lodges and Quinte and Moira Encampments, I.O.O.F., turned out in large numbers last night. The occasion was a joint installation of the newly-elected officers of the two subordinate lodges and the two Encampments. Another pleasing feature was that the Grand Master of the Order, Bro. Blewett, of Listowel, was in attendance. Other distinguished visitors and members of the Order were Grand Patriarch Mortimer, of Toronto; Grand Representative E. Garbutt, of Picton; D.D.G.M. Bro. Vandusen, of Napanee; and Past District Deputy Bro. Ruttan, of Napanee. The local brethren felt highly honored in the fact that these noted brethren accepted invitations to be present last night, and pleased because everything was successfully planned and carried out.

The early part of the meeting was devoted to the installation ceremony. The officers of the two subordinate lodges were installed by D.D.G.M. Bro. Ruttan, who was assisted by some of the local brethren. The officers of the two Encampments were installed by District Deputy Grand Patriarch Bro. A. Matthews, of this city, assisted by Patriarchs Cooper and Ketcheson. The elective officers of the different lodges and encampments have already appeared in these columns.

THE BANQUET.

At the conclusion of the installation ceremony the brethren repaired to the assembly room, where a banquet was partaken of. Tables were laid for about 200, which number was present. The spread provided by a local caterer was excellent. The I.O.O.F. band was present and enlivened the proceedings with a number of selections.

Bro. Rev. A. L. Geen occupied the chair and filled that position most acceptably. After supper had been partaken of the following toast list was carried out:

"The King."—The National Anthem by the company and the band.

"The Grand Lodge of Ontario." — Responded to by Grand Master Blewett, D.D.G.M. Vandusen and Bro. Ruttan, of Napanee. The Grand Master gave an admirable address, tracing the phenomenal growth of the Order from the date of its inception in Baltimore, Md., 87 years ago, to the present time. The membership of the Order at the close of 1904 was 1,520,000, and the sum of $4,000,000 had been paid out in benefits. Proceeding he touched briefly on the record of the Ontario Grand Lodge. From a membership of 500 it had grown to 31,400 with 306 lodges. It has funds on hand totalling $1,250,000, and in 48 years paid out $3,500,000. The Grand Lodge is doing a grand work with the principle of fraternity as the chief corner stone. The Grand Master concluded his excellent address with a recitation bearing on the principles of the Order, which was received with a storm of applause.

"Grand Encampment of Ontario" was most appropriately responded to by Grand Patriarch Mortimer, of Toronto, and A. Matthews, D.D.G.P., of this city.

"Sovereign Grand Lodge."— Grand Representative E. Garbutt, of Picton, and P.G.P. L. B. Cooper, of this city, replied to this toast in an appropriate manner.

A song was at this juncture sang by Mr. E. T. Austin.

"The Press,"—Responded to by the representatives present.

A vote of thanks, proposed by the Grand Master and seconded by Grand Patriarch Mortimer, was tendered to the chairman, Rev. Bro. A. L. Geen, who, in a few words, replied in a most appropriate manner.

The singing of the National Anthem brought the pleasant gathering to a close.

THE COMPLETION OF TRENT VALLEY CANAL.

ARRANGEMENTS BEING MADE FOR BIG DEPUTATION TO GO TO OTTAWA.

Peterboro, Jan. 5.—Ald. E. F. Mason, chairman of the finance committee, is sending out the following letter to the councils of the cities and towns along the entire route of the Trent Canal. The Board of Trade, through Mr. T. Q. Quartermaine, is also sending the same letter to the Boards of Trade and to the newspapers of every place along the canal from Midland to Trenton. The letter is as follows:—

Gentlemen,—The council of the city of Peterborough believes that it would be in the interest of the Trent Valley Waterway, and the districts through which it will pass, to have a large deputation wait upon the Minister of [illegible]ways and Canals and other [illegible] of the Dominion Government [illegible] urge them to complete the waterway. A large amount of money has been expended upon the work, and [illegible] the remainder is completed, the [illegible]try will receive little benefit [illegible] it, while the completed waterway would be of immense benefit to the whole district through which it would pass, and to the country as a whole. It is desired, therefore, that the deputation should be one that would impress the ministers, and that it should demand that sufficient appropriations be placed in the estimates at the coming session of Parliament to complete the work; that the contracts be let promptly, and that the work be pushed. A united effort should secure this.

When the date of the interview is fixed, arrangements will be made for an excursion rate from Peterborough and points east. Will you have representatives appointed, so that when the date is fixed they will be ready to join the deputation, which, it is hoped, will be a large one? You will be advised of the date as soon as it is named. Please send to me the names and addresses of representatives appointed.

MR. MALONEY MURMURS:

MAN SENT TO JAIL FOR INFRACTION OF LIQUOR LAW HAS BEEN GRANTED WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS AT OSGOODE HALL.

Toronto, Jan. 5. — Sentenced to four months in jail without a trial, without a witness, without even a charge against him, is what James Maloney, of Hastings County, will try to show. At present he is serving a four months' sentence at Belleville, as a second offence, on a charge laid by the License Inspector of North Hastings, of selling liquor without a license. A filled bottle of whiskey was found on Maloney's premises.

Maloney was brought before Alexander Carscallen, J.P., of Marmora.

Maloney declares the whiskey was not for sale, but for his own use and benefit.

Judge Teetzel granted a writ of habeas corpus, and Maloney's case will come before Judge Mabee for settlement.

CHARGED WITH PEDDLING WITHOUT A LICENSE.

Dennis Daly and sons, of Napanee, were charged with peddling tea in the County of Hastings without a license. Mr. W. S. Herrington, K. Masson appeared on behalf of the County and contended that the by-law was operative. The case was enlarged for a week.

Publicity Counts.

Some weeks ago The Intelligencer published a story of a local Chinese, who claimed to be overcharged $25.00 for his naturalization papers by a certain individual belonging to the legal fraternity. This paper is now pleased to be able to state that Hong Lee, the Chinese in question, has had $20.00 of his money returned. So much for publicity—it counts.

Died in Napanee

Mary Ann Dolan, relict of the late Thomas Moyle of Richmond township, died at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. Uriah Wilson, M.P., Napanee, Dec. 27. She was born Nov. 7, 1821, in the township of Richmond, a daughter of Patrick and Mary Dolan. In 1838 she was married to Thomas Moyle by the Rev. Saltern Givens. About fifteen years ago she became afflicted with total blindness. Of a large family of sisters only two now survive, Mrs. Jas. R. Spencer, of Vancouver, B.C., and Mrs. Robert S. Denison, of Selby. She is survived by three daughters, Mary, wife of Uriah Wilson, M.P., Margaret and Susie.

BISHOP ANDERSON IN TOWN.

The Right Reverend Charles P. Anderson, D.D., Bishop of Chicago, is staying with friends in town, and will preach at the morning service (11 o'clock) in St. Thomas' Church.

A city minister sends us the following:

Wanted,—The smooth-tongued fellow, whose breath needs cloves, is fairly well dressed, has his story of deception down fine and perpetrates it professionally on the cloth. Calling himself "J. PUPILS AND TEACHERS PUT ON MRS. STOWE'S DRAMA IN SPLENDID STYLE.

It would be safe to say that no other two hundred and thirty children in Ontario have a better time during the Christmas season than do the pupils at the Institution for the Deaf. In the past two weeks they have had two parties in the large dining-room, a magic lantern exhibition and three pantomime, besides skating and ice-boating whenever the ice was fit. The first pantomime, given on Christmas week, was a light and highly amusing one, entitled "A Bachelor in Search of a Wife." This was in charge of Mrs. Balis, and delighted the children very much. This was followed on Friday evening by a dramatization of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and was the most thrilling and best played of any that has been given for very many years. The credit for its success is due chiefly to Mr. Nurse, who arranged the various scenes and did the staging; and he was warmly seconded by all others whose co-operation he asked. There was time for only two brief rehearsals before the play was first put on, and for one more before it was repeated last evening with several additions. It would have been impossible for hearing children to have acted their parts successfully with so little practice, but for the deaf, who live in a world of signs and pantomime, it was easy and natural, and in the whole thirty-two acts not a hitch occurred; everyone, even to the youngest, did his or her part in a most realistic manner. Those present who had seen the play acted by some of the best troupes on the road averred that they had never seen some of the parts so well performed before. Mr. Forrester and Miss Ross acted the double part of Mr. and Mrs. Selby and Mr. and Mrs. St. Clare most effectively, while Miss Dempsey, as Aunt Ophelia, could not have been surpassed. Mr. Nurse took the part of the heavy villains, Haley and Legree, most realistically, and laid on his whip without pity, and the children were greatly pleased when he met with his just deserts at the hand of Mars'r George Selby. Little Mona McFarlane made a perfect Eva, while Alex. Lobsinger, as Uncle Tom; Annetta Johnson as Eliza and Norman Gleadow as Andy, all did splendidly, and all the minor parts, without exception, were well taken. The star of the evening, however, was Topsy, taken by Miss Jarvis, and it would be no exaggeration to say that there never before was such a mischievous sprite, and the antics she performed were most laughable. It is safe to say that the pupils will never forget the leading characters of this great and epoch-making book.—Com.

Estimable Lady Dead

There passed away this morning, at her late residence, Boswell St., Mrs. Anna Amelia Northcote, widow of the late Captain Lemon Corham, of Plymouth, Devonshire, England. The deceased lady was born in Ringmore, Devonshire, England, on June 30, 1828, and came to this city from England, with her children, about 23 years ago. She was beloved and respected by all who knew her, for the many Christian and gentle graces which adorned her character. Six children, three sons and three daughters, are left to mourn the loss of a loving mother. The sons are, William, of this city; Walter and Arthur, of Escanaba, Mich.; the daughters are Mrs. R. Embury, of this city; Mrs. W. J. Ridley, of Midland, Ont., and Miss Amelia, at home. The late Mrs. Corham was a staunch and much-beloved member of Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church, in the church work of which she will be greatly missed. The sympathy of a wide circle of friends will go out to the bereaved family in their affliction.

SIR JAMES WATSON'S OPINION.
He says that the commonest of all disorders, and one from which few escape, is catarrh. Sir James firmly believes in local treatment, which is best supplied by "Catarrhozone." No case of catarrh can exist where Catarrhozone is used; it is a miracle worker, relieves almost instantly and cures after other remedies fail. Other treatments can't reach the diseased parts like Catarrhozone, because it goes to the source of the trouble along with the air you breathe. Catarrhozone is free

HUMOR

PAPA'S MISTAKE.

Father Springs Surprise on Daughter and Is Surprised Himself.

The man went down to the station to see his daughter off. Like a right minded parent, he intended to give her a little extra spending money for the trip, and before leaving the office he had carefully counted out $20 to hand her as a little surprise at the last moment, purposing to say in the magnanimous way men love:

"There, my dear; I thought you might like to buy a few pocket handkerchiefs or a souvenir postal card or two while you are gone."

This sum he placed in a pocket where he could get at it handily, for goodbys are tricky things, especially when you have a feminine to deal with, and not for the world would he have the train pull out with his daughter aboard and he still fumbling with his wallet.

The remainder of the ready money he had about him—about $55—he slipped hastily into another pocket and hurried to the station.

All the while he was saying goodby and imparting his parental instructions —for she is a very pretty girl and was going without a chaperon—his heart swelled as he thought of the nice little surprise reposing in his breast pocket for her. And finally as he kissed her and prepared to step off the train just before it pulled out he thrust his hand into his pocket, drew forth the little green wad and handed it to her with the aforementioned little speech. Then he skipped off the bottom step just in time to see her radiant and grateful countenance as the car window glided by.

"I'll bring back what I don't spend, papa," she called merrily.

"No fears," thought "papa," who knows the feminine nature, as he patted himself on the back, feeling that for hard times like these he had done a pretty neat thing.

This complacent state of mind lasted exactly ten minutes. At the end of that time the man put his hand in his pocket to replace the money in his wallet. Then it was that he made a heartrending discovery.

In his haste he had dipped into the wrong pocket! His $55 was speeding merrily westward. He had just two $10 bills with which to forward certain little plans of his own.

The indulgent father didn't rage. He didn't swear. He just groaned.

"And she'll have every penny of it spent," said he sadly, "before I can even reach her by telegraph."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

An Essay on the Bicycle.

A little Kansas girl who had been told to bring to school an essay of 250 words on the bicycle wrote the following: "My auntie has a bicycle. One day she went out for a ride. When she got about a mile from home her dress caught in the chain and threw her off and broke the wheel. I guess this is about fifty words, and my auntie used the other 200 words while she was carrying her bicycle home."

Scared Out.

"Why did the earl break the engagement?"

"Oh, he became afraid when he found out that her father was president of a life insurance company that the old man would appoint him a vice president or give him some other kind of a job that would make it necessary for him to at least memorize the figures referring to the assets and liabilities."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Good Friday.

"Now, boys," said a Sunday school teacher, addressing the juvenile class, "can either of you tell me anything about Good Friday?"

"Yes, ma'am, I can," replied the boy at the foot of the class. "He was the fellow that done the housework for Robinson Crusoe."

HE GOT MONEY TWICE

Dr. Lynd Testifies to Payments From Civic Contractors.

Received $75 In One Instance and $100 In Another When He Was Controller and City Hall Was Being Furnished—Says These Contributions Were Received For Election Expenses and Not For Favors.

Toronto, Jan. 6.—His Honor Judge Winchester yesterday morning resumed the investigation into the charges of wrongdoing by aldermen. The scope of the investigation having been widened by resolution of the City Council, matters in connection with the award of contracts for furniture, etc., at the new City Hall and for sewer pipes in the year 1899.

Dr. Lynd, who was a controller in that year and on the sub-committee which dealt with the tenders, testified in the box yesterday that he received a payment of $75 from Arthur Dinnis of R. Dinnis & Son, contractors, and another payment from W. B. Rogers of the firm of Charles Rogers & Co., furniture dealers, of $100. Both firms had secured contracts from the city that year, but the payments were made in each case a considerable time after the awards had been made by the board of control, to which Dr. Lynd then belonged. He testified that he received them on the understanding that they were contributions to his election expenses. Dr. Lynd absolutely denied having received $500 from the Office Specialty Co., and $100 from Anderson Bros., contractors for fire extinguishers. He also refuted having asked A. D. Harris, president of the Ontario Sewer Pipe Co., for money.

Arthur Dinnis corroborated having paid Dr. Lynd $75, saying he did so as a personal gift on the suggestion of Architect E. J. Lennox.

Mr. Harris asserted that Dr. Lynd had not asked him for money, though he had annoyed the latter by a remark taken by Mr. Harris as an insinuation of his having paid money to induce a competitor to withdraw.

The inquiry goes on at 10 o'clock this morning when W. B. Rogers will appear in the stand, as will also Ald. Graham.

CRUSHED UNDER 1,600 POUNDS.

Galt Workman Fatally Injured Under Overturned Machine.

Galt, Jan. 6.—Ernest Nold, an employe of the Galt Art Metal Co., was fatally crushed under a 1,600 pound machine in the factory. He is now in the hospital but cannot recover.

Nold and two other workmen were fixing a heavy die to the new drill press. The machine toppled over. He was caught and crushed to the ground, the whole 1,600 pounds resting on his head, shoulders and body.

His injuries consist of a fracture of the base of the skull, concussion of the brain, and hemmorhage of the brain. He is 25 years old and has lived in Galt two years.

BURNED IN COTTON BIN.

Employe in Knitting Factory Met With a Serious Accident.

Toronto, Jan. 6.—Samuel Gotashemsky, a Russian Jew, employed by the Simpson Knitting Co., was badly burned while working in the factory yesterday morning. He was engaged in the cotton bin, feeding one of the large machines, when something ignited the contents of the bin. In a few moments all the cotton began to blaze. A fellow employe rushed to the aid of the unfortunate man, but before he could be helped out of the burning mass, his head, face, neck, chest and hands were badly burned. He was removed to the General Hospital. He will probably recover.

WHAT SULPHUR DOES.

FOR THE HUMAN BODY IN HEALTH AND DISEASE.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and, mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small, chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver, and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flours of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patients and physicians alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy."

A LUCKY WOMAN.

HOW GOOD HEALTH CAME TO MRS. DESCHESNE AFTER MUCH SUFFERING.

Mrs. Abraham Deschesne, wife of a well known farmer at St. Leon le Grand, Que., considers herself a lucky woman. And she has good cause as the following interview will show: "I was badly run down and very nervous. Each day brought its share of household duties, but I was too weak to perform them. My nerves were in a terrible condition. I could not sleep and the least sound would startle me. I tried several medicines and tonic wines, but none of them helped me. In fact I was continually growing worse, and began to despair of ever being well again. One day a friend called to see me and strongly advised me to try Dr. Williams Pink Pills. I decided to do so, and it was not long before they began to help me. I gained in strength from day to day; my nerves became strong and quiet, and after using about a half dozen boxes of the pills I was fully restored to my old time health and cheerfulness. I now think Dr. Williams Pink Pills an ideal medicine for weak women."

Dr. Williams Pink Pills feed the nerves with new, rich red blood, thus strengthening and soothing them, and curing such nerve troubles as neuralgia, St. Vitus' dance, partial paralysis and locomotor ataxia. These pills cure also all troubles due to poor and watery blood, including the special ailments of women. Get the genuine with the full name, "Dr. Williams Pink Pills for Pale People" on the wrapper around each box. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MAY GO TOO FAR.

Policy of Repression Is Becoming Offensive to the Russians—No Holiday Spirit Now.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 6.—The Russians love nothing so much as their holidays but depressed in spirit and purse in these revolutionary days the celebration of the Russian Christmas, on Sunday next, will be a sad one. The streets of the capital have put on a pitiful semblance of holiday attire, but none of the heavy buying characteristics of the prodigal Russians in former days is in evidence, while in the industrial sections, the workmen, exhausted by a long series of strikes are without money for Christmas trees. The green tree and gewgaws were brought into the city by the country people, but the trees remain unbought in the streets.

May Go Too Far.

There are signs that the policy of repression may be carried to a point which is sure to again arouse the resentment and discontent of the classes which shrank from the violent program of the "Reds" in St. Petersburg. For instance the wholesale perquisitions by the police have been succeeded by a particularly offensive measure of the prefect of police which practically gives the Dvorniks or house porters a free hand to search private lodgings for arms and suspicious persons for documents.

Thirty-five arrests were made last night. Among those taken in custody were four Moscow revolutionists, who came here to consult their comrades in this city. They were captured on their arrival at the railroad station after a desperate struggle with the police.

BRITAIN PROVES ALIBI.

Fleet At Hong Kong When Sea of Japan Was Fought.

London, Jan. 6.—Referring to the statement of Admiral Rojestvensky that the British fleet in far eastern waters intended to crush the Russian fleet in case the Japanese failed to do so at the battle of the Sea of Japan, The Times this morning points out that the British fleet at the time of the battle was at Hong Kong, and that there were only one cruiser and a despatch boat at Wei-Hai-Wei.

EARTHQUAKE AT THE FALLS.

Two Distinct Shocks Said to Have Been Felt In Peninsula.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Jan. 6.—It is believed that the Niagara peninsula was shaken by two earthquake shocks on Wednesday, one at 11.30 a. m., and one at 6.55 p. m.

Both shocks were distinctly felt and remarked by hundreds of persons in this city, but as the country for a long distance round often trembles from heavy blasts at the power development works, little attention was paid to them. Many noticed that the shock was different from that usually made by a blast, and that there was a low rumbling noise like distant thunder at the same moment.

West of the city the shock was more perceptible. Doors and windows rattled, and a person leaning against a wall could feel it shake. At Welland, Port Robinson, Fonthill, and Ridgeville the tremor was very distinct, and caused some alarm.

Every report from the country west of the Niagara River and south of the Queenston Mountain goes to confirm the earthquake theory.

IT'S MURDER NOW.

Green, the Indian, Dead From the Shot Wound—Gangrene Developed.

Brantford, Jan. 6.—Alexander Green, an Indian, who was shot in the shoulder on Christmas by John Hill, another Indian, at the dance at Fairfield Plains near this city, is dead.

The weapon Hill used was a shot gun filled with bird shot. The wound was several inches long. Gangrene developed, causing death.

Bad blood existed between the two men. Coroner Frisette empanneled a jury and will hold an inquest Jan. 12.

The shoulder of the dead man will be cut out to show the jury at the inquest.

Hill now awaits trial on the charge of murder.

BY A TACIT AGREEMENT

Liberal and Irish Leaders Unite to Defeat the Tories.

While Ireland Remains Quiet, Having No Opposition to Nationalists In 78 Constituencies In 102, the Liberals Talk In England—Winston Spencer Churchill Makes An Interesting Pronouncement on the Question.

London, Jan. 6.—Ireland's fate in the present election fight raises an interesting problem. While the Conservatives are doing their utmost to foment feeling in the country against the Liberals on the ground of their home rule tendencies, a tacit agreement, it would seem, has been arrived at between the Liberal and Irish leaders to defeat the tactics of the Conservatives. Ireland itself remains quiescent.

Michael Davitt, speaking at St. Helens last night, said:

"Ireland is in a state of angelic political calm. In no less than 78 out of her 102 constituencies, not a Chamberlainite nor any foeman of labor dare intrude his political nose."

While the Irishmen are thus avoiding any excitement of public feeling the Liberal leaders are speaking also in one voice to the effect that home rule is impossible in the next Parliament, in fact that it is impossible altogether until the country has had an opportunity of giving a special mandate on the question. Mr. Birrell, president of the Board of Education at Bristol, and Winston Spencer Churchill, at Manchester, both last night expressed this view, Mr. Churchill making this interesting pronouncement on the questions: "Time has largely vindicated the views held by Mr. Gladstone in 1886. While there never was a time like the present, when the great mass of opinion is arrayed against anything in the nature of a startling plunge in the Irish policy, there never was a time when a greater number of sensible, patriotic people were prepared to give fair and unprejudiced consideration to Irish affairs, to admit that a wrong system of Government prevails in Ireland, and to approach without passion one of the most difficult but the most attractive of the riddles of British statecraft."

Calls It Dishonest.

T. P. O'Conner, speaking at Liverpool, said that the attempt of the Conservatives to say that the issue before the country was home rule, and not the fiscal question, was contemptible and dishonest.

The persistent abstemption of John Redmond, the leader of the Irish Parliamentary party, from participation in the campaign, is the subject of much comment.

John Morley, Secretary for India, speaking at Arbroath, Scotland, last night, said that personally he believed the only effective method of reform for Ireland would be an elective representative body which would control the Irish affairs under the direction of the Imperial Parliament. However, he stood ready to co-operate in any scheme involving a less radical departure if it could be shown that such a scheme would assure the reforms needed.

David Lloyd-George, president of the Board of Trade, speaking at Croydon last night, quoted from the Board of Trade returns which have not yet been published. He said these returns would show that the exports of manufactured goods by the United Kingdom had increased enormously.

Since 1903, when Joseph Chamberlain said the country was going to the dogs, the increase in manufactured goods exported, had amounted to $175,000,000. Mr. Lloyd-George said the returns would show that the United Kingdom exported more manufactured goods than Germany and the United States together.

Britain In Morocco.

The Standard this morning says it learns that Sir Edward Grey, the Foreign Secretary, has formally announced through diplomatic channels his intention to carry out the policy of his predecessor, Lord Lansdowne, with regard to Morocco. Therefore, the paper adds, the apprehensions entertained abroad concerning the attitude to be assumed by Great Britain under the Liberal Government has been removed with satisfaction to the interests concerned.

AGAIN ADJOURNED.

Libel Proceedings at Calgary Await Arrival of Mr. Whyte.

Calgary, Alta., Jan. 6.—For the third time the attorneys representing J. S. Dennis in the libel proceedings brought against Robert Edwards of The Eye-Opener, asked and secured an adjournment of a week.

The case has now been pending more than a month and the High Court has issued a subpoena for William Whyte, second vice-president of the C. P. R. The case cannot go on until that official comes to Calgary, when the defence has declared its purpose to enquire into the instructions issued by Dennis during the election.

Edwards has absolutely refused to retract.

Petition to Save Patrick.

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 6.—Governor Higgins received yesterday the expected petition for the exercise of executive clemency in the case of Albert T. Patrick, the New York lawyer, confined in Sing Sing Prison, under sentence to die in the week beginning Jan. 22, upon conviction of the murder of the aged millionaire, Wm. Marsh Rice. Governor Higgins said last night that he would consider the petition with the utmost care.

Will Make Statement.

Winnipeg, Jan. 6—Hon. F. W. Haultain promises to make a statement as soon as the full returns from Kinistino and other ridings are received. "Until then there is no need to battle with air," he says.

Found Frozen.

St. John, N. B., Jan. 6.—The body of an unknown man was found frozen in the ice at the rear of Dunn's Pork Factory, Fairville, two miles from this city, yesterday afternoon.

Japanese Catarrh Cure
Cures Catarrh after all else has Failed.

It is remarkable how many times Japanese Catarrh Cure completely cures catarrh after all other treatment was a failure. We have on record hundreds of testimonials from prominent people, telling us of their experience with specialists, tablets, tonics and blood purifiers. They tried everything they ever heard of—spent hundreds of dollars in a vain effort to get relief. But it was not until Japanese Catarrh Cure was used, that they began to mend. Let this experience guide you.

"I had been a great sufferer from Catarrh for over fifteen years, during which time I tried a score of doctors and every remedy I thought would relieve me, but the result was only temporary. About a year ago, I used six boxes of Japanese Catarrh Cure, and since completing this treatment, have been entirely

Bannerman Is Very Bitter.

Uses Very Harsh Terms in Arraigning Balfour.

New Premier's Savage Attack on Late Government Various Policies —" An Expanse of Mismanagement and Legislation Conducted For the Benefit of Privileged Classes, of Wars Abroad," Etc, " Recklessly Pursued."

London, Jan. 8.—The election address of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman is wholly devoted to a severe indictment of the late Government's record and its policy on protection and to referring the electors to his public declaration on assuming office for an opposition of his Government's intended policy.

The Premier declares that the last decade represents a well-nigh unbroken expanse of mismanagement and legislation conducted for the benefit of privileged classes, of wars and adventures abroad hastily embarked upon and recklessly pursued, and that the legacy the Unionists bequeathed to their successors is in the main a legacy of embarrassment, an accumulation of public mischief and confusion absolutely appalling in its extent and ramifications.

He declines to regard Mr. Balfour's free trade tenets as having more than a nominal place in the estimation of the majority of the Unionists, whose fiscal reform policy he holds is fraught with incalculable mischief to the nation and the Empire.

He characterizes protection as immoral and oppressive, based, as he says it must be, on the exploitation of the community in the interest of favored trades and financial groups, and declares the policy of his Government will be to hold fast to the time-honored principles of Liberalism—peace, economy, self-government and civil and religious liberty, and to pursue a substantial continuity of foreign policy without departing from the friendly and unprovocative methods adhered to by previous Liberal administrations.

Appeals to Labor Men.

London, Jan. 8.—(C. A. P.)—Mr. Chamberlain in his speech on Saturday at East Birmingham made a direct appeal to the trades unions to support his fiscal scheme.

GHOULS STEAL 3 BODIES.

Quebec Village Is Excited Over Desecration in a Cemetery.

Montreal, Jan. 8.—A special from Rigaud, Que., says:

Posses of farmers are scouring the country to try and get a trace of three bodies that have been mysteriously stolen from the cemetery here. The bodies were those of Julien Gauthier, which was deposited in the mortuary Saturday week, and of Mesdames Lynch and Elizabeth Rosen, which were deposited there some weeks ago. The discovery of the theft was made when the body of the child of Ferdinand Leger was being deposited there. The three coffins were found empty, and the grave clothes that had enshrouded the bodies were found strewn about.

An attempt was also made to carry off the body of Albini Bertrant, who was killed in Montreal some time ago, but, although the coffin was wrenched open, the ghouls evidently found the body too decomposed to be of any use to them.

The late Julien Gauthier came of one of the best families in the district, and was father-in-law to Abbe Castonguay of the Cedars.

Arrest of the Sharks.

The Star's campaign against the Montreal Canadian Finance Company, has led to the arrest of its manager. What the result will be is in the future.

The Crown Prosecutor, who has been interviewed, is evidently in doubt, as will appear from the tenor of a letter written by him on the subject. It is of interest to the people of both provinces, therefore we copy it. He says in a letter to the Star:

Sir, — In view of the difficulty of securing a uniform usury law, acceptable to the Dominion as a whole, I beg to offer a suggestion which may prove a practicable means of relieving the oppression of the poor, who groan under the grinding avarice, which you have so vividly exposed, and for which you certainly must have universal commendation.

The suggestion would mean an amendment to the Code of Civil Procedure of the Province of Quebec. As the Legislature will sit within the next few weeks, a remedy could be promptly secured for all time to come, and your endeavors for the public good would bring forth immediate results.

The first section of article 612 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads as follows; "Judgments for the payment of a sum of money cannot be executed before the expiry of fifteen days from their date."

This deals with the execution of judgments. I would suggest that the following be added to this article; "In any case, whether ordinary or summary, whenever the presiding judge concludes, whether the same be pleaded or not, that the debt is made up in whole or in part of arrears of interest, or of a bonus, discount, commission, shares in profit, fees for collection or any charges whatsoever, which alone, or together exceed ten per cent. per annum, simple interest of the original amount received by the debtor, in money or in kind, or that the debt carried with it interest exceeding ten per cent. per annum, such judge may fix the delay when execution shall issue, and may decree that the judgments shall be collected in such instalments, and at such periods of time, as he may so decree.

"In every such case, writs of execution and of seizure by garnishment shall only issue, and the judgment shall only be collectable under the provisions of such judgment and not otherwise."

The British North America Act of 1867, from which we have our being as a province, reserves to the Dominion the right to deal with the question of INTEREST.

The usurious contract, therefore must remain until such time as the Dominion Parliament will deal with it.

But the Procedure of our Courts is regulated by the province, and the Legislature may settle the manner how judgments shall be executed.

We can safely trust to the wisdom of our judges to depart from the strict, ordinary rule, when the law shall make of mercy a duty.

The hydra of usury may then live, but its fangs shall be lopped off. Shylock may keep his contract intact, but the blood of the Merchant of Venice shall once more be spared.

Your obedient servant,
EDMUND GUERIN.
Montreal, Dec. 29, 1905.

It will be observed that Mr. Guerin, while pointing out that the question of regulating the rate of interest to be paid, is "reserved to the Dominion," is of opinion that the powers now exercised, under the "Code of Civil Procedure" of Quebec, which provides that money cannot be collected after judgment until fifteen days has elapsed, may be so amended as to prevent the collection of these usurious charges.

This is doubtful. The Confederation Act gives no power to Provincial Legislatures to impose penalties for crimes committed. If the exacting of interest, in the manner exposed by the Star is not a crime, under the law, can a Provincial Legislature make it one and punish the offender, by preventing the collection of his debt? This would clearly be a penalty, and would come only within the powers of the Dominion Government. If this view of the provisions of the Confederation Act be correct, then the power to deal with the skinflints is with the local Legislature and not with the Dominion, therefore take action, and that, too, as soon as Parliament meets.

A Practical Husband.

Surely the Monmouthshire man who caused his wife's wedding ring to be inscribed, "If thee doesn't work, thee shan't eat," was determined that there should be no mistake in what he required in a wife. The only wonder is how any woman could be induced to marry him with such a threat before her eyes. The exact date of this ring is not known, but it is previous to the eighteenth century.

TIMELY TOPICS.

This mild winter seems to slip a cog occasionally.

• • •

The early potatoes must have been nipped last night.

• • •

The man on the next block opines that this is a typical Grit winter, inasmuch as there is so much wind connected with it.

• • •

His Worship Mayor Sulman once more, to-day, gave proof that he is a hustler by making a multitude of good suggestions in his inaugural message, which was presented to the Council to-day. The Mayor, perhaps quite naturally, assumes that, because the Council was re-elected by acclamation, its work was entirely satisfactory and pleasing to the citizens. While taking the liberty to doubt the correctness of this in toto, The Intelligencer must admit that it is a fair assumption.

• • •

The suggestion made by His Worship, that the salaries of civic employees should be readjusted, and no extras subsequently allowed to anyone, is correct in principle, and should be carried out instantly, if not sooner. Let us have no more of these extra grants at the end of the year, which leave a dark brown taste in the mouth.

• • •

Many of the other recommendations made will commend themselves to our readers, particularly, we think, the one suggesting that steps be taken to induce the Post Office authorities to improve conditions at the local post office. The office, as everyone knows, is undermanned, the staff is underpaid, and the public is underserved. Let us hope that the Council may induce the Government to improve matters. Certainly there is plenty of room for improvement.

• • •

To sum up, there are so many valuable suggestions in the Mayor's message that we may well hope that it meets a better fate than many of its predecessors, which, in the past, have been listened to by the aldermen with an air of pleased surprise; then the Chairman of the Executive Committee moves that the message be received and filed; somebody else moves that a vote of thanks be tendered to the Mayor for his lucid and illuminating remarks, and the whole thing drops with a dull thud. Mayor Sulman's very practical and timely suggestions deserve a better fate than to be stowed away in some pigeon-hole. To be sure we may not live long enough to see them all carried out, but then things move swiftly these days. Here's hoping.

• • •

Mr. Eugene O'Keefe, a Toronto brewer, discussing the administration of the license law, says: "The business is respectable, and it must be kept respectable. A man who is seen to take a drink behind his own bar is not fit to keep hotel. He must observe the law, close up tight when the law says he must, and he should lose his license if he sells a drink to a man who is under the influence of liquor." A contemporary says: "If the business was on the plane on which Mr. O'Keefe would place it, there would be fewer demands for local option, reduction of licenses and prohibition. It would be well if those engaged in it could see as clearly as Mr. O'Keefe."

• • •

The Dominion Parliament, says an Ottawa despatch, is not to meet until some time in March next, notwithstanding the pledges given to meet early in the year. This means another hot summer's work.

A New York boy dropped a doughnut with which he was playing, and it exploded and wounded him seriously. That doughnut, however, was not one of the kind that mother used to make, for an anarchist journeyman baker had placed a bomb in it.

Who said the muskrats were building no houses this year? They were putting their double windows on to-day.

Here is a little bit of sound sense from the Philadelphia Record which business men everywhere might well paste in their hats: "A McKeesport, Pa., business men's association has resolved to refrain from advertising in programmes and similar mediums and to abandon the use of handbills, the members agreeing that a $25 fine shall be imposed for every violation of the rule. The programme or handbill is no more a competitor of the newspaper as an advertising medium, than a rowboat is of an ocean greyhound. The cheapest forms of publicity are by no means the most economical."

The death of Seymour E. Gourley, ex-M.P., commonly known as the fighting member from Colchester, N. S., and the fire-eater of the House of Commons, will be learned with general regret. Mr. Gourley was clever but erratic, loyal but somewhat bombastic and though he was ever ready to jerk the tail feathers out of the American eagle, still he was talented, optimistic and popular among a large circle of friends.

• • •

The Railway Record, as quoted by the St. John Sun, says the person responsible for the disappearance or stealing of stamps from the Intercolonial Railway at Moncton is not to be harshly treated. Why? Because he is a party worker. There are the precedents under the present Government for this kind of treatment of evil-doers. The Thessalon postmaster and the Macleod land agent, ventilated at the last session of Parliament, indicate that this grave charge may be true. In both these cases men who should have been dismissed, if not more severely punished, were kept in the public service after they had been guilty of conduct so grossly irregular as to be characterized as criminal. They could get votes for Laurier, though, and they were forgiven and rewarded.

• • •

An evangelistic prize fighter, Robt. Stonewall Allen, a colored evangelist, now 52 years old, who in his younger days was a pugilist of note, again entered the ring at New York and fought a three-round draw with "Black" Griffo. Before the bout started Allen knelt in the middle of the ring and offered up a prayer for the souls of those present. He also prayed for his opponent, and then gave him a sound thrashing, exclaiming, "there is nothing so effective as prayer."

A Western M. P. has announced his intention of having the recent land grant deal fully investigated during the next session of the House. It is estimated that private individuals will make $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 on the transaction. Was Sifton in the deal?

In the investigation which has been going on in Toronto, into the practises of the money sharks, one victim of an exorbitant money lender tells of paying over $600 in three years for the use of $300.

EDITOR'S LIFE SAVED.

As foreshadowed in these columns, the Council to-day made some changes in the chairmanships. However, as everybody has a chairmanship of some kind now, there does not seem to be much room for complaint on the part of any of the City Fathers.

That chap who drives the Tweed stage surely was born lucky, or he might have been the central figure in a funeral to-morrow or the next day.

It looks as though gates should be installed at all railroad crossings, in cities and towns, at all events.

TRAIN STRUCK STAGE; TWO HORSES KILLED

ALMOST A FATAL ACCIDENT TA GRIER ST. CROSSING TO-DAY.

At a few minutes before 12 o'clock this morning a team of horses belonging to Mr. A. Asselstine, of this city, which were attached to the Tweed stage, were killed by being struck by the engine of a passenger train. The accident occurred at the G.T.R. crossing on Grier street. It appears that the driver of the stage was waiting for a westbound freight train to pass, his horses standing on one track while the freight train was on the other. As express came along on the track on which the horses stood, and he was unable to see it. The horses were in the centre of the track when the engine struck them. Both animals were instantly killed and carried some distance along the track. Although the front portion of the stage was carried away the driver miraculously escaped injury. There were no passengers in the conveyance at the time, a fortunate occurrence, probably. The driver was Roland Perry, of Tweed.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"DORA THORNE" TO-MORROW NIGHT.

"Dora Thorne," a dramatized novel of the present season, marks a new departure in melodrama. The story of the play follows the book accurately enough to permit the use of the title, but the playwright has chosen the incidents and happenings with excellent taste, and woven them into a play that is interesting in the extreme. The audience cannot help but engage themselves sympathetically with every turn of the fortunes of "Dora Thorne," a girl whom the English would call "low-born," who won the affection of and married, the duke's son. The resultant plot may be mapped out, but the treatment of her natural girlish exuberence in contrast to the manner aristocratic, must be seen to be appreciated. "Dora Thorne" will be seen at the Carman to-morrow night.

CHURCH CHIMES OF YESTERDAY.

NOTES OF SERVICES IN BELLEVILLE'S DIFFERENT PLACES OF WORSHIP.

St. Thomas'.

The Right Rev. Charles P. Anderson, D.D., Bishop of Chicago, occupied the pulpit of St. Thomas' church in the morning. It being communion service, a large number of the members were in attendance and were pleased at the discourse rendered by Bishop Anderson, who chose for his text the 1st and 2nd verses of the 6th chapter of Hebrews. His Lordship's subject was "The Foundation of the Doctrine of Christ." The sermon was divided into three parts, namely, 1st, repentance and faith; 2nd, baptism and laying on of hands; 3rd, the resurrection and ascension of Christ.

Holloway Street.

In the morning communion service was held, being dispensed by the pastor, Rev. R. H. Leitch, who was assisted by the Rev. A. Martin. In the evening the Rev. A. M. Hubly, Rector of Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church, preached, and his discourse was much appreciated. His text was from Romans, 12th chapter and 1st verse:

"I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."

Emmanuel R. E. Church.

At the above church last night, Rev. R. H. Leitch, pastor of Holloway St. Methodist Church, occupied the pulpit and preached a most helpful and practical sermon, showing that God was always ready to help those who called upon Him in sincerity and truth. The sermon abounded in graphic anecdote and ancient and modern instances, and was intently listened to and much enjoyed. During the offertory the choir sang "Where He Leads Me I Will Follow," in good tune and time.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio., is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

ROD AND GUN.

A Good Sporting Magazine.

The January number of Rod and Gun in Canada, published at Woodstock, Ont., which is just issued, makes a good beginning for the New Year. A fishing yarn, in the form of a serial, by Dr. J. M. Harper, of Quebec, is commenced, and there are a couple of exploring papers, both dealing with the north shore of Lake Huron. The exploits of a sportswoman in New Brunswick are narrated, and extracts are given from the diary of a sportsman who hunted grizzly in British Columbia. The Forest Wealth of Ontario is dwelt upon by Dr. Shaw, and the question of allowing firearms to be carried in game districts in close seasons is discussed. The recent conference in Montreal on the subject of the efficient protection of fish and game in the province of Quebec is dealt with in a special article, and two new departments — one on automobiles and automobiling, and the other on books of particular interest to sportsmen —are added. There are also other items appealing strongly to sportsmen, and the whole number is well illustrated.

SPORTING NOTES.

Talking of the match between Cornwall and Brockville the Times of the latter town says: "Marks received a hard gruelling and presented a battered appearance." The genial "Jack" always had a happy faculty of getting into the thick of the fight.

The match in this city to-night, between Manager Burrows' lads and Port Hope, should be a hummer. The ice will be fast and the Belleville line-up will be the very strongest possible. The locals cannot afford to lose this game, and don't mean to. The referee has not yet arrived, but it is expected that the famous Wagborne, of Toronto, will be the man. Be on hand when the bell rings and cheer the Belleville lads along.

Fifty-one O.H.A. matches are scheduled for this week.

The Wanderers of Montreal beat the Vics 11 to 5 last night. The former team look like Stanley cup possibilities.

"Chaucer" Elliott has signed as catcher with Howard Earl's New York State League ball team for next year.

F. C. Wagborne is booked to referee the Belleville-Port Hope junior game in this city to-night, and Picton-Cobourg game at Picton to-morrow.

One of the most serious accidents ever known in hockey is thus dwelt on by a despatch from Brockville: By this afternoon's train R. Millett, the Cornwall hockey player severely injured in last night's Federal League match, was removed to his home, where it is expected he will receive further hospital treatment. In a mix-up Millett fell, and one of Marks' skates cut his left cheek, and the point going through the nose, came out on the right side just missing the right eye. Between twenty-five and thirty stitches were found necessary. Millett will be disfigured for life, and it will be some time before he will recover from the great loss of blood. He never lost consciousness.

SHE ONLY WRITES.

A woman there was and she wrote for the press
(As you or I might do).
She told how to cut and fit a dress,
And how to stew many a savory mess,
But she never had done it herself, I guess
(Which none of her readers knew).

Oh, the hour we spent and the flour we spent,
And the sugar we wasted like sand,
At behest of a woman who never had cooked
(And now we know that she never could cook)
And did not understand.

A woman there was, and she wrote right fair,
(As you or I might do).
How out of a barrel to make a chair,
To be covered with chintz and stuffed with hair—
'Twould adorn any parlor and give it an air!
(And we thought the tale was true).

Oh, the days we worked and the ways we worked
To hammer and saw and hack
In making a chair in which no one could sit
Without a crick in his back.

A woman there was, and she had her fun
(Better than you and I).
She wrote out recipes, and she never tried one,
She wrote about children — of course she had none—
She told us to do what she never had done
(And never intended to try).

And it isn't to toil and it isn't to spoil
That brims the cup of disgrace—
It's to follow a woman who didn't know beans
(A woman who never had cooked any beans)
But wrote and was paid to fill space.

SALE OF YOUNG GIRLS.

Mrs. Chisholm's Statements Contradicted—Galicians in West Indignant.

The remarks of Mrs. Chisholm of Winnipeg, at the W. C. T. U. convention in Hamilton recently, have created quite a sensation in Manitoba's capital. Mrs. Chisholm is reported to have asserted that young Galician and other slave girls are frequently sold for $25 or $50 to husbands they do not know. Philip Harvey, interpreter of the immigration office at Winnipeg, probably knows more about these people and their customs than any other Canadian in the west. Concerning Mrs. Chisholm's statement Mr. Harvey says: "I think that anyone making such a statement ought to be ashamed of it. How would English people like to have the same said of English girls? It is just as true of the English as it is of the Poles. I know every foreign settlement in the west, and I never heard the suggestion of such a thing."

Father Kulawy, Polish priest, is greatly incensed. He declares it is a crime to give utterance to such statements regarding the Galician people. "It is absolutely untrue; it is a pure invention. The Galician people are known as a most docile race; they are sincerely and deeply attached to their children. During my residence among them I saw daily proof of the devotion of the people to their children, and I never on any occasion heard of anything of this character. I think it necessary that the most positive and direct denial should be made to this statement. It is the invention of someone desiring to create a sensation."

In spite of these denials, however, it is said the W. C. T. U. officials have secured information which fully justifies the remarks of Mrs. Chisholm, and the last of the controversy has not been heard.

Salaried Daughters.

When there is need of her work in the home, and often help has to be hired to take her place, the daughter should be given a regular salary, approximately the equivalent of what she could earn outside after making allowance for board, room rent and the numberless privileges a girl has in her father's house. The salary should be at least equal to what would have to be paid for the same work if a stranger were called in to do it, and the duties should be as distinctly defined and as promptly and efficiently performed. This is a very different thing from an allowance without definite duties.

I know of several families where this plan has worked successfully, says a correspondent. In one instance the daughter, while unmarried, became a capable housekeeper and manager, buying all supplies and relieving both parents of care and annoyance, for which she received a housekeeper's wages at the end of every month. Another, whose mother is an invalid, gets a weekly envelope containing the same amount that would have been paid a nurse. Both these salaried daughters were happy, contented and efficient, and each had a feeling of independence and self-reliance never to be attained under the "allowance" system or the usual haphazard appeal to father for money to gratify needs or whims.

Money In Cheese.

The Township of Finch has the smallest area of any township in the United Counties of Stormont, Dundas, and Glengarry, but it has 18 cheese factories within its boundaries and five factories near the boundary lines in the adjoining townships to which farmers of Finch furnish milk. The dairymen of Finch will be paid (approximately) from $400,000 to $450,000 for their milk as patrons of the aforesaid factories during the season of 1905.

A Brown Bear.

A large brown bear was seen by hunters in the vicinity of Mr. Sam Jamieson's, near Lindsay, last week. Several young pigs have disappeared from farmers throughout that district of late, so the mystery is now practically solved. The hunters tracked him to his retreat, where they found quite a meat store established under the roots of a partly upturned elm tree.

HUNTING DEER IN ENGLAND

Remarkable Instances of Enormous Leaps Taken by Them to Escape From Their Pursuers.

From "The Chase of the Wild Red Deer," by C. P. Collyns:

Instances are not wanting of deer having been dashed to pieces, either by missing their foothold when descending some steep and slippery "coombe," or jumping from the cliffs above the sea on to the rocky shore. Many a good hound, too, has perished in daring the dangerous leap, and in the excitement of the chase the pursuer has shared the fate of the pursued. A sad instance of this occurred in 1858, during the spring hunting. A hind was found (April 21) in Sweet-Tree Wood, under Dunkerry Beacon. The hounds were laid on, and one of the severest chases on record took place. The hind crossed the moor from end to end and took refuge in a small covert known by the name of Whiteabay, where she was fresh found. After taking a turn or two through the wood, which bordered on the sea, the hounds being close to her haunches, she leapt from the cliff (a height of about 396 feet) and was dashed to pieces. Old Warrior, one of the best hounds in the pack, shared her fate.

It is more than probable that, at times when the deer have sprung from the cliffs, they have done so under delusion as to the depth of the fall, caused by partial blindness, the effect of severe exertion. In most cases, however, the animal has, no doubt, taken the fatal leap while under the influence of uncontrollable fear.

On one occasion a stag met his end by leaping from a height on to the rocks, under circumstances which almost justify the belief that he deliberately committed suicide. This occurrence took place when the late Lord Portsmouth (then the Hon. Newton Fellowes) kept the hounds. A stag had been "roused" in the open, and after a magnificent burst, ran towards the sea. Frederick Knight, having viewed the deer at a great distance, standing on the summit of a rock overhanging the channel, stopped the hounds, and the deer was observed, for some considerable time, walking restlessly to and fro on the cliff, as if seeking for a path by which he could reach the sea. Suddenly, however, he was missed, and as he did not reappear, some of the field went forward to the spot, where he was last seen, and leaving their horses on the high ground, repaired to the beach by a rocky path at some little distance. On reaching the shore beneath the cliff, the stag was found a disfigured object, mashed to a jelly, the horns broken to flinders and scattered on the rocks. It would appear that the animal had deliberately leapt from a cliff almost perpendicular on to the rocks that lay some hundreds of feet beneath.

May 4.—The meet was Porlock. Soon found in Park Brake; the hind at once faced the open country, and such was the pace over Exmour, that no horse could live with the hounds; the consequence was, that before any of the sportsmen could catch them, they had killed and eaten their deer. The hounds killed eleven hinds this spring.

Orders were now given to stop the pack, but this could not be accomplished until reaching Hawkridge; and it was full an hour before they could be brought back, during which the stag lay in the River Exe, below Baronsdown, exposed to the gaze of at least a hundred people, on horseback, in carriages, and on foot; the pack were brought back, and the deer broke and ran in view down the valley. It was a complete race to Warebridge; he now crossed the turnpike again for Bury Wood, but was so hard pressed as to leave it directly for the Exe, and now beat down stream, and the pack ran him well to Exebridge; below this he again came to water, and kept the middle of the river at Oakford Weir; the pack faulted on the water; he broke from it for Valdridge plantation; they now fresh found him, and he was soon obliged to retrace his steps again to the Wearpool. Here one of the most picturesque scenes that could be witnessed occurred, viz., the stag, with the pack at his haunches, swimming up and down the deep water for at least half an hour, the banks of the river lined by at least two hundred spectators, whilst Mr. C. H. Gardner of the Green, Dulverton, with Mr. Minchin, Jr., (in a boat kept near the spot by the latter), and rowed up and down in the vain attempt to head rope him; at length, quite exhausted, he was driven under the bank, when a sportsman dismounted, caught him with his whip, dexterously thrown over the horn; the foot-people then plunged in and secured him; an old heavy deer, with nearly three inches of fat on his haunches.

* * *

Oct. 7.—Fixture Cloutsham. Found in Horner the same stag as we had run on the 30th of September. He broke at once on to the common above Stoke Pero Church, where the pack was laid on. He went away at best pace over Porlock and Exford Commons to Larkborough; then over Oare Common to Badgworthy water, where he soiled; skirted Badgworthy Wood and over the moor to Brendon; crossed to Farleigh Combe, beat down to the Lyn, and took soil in the river under Barton. He then crossed over for Countisbury, turned and went down to sea between Countisbury and Glenthorne. Here he took up his position on a rock, from where he was dislodged by the foot people, and went away as if he was going to the open again. He turned, however, to Glenthorne, and took refuge in a small wood just above the beach. Being pressed by the hounds, he leapt on to the beach, and and went to sea, where he was taken, and on being brought to shore was killed.

* * *

Sept. 24.—Met the hounds at Bray Cross; they found in the parish of Charles. Ran down to Newton Bridge, backed it for Bratton Down and on to Westland pound; he now made for Challacombe, but turned for Showlesborough Castle, but had not pluck enough to try Exmoor; he now backed it for Hole Water, and after running the coverts for some time, he was ran into and killed at Brayford after a chose of two hours. This deer ran himself blind.

Wordsworth's "Joke."

A rare old book, called "The Living Authors of England," published in 1849, commences with a study of Wordsworth, in which is recorded what is said to be the only joke the poet ever made. At a friend's house after dinner, it appears, the conversation turned upon wit and humor. Thomas Moore, who was present, told some anecdotes of Sheridan, whereupon Wordsworth observed that he did not consider himself a witty poet. "Indeed," he said, "I do not think I was ever witty but once in my life."

Being pressed to tell the company what this special drollery was, the poet said, with some hesitation: "Well, I will tell you. I was standing some time ago at the entrance of my cottage at Rydal Mount when a man accosted me with the question, 'Pray, sir, have you seen my wife pass by?' whereupon I answered, 'Why, my good friend, I didn't know till this moment that you had a wife!'"

The company stared and upon realising that this was all there was to the poet's joke burst into a roar of laughter, which Wordsworth smilingly accepted as a genuine compliment to the brilliancy of his wit.

He Had References.

In her book "A Southern Girl In '61" Mrs. D. Giraud Wright tells a capital story about General John C. Breckinridge of Kentucky. He was invited by a certain lady of rank in London to luncheon. The lady had just advertised for a footman. Mistaking the hour, General Breckinridge reached the house before the appointed time and by some accident was ushered into Lady Blank's presence without being announced. The day was in June. Owing to the heat the blinds were drawn, letting in subdued light. Lady Blank, glancing at the advancing figure, to the astonishment of the visitor, greeted him thus: "Have you a reference from your last place?" The general took in the situation instantly and, with a twinkle in his eye, unobserved by the hostess, answered respectfully, "Yes, my lady." "What were your duties?" was the next query. "Well, my lady, in the last three places I held I was vice president of the United States, major general in the Confederate army and secretary of war of the Confederate States of America."

Complexion Improvers.

The art of beautifying the complexion is ancient as its chief motive—the desire to obtain the admiration of the opposite sex. The women of gray antiquity knew how to give their cheeks the rosy hue denied by nature.

Betting on a Sure Thing.

A certain captain in Colombo was an inveterate gambler. He had had such bad luck he determined to go home to his friends in Europe. The night before he was to sail he stayed at a friend's house and the next morning at breakfast remarked apropos of nothing, "What a high table this is!"

"Is it?" said his host carelessly.

"Why, it cannot be less than—yes, I should say it was quite thirty inches. Bet you what you like it's thirty inches."

"I thought you had given up betting."

"This is my last bet in Ceylon. Shan't have another chance."

"As you like."

A measure was brought and the height ascertained. It was found to be twenty-nine inches exactly.

"I've lost," said the captain ruefully, "yet I would have sworn it was thirty inches."

"I know you would. Shall I tell you why? When I was shaving this morning my bedroom door was open. I saw your reflection in the glass. You were measuring the height, and, knowing what was to follow, I took the precaution while you were out for a stroll of having an inch sawed off the legs!"

Facts About Cigars.

Few cigar smokers are aware that all cigars are named according to their color and shape. A dead black cigar, for instance, is an "Oscuro," a very dark brown one is a "Colorado Maduro," a dark brown is a "Colorado," a medium brown is a "Colorado Claro," and a yellowish light brown is a "Claro." Most smokers know the names of the shades from "Claro" to "Colorado," and that is as far as most of them need to know. As to the shapes, a "Napoleon," the biggest of all cigars, is seven inches long; a "Perfecto" swells in the middle and tapers down to a very small head at the lighting end; a "Panatela" is a thin, straight up and down cigar without the graceful curve of the "Perfecto;" a "Conchas" is very short and fat, and a "Londres" is shaped like a "Perfecto," except that it does not taper to so small a head at the lighting end. A "Reina Victoria" is a "Londres" that comes packed in a ribbon tied bundle of fifty pieces instead of in the usual four layers of thirteen, twelve, thirteen and twelve.

The World's Highest Monument.

The cornerstone of the Washington monument was laid, on its fine site which overlooks Washington, Georgetown, Arlington and Mount Vernon, by President Polk, July 4, 1848. Its marble shaft rises, in all the dignity of unadorned simplicity, to the height of 555 feet. The base of the shaft is fifty-five feet square, and it gradually tapers, until at the 500 foot point it has diminished to less than thirty-five feet. This monument is said to contain 18,000 blocks of marble, each two feet thick. They were lifted on an elevator run by steam, suspended in an inner framework of iron, which was built up at intervals, thirty or forty feet at a time, in advance of the surrounding masonry. The aluminium capstone, nine inches high, was set in position Dec. 6, 1884, thirty-six years and a half after the cornerstone was laid.

The Derrick.

A derrick is an innocent mechanical apparatus for lifting heavy weights, but it gets its name from an English hangman called Derrick, who flourished many years ago. The people of that time thought that the device used only in the hangman's trade resembled the more common mechanism which now bears his surname. Somewhat similarly, the term ruffian is believed by many to have come from Morocco, where the inhabitants of the Riff country were and are pirates and altogether persons of evil character.

Sydney Smith's Retort.

"We can relish a pleasantry," observed a Scotchman once to Sydney Smith, "as much as our neighbors. You must have seen that the Scotch have a considerable fund of humor."

"Oh, by all means," said Sydney Smith, "you are an immensely funny people, but you need a little operating upon to let the fun out. I know no instrument so effectual for the purpose as the corkscrew."

A Witty Abbot.

Francis I. of France, being desirous to raise a learned man to the highest dignities of the church, asked him if he was of noble descent. "Your majesty," answered the abbot, "there were three brothers in Noah's ark, but I cannot tell positively from which of them I descended." The witty abbot obtained the appointment.

Repartee.

Upon Fenelon telling Richelieu that he had seen the portrait of his eminence at the palace, the cardinal sneeringly asked, "Did you ask it for a subscription for some poor friend of yours?"

"No. The picture was too much like you."

He Didn't Say It.

"There was a queer thing about that reformer's speech the other evening."

"I thought it was a pretty good talk."

"It was. Original too. He didn't once say 'When the people rise in their might.'"

TIMELY TOPICS.

THE JOURNEY OF LIFE.

I know it is early morning,
And hope is calling aloud,
And your heart is afire with Youth's desire
To hurry along with the crowd,
But linger a bit by the roadside,
And lend a hand by the way,
'Tis a curious fact that a generous act
Brings leisure and luck to a day.

I know it is only the noontime—
There is chance enough to be kind;
But the hours run fast when noon has passed,
And the shadows are close behind,
So think while the light is shining,
And act ere the set of the sun,
For the sorriest woe that a soul can know
Is to think what it might have done.

I know it is almost evening,
But the twilight hour is long,
If you listen and heed each cry of need
You can right full many a wrong.
For when we have finished the journey
We will all look back and say:
"On life's long mile there was nothing worth while
But the good we did by the way."

The Novoe Vreyma, one of the most trustworthy journals in St. Petersburg, says General Linevitch had at his disposal when the war ended 12,500 officers, 917,000 men, and 270,000 horses. The whole number taken to Manchuria was 20,000 officers, 1,270,000 men, and 230,000 horses. It thus appears that after allowing for the troops in Manchuria when the war broke out, the Russian losses were 7,500 officers, 433,000 men. The time, trouble, and cost of restoring the survivors to their homes will be an enormous addition to the war expenditure.

"HAVE I TO PAY FOR THIS?"

Question Asked by Toronto Alderman—Kay Co. Sues For Claim.

Toronto, Jan. 8.—The most outstanding feature of the court room Saturday morning at the Civic Investigation was the large pile of account books which decorated the barristers' tables. These books later vanished into Judge Winchester's private room.

The first witness was John B. Kay, of John Kay, Son & Co., Limited. He stated that his firm had a contract for furnishing carpets to the City Hall. He had never been approached by any alderman, controller, mayor or civic official while that contract was pending, nor afterwards. Neither had he approached any one.

Alderman Bought Carpets.

About this time an alderman bought a quantity of carpets from the firm. At no time did this alderman refer to the city contract as a reason why payment should not be pressed. Nor had he (Mr. Kay) told any one that such was the case. The only thing that ever occurred was that this alderman, showing the bill to him, said: "Have I to pay for this?" He had mentioned this fact. The firm had to sue for this account.

YANKEE WARSHIPS AGROUND.

Alabama Also Strikes the Kentucky a Glancing Blow.

New York, Jan. 8.—While the United States battleship squadron under command of Rear Admiral Evans was proceeding to sea yesterday the battleships Kearsarge and Kentucky ran aground in the lower harbor off the west bank light.

The Alabama and Illinois were following next in line and before they could change their course the Alabama collided with the Kentucky, striking her a glancing blow. The Illinois just got clear of the tangle.

At 2.40 o'clock the Kearsage and Kentucky both were floated.

Sawmill Burned.

"TOWERS OF SILENCE."

Parsees Refuse to Abandon Their Funeral Customs—Claim Their System Is Most Sanitary.

Among the Parsees the recent agitation to induce them to dispose of their dead by cremation instead of exposing them to be devoured by vultures on their "towers of silence" has awakened only indignation. They are not prepared to abandon a custom which is hallowed to them by hoary antiquity and associated with their most hallowed religious rites.

Though in European minds the thought of allowing feathered scavengers to feast on the bodies of their beloved dead would excite the deepest feelings of repugnance and disgust, as practiced by the Parsees this method of getting rid of the fleshly tenement is far from being so horrible as is generally imagined. Indeed, to the Parsees themselves—and they are the most cultivated and intelligent of all the sects found in India—it seems far preferable to burying the dead as practiced by Christians.

"Your people," said a Parsee to me, "put your dead underground, where they provide a banquet for worms. We put ours above ground, where their flesh is eaten by vultures. The ultimate result is the same. The bones alone are left. But there is a great difference in what takes place before the skeleton stage is reached, and that difference is all in favor of our method. Before consigning the bodies of your dead to the earth you inclose them in coffins. You dare not allow your imaginations to picture the horrible changes that there take place before nature recovers what she gave. We do not seek to retard the process. The vultures do their work expeditiously. There is no putrefaction. Christian burial grounds, so I have read, are often sources of disease. Parsee dokhmas, or 'towers of silence' as you poetically call them, are never such. From a sanitary point of view they are incomparably superior to your cemeteries, and with us they are equally sacred."

"But," I suggested, "fire would do the work even better than vultures."

"Or worms," said my Parsee friend. "When you Christians take to cremation we Parsees may possibly follow your excellent example. There are far weightier reasons why cremation should take the place of burial than can be urged in favor of its substitution for our towers of silence."

The towers of silence crown the summit of Malabar hill, near Bombay, and are situated in the midst of a beautiful garden whose tropical trees swarm with vultures. They are built of stone and are about twenty-five feet high. A small door is provided for the entrance of the body. When a Parsee dies, after the performance of solemn and imposing funeral rites, the body is borne upon an iron bier to the towers, followed by a procession of relatives and friends of the dead headed by a number of priests. Upon arrival at the gardens the bier is laid down and prayers are said at the "sagri," or house of prayer, near the entrance to the garden. The attendants then carry the body to the towers of silence, lay it on its stony bed and retire. Then the vultures gather about it and do their grewsome work unseen. The bones are soon denuded of flesh and fall through an iron grating into a pit beneath, from which they are afterwards removed by a subterranean cavern.

Death Anniversary Observed.

On the third day after the death friends and relatives again assemble at the house where the dead man lived, and thence proceed to the "temple of fire." Standing before the urns in which the "celestial fires" are kept burning, priests recite prayers for the soul of the departed. His son, or adopted son, kneels before the high priest and promises due performance of all religious rites and obsequies to the dead. Friends and relatives then hand the priest a list of contributions to various charities which have been subscribed as a memorial offering. This concluded the ceremony or "rising from mourning," or the "resurrection of the dead." On each recurring anniversary of the death of a Parsee memorial funeral ceremonies are performed. In an iron framework erected in the house shrubs and flowers are cultivated, thus literally keeping the memory of the dead man green. Before these iron frames prayers are said two or three times a day.

The Parsees are a small set. They number altogether about 82,000, of whom 72,000 live in or near Bombay. Most of the remaining 10,000 are found in Persia. As a people they are remarkably intelligent and trustworthy, with a genius for business which fairly rivals that of the Jews. They are highly prosperous, much given to charity and beggars are unknown among them.

Ivory.

Ivory is, strictly speaking, obtained only from the tusks of the elephant, the finest of which comes from the east coast of Africa. This hard, heavy, fine-grained green, or Guinea, ivory is esteemed for its transparency, and because its light yellow or pale blue tint, unlike the whiteness of other kinds, which becomes yellow, bleaches with age. The different species of African elephant supply almost all the ivory used in Europe. Its quantity is enormous. The British importation in 1900 was 1,175,000 pounds, which represents sixty thousand tusks. One London firm sells ten thousand tusks yearly in billiard balls. Under so heavy a strain the supply must fail, but to fall back upon are remarkable deposits of mammoth tusks which have accumulated on the rivers discharging into the Atlantic Ocean.

Not a Matchmaker.

Cardinal Manning used to tell the following story of his friend, Bishop Bramstone, who seems to have been a wit as well as an eminent ecclesiastic:

One day a member of his flock approached him—whether in earnest or not does not appear — with the remark that he wanted a wife, and he added the usual modest conditions that she must be young, rich and pretty.

The bishop answered him upon the instant.

"You are mistaken," said he. "My name is Bramstone, not Brimstone. I do not make matches."

STORY OF THE Y.M.C.A.

TREMENDOUS RELIGIOUS FORCE UNWITTINGLY SET IN MOTION.

Sir George Williams, Its Founder, Will Rank in History With Such Men as Dr. Barnardo and General Booth—The First Young Men's Christian Association and How It Came About—The First Canadian Branch.

Sir George Williams, founder of the Young Men's Christian Association, will take rank in history with such men as Robert Raikes, Dr. Barnardo, and General Booth. His influence has hardly been less than that of any of the great men with whom we associate him. Like them, he set in motion a tremendous force unwittingly; and, like them, he has lived to see some phases of modern religious and social life transformed through his agency. That his death should occur within a few days of the second Sunday in November, known in the calendars of many churches as "Y. M. C. A. Sunday," is a coincidence that tends to fix the event upon the mind, and enhances interest in his remarkable work.

The First Y. M. C. A.

George Williams was born in 1821, in Ashbury Farmhouse, near Dulverton, in the south of England, and when a mere boy went to London to seek his fortune. He became a clerk in a large dry goods store that employed no fewer than 80 youths. Always deeply religious, the common relations of the young men about town were a constant source of pain to young Williams. He resolved to devise some means of gathering them together for social and religious purposes. It was in June, 1844, that he put his plan in operation, and at the first meeting the clerks in his firm were present to a man. Thereafter they gathered at regular intervals for the purposes of religious discussion and Bible research. The movement was heartily encouraged by the large employers, and soon in a dozen firms there were little bands of students organized by young Williams. The name that the association now bears was suggested by his room-mate, Christopher Smith, and, in the early days, the deeply religious character of the founders was stamped upon all the proceedings. Had it not found other spheres of activity save Bible reading, the probability is that the initials Y. M. C. A. would not now be as familiar as C. P. R., P. and O., and D. V.

Other Associations.

To prove this contention, it is only necessary to show that there were plenty of young men's Christian associations long before Williams was born, not one of which actively survived very long. As early as 1632 there were bands of religiously disposed young men meeting in many parts of England, and in 1663 the English Church established an association of the kind, while later on the Wesleys were much interested in the work. In 1710 Cotton Mather, the famous Boston preacher, wrote a series of addresses to "young men associated," and in 1838 David Nasmith, the founder of the London City Mission, had established no fewer than 70 clubs of young Christians in England and the United States and on the Continent of Europe. It must be deemed fortunate that, although at the beginning Williams had in view nothing but a wholly religious organization, the movement broadened rapidly, until it has evolved into the religious, educational, social, and athletic association it is to-day.

The First Canadian Branch.

The change and extension was natural—indeed, inevitable. The enthusiasm of the young men impelled them almost immediately toward practical, lend-a-hand mission work; and at once the necessity for a headquarters became apparent. The reading-room and library followed swiftly, and then by natural growth came all the other features which the young men of to-day associate with the organization. By 1848 there had been considerable developments. Three years later the movement had spread to America, and the first Y. M. C. A. on this side of the Atlantic was founded in Montreal. A month later Boston formed a branch, and New York followed. In 1854 the first convention was held in Paris, and was attended by delegates from all over the world. There were then 30,360 members, of whom nearly one-half were in the United States and in Canada, one-quarter in England, and the remaining quarter in European countries.

In the American War.

The movement throve exceedingly on the American Continent, and the great Civil War pointed out a new work for it. From beginning to end no fewer than 5,000 young men were sent to the front as missionaries and nurses; and they distributed to the soldiers of both sides supplies and medicine valued at $6,000,000. Unfortunately, although this brilliant record was made, hundreds of branches did not survive the struggle, and the years immediately following witnessed a decided reaction on the Continent of America, so far as the Y. M. C. A. was concerned. In 1878, however, there was a revival of enthusiasm, and a world's committee was formed, composed of paid officers, who resided at Geneva, Switzerland, and in a general way supervised the work of branches in all countries. At this time the association declared its purpose to "seek to unite those young men who, regarding Jesus Christ as their God and Saviour according to the Holy Scriptures, desire to be His disciples in their doctrine and in their life, and to associate their efforts for the extension of His Kingdom among young men." Compare this with the present definition and one gains a striking idea of the evolution of the society: "An organization of young men for mutual helpfulness, providing for the young men of the community an attractive place of social enjoyment, free from questionable influences, and equipped with helpful agencies for their intellectual, social, physical, and spiritual welfare."

Later Developments.

At present the educational and physical aims of the Y. M. C. A. are the most in evidence; and a prospective member is no longer subjected to a catechism upon his religious convictions. There has been a marked extension of the work in universities, probably more noticeable in America than in England. The Y. M. C. A. is also as much a part of any military camp as the Red Cross, and in this way the seed has been sown in distant lands. But perhaps the most marked development of recent years is the railroad Y. M. C. A., and it is the ambition of most American railroads to have in every town a branch of the association that will devote itself to their employes. In this way large endowments of land and money have been secured from railway companies. Perhaps no greater compliment to this great organization could be paid than to say that it has successfully and helpfully adapted itself to all the great tendencies of half a century, and that its vitality seems now greater than ever.

ENGLAND'S PERIL.

Alarming Increase in Deaths From Nervous Diseases Is Noted.

It has been noticeable lately that there has been a remarkable increase in deaths from nervous complaints, and a doctor writing to the London papers attributes the increase in the people suffering from nervous disorders to the increase of popular tea shops, and advises drinking China tea as less deleterious than Indian and Ceylon blends.

Another doctor asks, what of persons addicted to the coffee habit? He declares there is no brand of coffee they can drink to any considerable extent without suffering from the same distressing consequences as afflict the injudicious users of tea.

Still another medical man, who makes a specialty of dietetics, states that as many men are addicted to excessive indulgence in coffee as there are immoderate tea drinkers among women. He writes:

"Thousands of men, particularly in the city, sip coffee during the day at brief intervals as their brethren in New York sip spirits. In time the coffee habit develops palpitation of the heart, irregular pulse, nervousness, indigestion, and insomnia.

Many Are Coffee Drunkards.

"Coffee drunkards, as I may call them, are greatly increasing in number, due probably to the wave of temperance which is passing over the country, but I've known cases where hallucinations scarcely different from those of alcoholism have been set up by persistent abuse of coffee over a series of months.

"Coffee is a cerebral stimulant ranking with alcohol, but used in moderation is less harmful than tea, as it contains less tannic acid. The use of coffee after dinner, especially the practice of drinking a cup at night, solely is responsible for cases of sleeplessness."

Another writer recommends dyspeptic and nervous persons to drink the yerba mate tea of Paraguay, which is used universally in South America, but yerba mate, says a Mincing Lane merchant, is used more as a drug than as a beverage in England. Little of it comes on the market, and as the drinker would require to have it specially sent over he would probably find it cheaper to eschew tea altogether.

An African Monarch.

The King of Uganda, in British East Africa, rejoices or grieves in the somewhat picklish and chow-chowy name of Daudi Chua. This august sovereign—may his tribe increase!—is now "going on" eight. To befit a colored sceptre-bearer he has a highly-colored court. He sits on a throne of scarlet, and probably the court carpenters have made it a world too long for his chubby little legs. Under the British protectorate folks have to be economical in Uganda, and a king must grow up to his throne, and can't have a custom-made one every time he has growing pains. We can remember when a king of Uganda was every inch a king, no matter how few his inches. So sacred, so supra purple was he that the remains of his food had to be buried lest its sacredness strike dead some unhappy subject. The British have changed all that. Daudi—we wish we had a photograph of him—Daudi sits on his scarlet throne, a leopard skin under his bare feet, a toy gun in his little hands. Probably not a bit more absurd and many times more "sympathetic" in the eyes of the heavenly powers than many a wide ruling czar or kaiser that has been or shall be.

Most Sacred In Knighthood.

The most noble order of the Garter, an insignia rich in tradition, is to be conferred upon the Emperor of Japan. It is the most sacred of British orders of knighthood, the second in point of antiquity being the order of the Bath. With the advent of King Edward the order was limited to those who had earned distinction by charity and patriotism.

The legend which seeks to account for the emblem and motto of the order is as pretty as those of King Alfred and the cakes. The Countes of Salisbury dropped her garter when dancing with the King. The latter picked it up and tied it round his leg. Observing the surprised look of the countess he handed it back with the words:

"Evil be to him who evil thinks."

This motto had reference to a second campaign against the French, upon which the King was entering. Hence it comes that the color of the emblem was blue. The insignia consist of the garter, surcoat, hood, collar, and star.

General Saved Soldier's Life.

The late Gen. Blackmar was once taken in amusingly by a stranger who had claimed his acquaintance at camp. The general disregarded the shabby man's salute and turned away from him. The man persisted. "General, don't you remember how you saved my life at the battle of the Wilderness?" Gen. Blackmar at once became interested, and called some of his friends to meet the soldier, saying: "I saved this man's life once. Tell them how I did it, old comrade." The man began: "It was this way. We were on a hill, and the enemy advanced steadily toward our entrenchments. A hail of fire swept our position. Suddenly you turned"—everybody looked at Gen. Blackmar—"and ran, and I ran after you. If you hadn't done so, I should have been killed; so that's how you saved my life." And the rascal made himself scarce before the infuriated general could touch him.

MY SHADOW.

I have a little shadow that goes in and out with me,
And what can be the use of him is more than I can see.
He is very, very like me from the heels up to the head,
And I see him jump before me when I jump into my bed.

The funniest thing about him is the way he likes to grow—
Not at all like proper children, which is always very slow,
For he sometimes shoots up taller, like an India rubber ball,
And he sometimes gets so little that there's none of him at all.

He hasn't got a notion of how children ought to play
And can only make a fool of me in every sort of way.
He stays so close beside me he's a coward, you can see;
I'd think it shame to stick to nursie as that shadow sticks to me.

One morning very early, before the sun was up,
I rose and found the shining dew on every buttercup,
But my lazy little shadow, like an arrant sleepyhead,
Had stayed at home behind me and was fast asleep in bed.

—Robert Louis Stevenson.

TIGER HUNTING TO-DAY.

One Must Be Royalty's Guest to Do It Right.

Tiger-hunting in India can be made most luxurious if the hunter has the proper acquaintance. An Englishman describes his experiences:—"Generally speaking, the tiger is now as much preserved in India as the red deer is in Scotland. The maharajah, or nizam, who is still lucky enough to have tigers in his dominions knows full well how keen any visitor is to kill one, and to this end is zealous in their protection. It therefore follows that unless you can get an invitation to the preserve of one of these potentates you are not likely to get a shot at a tiger while in India. It so happened that in March, 1905, my friend and myself were lucky enough to be given a beat in Hyderabad (Deccan). The word 'beat' is, perhaps, misleading, when the district in which we were allowed to shoot was something between 1,000 and 2,000 square miles in area.

"Being the guests of the nizam, we found all arrangements made in that luxurious style so peculiar to the Oriental. Our camp was pitched some fourteen miles from the railway station. Here we found a large bell tent each, a tent for messing in, numerous servants, cooks, waiters and coolies to clean up the camp, besides a police guard and a guard of honor provided by the local cavalry, to turn out and present arms whenever any of us showed our noses. The heat is very great, but, our camp being pitched beneath some tamarind trees, we were always able to find some shade, and with every imaginable kind of drink, and a daily supply of ice, we grew to enjoy rather than to dislike it.

"In these parts the usual method employed to locate tigers is to tie up young bulls overnight in the jungle; and they are visited next morning by one of the local shikaris (hunters), who, if he finds a beast killed, reports at once to headquarters. Should the tiger visit any one beast, it will probably be in the very early hours of the morning. Having killed it (usually by springing on the throat), the tiger will drag away the carcass to some thicker part of the jungle, where it will partially devour it, and, having eaten what it wants, lie down near it and sleep, as it were with one eye open, lest any other beast should wish to snatch a meal.

"At about 7 in the morning the local shikari comes along. He notes in which direction the bull's carcass has been dragged and studies life in the jungle near, to see what he can learn. The vultures, if the jungle is not too thick, will have seen the prospect of a meal, and will now be sitting in the trees over the remains if the tiger is still by, for they will not venture near till they can get undisputed possession. The monkeys, too, will show signs of uneasiness, and keep chattering in the trees, and the birds will also testify to the tiger's presence by anxious twitterings. The shikari reports his findings and the beat begins.

"To us the number of natives seemed enormous and on several occasions upward of 200 were employed. Their remuneration is, however, very small, two annas (four cents) being the daily wage, with, usually, double pay should a tiger be killed. They always seemed quite contented and trudged along through the jungle with nothing on but a loin cloth, even in the heat of the day. They took no food, but nearly all of them carried hollowed-out gourds, in which they keep a supply of water."

One Fifty-Millionth of An Inch.

In recent science nothing is more remarkable than the refinement which has been made in instrumental measurements. Dr. P. E. Shaw recently explained to the Royal Society on electrical micrometer which, it is stated, can be made to measure the two-millionth of a millimeter, or the fifty-millionth of an inch. This measurement, the smallest ever yet made, was in connection with the movements of a telephone diaphragm. The problem was to find what movement of the diaphragm produces a sound which is only just audible. The measurement was effected by means of an electric current connected with the micrometer and telephone.—London Standard.

Oil on the Waters.

Instructions are given by the British Admiralty Office regarding the manner in which oil should be poured on "troubled waters." It is recommended that the oil be dropped overboard in small perforated canvas bags capable of holding from one to two gallons, each bag depending from a line whose position differs according to the nature of the sea and direction of the wind. Running before the wind one hangs out the oil bags from either bow. Crossing a bar with a flood tide the oil is sent on ahead. For boarding a wreck oil is thrown to windward of her. Waste from the engines seems to be the best oil, though all animal and vegetable oils will serve.

GRETNA GREEN.

Boom Hits the Border Village and Romance Has Come Vigorously to Life Again.

Gretna Green, the little Scotch village just across the border from Cumberland, is witnessing a revival of the weddings which made it famous in the romantic days of yore. One Peter Dixon, a carpenter, is playing the role of the blacksmith of tradition, and so well does it pay him that he has abandoned his trade to devote himself exclusively to the tying of nuptial knots for couples who are in a hurry to get "spliced."

Dixon is a good type of the canny Scot, of middle age, with shrewd eyes, iron gray hair, and a mouth screened by a full beard that can well keep it owner's own counsel. He was not at all adverse to drinking at a stranger's expense, but not even Scotch whiskey, that most potent encourager of loquacity, could induce him to be communicative about his singular occupation.

"I don't want anything published about my business," he said.

"But publicity would increase your—your business."

"It might," he admitted, "but it might also increase competition, and I don't want any other folk getting up in the same line here. There ain't any more in it than just keeps me going comfortably, and as I started it I think I'm entitled to all there is in it."

"Are you a minister?" he was asked.

"No, I ain't," he answered. "You don't have to be a parson to marry folk in Scotland. I can tie 'em together just as hard and fast as any minister in the land. If you are thinking of getting married, young man, just fetch along the girl and I'll do the job for you. You'll find it'll cost you a lot more than I charge you to get it undone."

Under Scotch law a marriage can be celebrated anywhere and at any hour of the day or night, for the ceremony in its simplest form consists merely in a couple agreeing before witnesses to take each other for husband and wife. One of the contracting parties is required to have resided in Scotland for twenty-one days before the marriage, but it is doubtful if steps are taken to compel proof of that, though the enactment was specially aimed at the runaway Gretna Green matches.

Most of the modern Gretna Green weddings take place at Dixon's own house, a small tenement in the main street of the village, but those who want a little more style have the ceremony performed at the Queen's Head Hotel. Dixon keeps a marriage register, which he declines to show to any one. Nor will he tell what his fees are. He is not giving away any one of the secrets of his "business."

It is just about half a century since the little Dumfries village of Gretna Green fell back into the native obscurity out of which a most singular fortune had temporarily lifted it and from which it is now again emerging. Ever since the reformation had repudiated the Council of Trent and most of its doings, English practices in the matter of marriages had been growing more and more lax and irregular. To put an end to the scandal the marriage act of 1754 was passed. It required all persons except Jews and Quakers to get married—if at all—in a Church of England and according to Church of England ritual. A great many people resented the new law, and as it did not apply to Scotland the most obvious way to escape it was to flit across the border. When the names of great lords and ladies began to be mixed up with such romances, weddings at Gretna Green began to be almost as fashionable as are now those at St. George's, Hanover Square. Fifty such marriages in the course of a month were by no means unusual at one time.

The little Dumfries village to which these infatuated folk made a dash, some of them with indignant parents and guardians at their heels, is a dull little place at the head of the Solway Firth, about ten miles northwest of Carlisle. In its palmy days of romance panting young couples sped furiously along the road through the fir plantations and over the dreary "debatable land" of bog and peat. The beginning of the end of the journey was the bridge over the broad English Esk, then came two level miles over the debatable land and finally the actual Scotch and English boundary, the little stone bridge over the Sark, beyond which lay the happy hereafter.

Until 1826 these marriages were mostly conducted at the little bridge toll house. Who first officiated seems to be quite doubtful, and the only reason for supposing that a blacksmith had anything to do with it is the existence of the tradition itself.

Reflected Glory.

A gentleman sojourning in Edinburgh many years ago, having heard much of the eloquence of the members of the General Assembly, paid an early visit to it. Next to him sat an elderly, hard-featured, solemn-faced man, who was leaning with both hands on a heavy stick, which he eyed with great concentration. Soon the stranger's attention was riveted upon the speaker who had opened the day's discourse. The wonderful command of language he possessed, combined with his eloquence, excited the listener's curiosity. "Can you tell me who is speaking now?" he asked eagerly, turning to the sober-faced old man beside him. "Who's speaking now?' echoed the old man, lifting his eyes from the contemplation of the stick to fix them in contemptuous amazement upon his interlocuter. "That, sir, is the great Doctber Chawmers, and I'm holdin' his stick."

An Old Roman Altar.

A perfectly preserved Roman altar, four feet in height and of square formation, has been discovered at the site of an ancient Roman camp at Newstead, near Melrose, England. An inscription upon it in accurately chiseled Roman letters reads, "To the great and mighty Jupiter, Carolus, centurion of the twentieth legion, the valiant and victorious, cheerfully, willingly and deservedly paid his vow."

Mammoth English Bonfire.

The fire in the pile of 10,000 tons of stored coal which broke out some weeks ago at the Earlseat colliery, in Fife, is still blazing, says The London Chronicle. At night the sight is a magnificent spectacle. The fire will continue for another two months.

THE FOUR ELEMENTS.

Marcus Reed Sums Up the Conditions as Now Known.

I.—FIRE.

The discovery of Radium and of its change into Helium has now placed it practically beyond doubt that the old idea of immutable elements, originally differentiated, was as much a mistake as that which made a difference between the Vegetable and Animal Kingdoms. The whole creation is one uninterrupted whole, and the old classification of its component parts will be used in these short papers as a convenience without strictly defined limits. The conception of the unity of creation was not unknown to the ancients, but only in our days has it been actually proved to be the case.

For convenience, therefore, we still speak of the Four Elements as dividing amongst them what we know of matter, but it was always incorrect to include Fire in the number; the other three may be said to exist by themselves, but fire is only the result of circumstances, fortuitous or otherwise. We do not know, for instance, that it exists as an ever present element, so called, even in the Sun. Day by day we learn more of the mystery of nature, but what the sun actually is remains a mystery still. The earth was once a part of its glowing mass, and is now a globe of actual fire with a thin crust of habitable earth; but in what condition the great original mass of nebular matter composing the sun now exists we do not know. We are told it may be either hot or cold, burning like a raging furnace or emitting rays as cold as those of Radium, which is now supposed to have some affinity with the rays of the sun.

What we know for certain is the rather upsetting fact that the nearer we approach it the colder we get. In the winter we are actually millions of miles nearer to the sun than in the summer. The tops of high mountains are covered in eternal snow, and a little further, when our atmosphere ceases, the interstellar cold is greater than anything we experience on earth. When it is remembered that those interstellar spaces are filled with the sun's rays without interruption of clouds, day and night without ceasing, we begin to see that the heat of the sun depends on circumstances, on chemical changes or combinations of matter in its most subtle forms, and does not actually indicate the presence of fire as we understand it on earth.

The Sun, or Fire, worshippers, wise in their generation, did not stop to inquire into all these nice distinctions, and worshipped the blazing mystery when it rose above their horizon as the most sublime revelation of superhuman might and majesty vouchsafed to mortals here below. This natural religion never disappeared altogether; the Parsees are still fire-worshippers as their ancestors, the Guebres, were. Later on in the history of the human race, Jupiter was only a name or impersonation of the sun, and later still the position and arrangement of the gigantic stones on Salisbury Plain indicate a probable chief temple of fire-worship in this country itself. What is more, traces of this primitive religion are not entirely extinct in Great Britain to-day.

The English feast of Beltein, originally held in honor of the god Bel or Baal, is nearly forgotten, but we read in Notes and Queries that as late as 1853 a ram was annually sacrificed on May morning in a field kept for that purpose on Dartmoor. "That time, the place (looking East), the mystic Menhir or pillar to which the ram was fastened, surely bear evidences in favour of the Ram Feast being a sacrifice to Baal." The young men and maids of the village of Holne, when they presented each other with a slice of the meat, surely did not know what heathens they were! They would have been properly shocked to learn that one of themselves would have been sacrificed in lieu of the ram in the good old time when the feast originated. Our festivals of Yule, of Candlemass, Lammas, Allhallow-E'en are all so many remnants of the fire-worship once general in Northern Europe as well as in Carthage and India.

Before the days of matches or tinder-boxes, when fires had to be kindled by friction, a feat distinctly more difficult than it is generally supposed to be, the smallest particle of fire was held sacred, and the most singular superstitions attached to this so-called element. The domestic hearth was considered to be part of the family as a living thing; strangers might borrow some of its fire when their own went out, but relatives of the family were not allowed to do so, a breach of this unwritten law being considered equal to incest, while for the same reason the adding of strange fire to the hearth was tantamount to adulterating it or soiling its purity.

The fire so sedulously guarded by the Vestal virgins was believed to be the goddess Vesta herself; this divinity had, therefore, no image of herself in her temples. In Egypt, in Rome, and in Persia public fires were kept in public buildings, and when Augustus assumed supreme power he transported the public fire, as its supreme guardian, to his own place, which, by that fact, became public property.

If the great fault of the present age is believing too little, that of the ancients was believing too much. Without a shadow of proof they were quite positive that the four elements were peopled by beings called Element Spirits, peculiar to each; Fire being ruled in some obscure way by Salamanders, Air by Sylphs, Earth by Gnomes, and Water by Undines. We see some of these singular spirits in our Christmas pantomines, and we know that salamanders are far from fireproof. Pliny records having tried the experiment with a visible salamander, with the result that the poor newt was reduced to powder. As a sensible man this was enough for Pliny, but his contemporaries piously stuck to their faith in the incombustible creature whose name still has a weird and fearful sound for us.

Many ancient applications of fire are now out of fashion. Not much can be said for its use as medicament, nor ordeals by fire or baptism by fire. This last is not a figure of speech, but was, in the middle ages an actual baptism chosen by those who feared a fiery penance in the next world, and preferred to submit to it here below and have done with it.

"EAST LYNNE" VILLAGE

ENGLISH PARISH GOES TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER.

Scene of Mrs. Henry Wood's Novel Is Being Sold—Village, Manor Farms, Pasture Lands and All — Obscure But Very Ancient Worchestershire Village Is "East Lynne" Which Figures Under the Name of Abberton.

East Lynne, that is to say the village which, under that name, is the scene of Mrs. Henry Wood's novel, "East Lynne," is being sold. The whole village is to go to the highest bidder and whoever buys in the estate will find himself possessor of an English parish complete. There is the village, manor farms, pasture lands and orchards.

On the map of England, East Lynne figures as an obscure but very ancient Worchestershire village under the name Abberton. It is Abberton, however, which contains the hall in which Lady Isabel had her youthful home, where she returned as the bride of Archibald Carlyle, whom she quitted in a fit of pique, only to return again, disguised as Madame Vine, to nurse her sick child and then to pass away after having confessed her folly and received her husband's forgiveness.

Few popular novels, perhaps, have contained more glaring literary faults than "East Lynne," but few have ever equaled it in popularity. Mrs. Henry Wood wrote "East Lynne" in 1861, when it first appeared in "Colburn's New Monthly." As soon as it was completed, it was issued in book form. It went through edition after edition in Great Britain, was pirated vigorously in America and translated into every known language, including Parsee and Hindustani. One of the librarians in Madrid, years after, told the author's son that the most popular book on the shelves was "East Lynne." For forty years it has, as a play, had a successful run on the stage. Numerous versions of it were produced between 1861 and 1890, but from none of them did the author profit a cent. "East Lynne" has made more than $1,000,00 for others, and only fame for its author.

The story is, from the modern point of view, defective in almost everything which makes a novel a work of art; but it cannot be said to lack incident or interest. Half of its popularity at the time of its publication was undoubtedly due to the reaction then setting in against inane and impossible goodness. It was a protest against the conventional hero, and on the stage it was one of the earliest of modern "problem" plays, before "problem" plays were recognized and labelled. It requires great good will to the author to believe that the heroine could return to her husband's house and remain there without the husband seeing though the transparent disguise of a pair of blue goggles. Modern criticism is apt to characterize Lady Isabel as a very silly woman and her husband as a very dense specimen of manhood.

While Mrs. Henry Wood was not skilful in character drawing, she is said to have had in mind a former owner of Abberton Hall when she drew Mr. Carlyle. This gentleman restored the old church and was generally admired in the neighborhood for his uniform kindness and generosity.

Abberton is the modern spelling of the Ebriton of the Domesday Book, and it goes back to Saxon times, when its owners were the abbots of Pershore. In the reign of Edward I., the name was changed to Albreton, and in 1524 all the manorial rights and patronage of the parish were granted to Thomas and Francis Sheldon by Henry VIII. Until late in the eighteenth century the Sheldons held the manor, but then the estate passed into the hands of F. Laslet, who represented the borough of Worcester in Parliament for some years.

The parish church of Abberton possesses many points of great historic interest. It is believed to have been a chapelry as early as the twelfth century and is dedicated to St. Edburga, the saintly daughter of the Saxon King, Edward the Elder. From early childhood Edburga manifested deep religious feelings, and these culminated in her assuming the veil of a nun in later years. It is told of her that when one day her kingly father offered her glittering jewels and gold in one hand and a book of the Gospels and a chalice in the other, she chose the latter. It was inevitable that such a pious woman should have miracles associated with her name, and many are reported to have been wrought in remote times around her shrine at Pershore.

The present church building is not the one in which Edburga worshipped. There have been two restorations, but some portions of the windows of the old church still remain, and there is a Norman font which is well preserved, although credibly reported to be 800 years old.

There are many magnificent tombs of the Sheldon family, both at Abberton Church and at Beoly. Those at Abberton date from 1659 and are under the western tower of the church. The register of the church is also full of curious antiquarian interest, for it goes back to 1661 and has been carefully kept by a succession of rectors.

The manor hall of Abberton is situated within easy distance of Birmingham, and the grounds march on the south side with the estate of the Duke of Orleans. It stands on an eminence surrounded by fine forest trees and commanding views of the Malvern Hills, the Lench Woods, the fertile and charming Vale of Evesham, and the Cotswold Hills. The hall is a commodious building, and the most interesting relic of its early days is a stone and brick Elizabethan chimney with the date 1619 carved on it.

Flevel Manor, which is also situated in the parish, was once the property of Guy de Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, who, however, lost it in one of the social and political upheavals of his time. At the dissolution of the monasteries all the lands fell into the hands of Henry VIII., who parted with them to the Sheldons, and it was in this way that that old family came into possession of the entire parish.

THE SWINBURNES.

Family One of England's Oldest—Settled Before Norman Conquest.

Sir John Swinburne, whose impending marriage to Miss Florence Moffat at Windsor, England, has just been announced, is 74 years of age, says the Marquise de Fontenoy. The Swinburnes are one of the oldest families in England and were settled at Swinburne Castle in Northumberland at the time of the Norman conquest. The castle, by the bye, passed through marriage in the reign of Queen Elizabeth to the Widderingtons, who sold it to the Riddells, in whose possession it has been for the last 200 years, the country seat of the head of the house of Swinburne since 1572 having been Capheaton Hall, near Newcastle-on-Tyne.

The baronetcy held by Sir John Swinburne is one of the first ones created by King James I., when he founded the Order of the Baronets, dating from 1660, and was conferred upon John Swinburne, who had previously been the subject of a romantic and sensational lawsuit. As a child he had been carried off to France, kidnapped, in fact, in connection with those bitter quarrels that prevailed between the Protestants and the Roman Catholics in England at the time of the reformation. He was brought up in a monastery on the continent under a different name, was believed to have perished, and when, after reaching manhood, and refusing to become a monk, he returned to England to claim his extensive estates, his identity was questioned and he was compelled to institute legal proceedings in order to establish it. This he did by describing, among other things, all the curious marks of the family punch bowl and also the strange markings of a pet cat which he had as a boy.

Among the most familiar members of the Swinburne family have been Henry Swinburne, the friend of Empress Maria Theresa and traveler, whose books on Spain and Italy printed in the middle of the eighteenth century are still standard works to-day.

Another is England's foremost and most gifted poet of the present day, Algernon Swinburne, who, had it not been for the radical and even downright revolutionary opinions which he professes in all political matters, would certainly have been appointed to succeed Lord Tennyson as poet laureate. He is a first cousin of Sir James Swinburne, and the son of the late Admiral Charles and Lady Jane Swinburne, a wonderful old woman, having been a daughter of the third earl of Ashburnham. Lady Jane was celebrated in her younger days for her remarkable beauty, which was such that when presented for the first time at court she was complimented on her loveliness by William IV. as he drew her to him and imprinted a hearty kiss on her cheek.

Algernon Swinburne is an object of particular aversion to the Russian Government and to the reigning house of Romanoff, both of which he has repeatedly denounced fiercely in impassioned verse. Indeed, at one moment the Russian Government endeavored, though unsuccessfully, to secure his prosecution in the criminal courts by the English authorities on the ground that his poems constituted not merely an excuse for the methods of the terrorists' party in the dominions of the Czar but an actual instigation to the assassination of sovereign, princes, and officials at St. Petersburg.

On the other hand Swinburne has been the recipient of profound and publicly expressed admiration on the part of the Italian Government and people, the former having officially eulogized his poems glorifying that Italian revolution which has transformed the peninsula into a united nation.

Sir John Swinburne, a Crimean veteran of the Royal Navy, has several sons and one daughter, the widow of Richard Chamberlain, who was a younger brother of ex-Colonial Secretary Joseph Chamberlain. There is but little love lost between Mrs. Richard and her distinguished brother-in-law, and during the Boer war she took an active part in making trouble for the administration and in particular for the Colonial Secretary, not only in England, but also in South Africa.

Needle-Making a Secret Art.

The history of making needles in England is a curious one, for the art has been several times lost to English workmen since the reign of Queen Mary.

Needles were first made in England at that time by a negro from Spain, who set up a shop and for a time prospered at his trade. At his death it was found that he had taught the trade to no one, and the English had to go abroad for their needles until 1565, when a German artisan taught a few mechanics the manner of their making.

The trade soon died out again, for some reason, and not until 1650 was it revived by a foreign workman, who conducted his operations on so large a scale that there was no longer any danger of the secret of their manufacture being lost.

This was the first time that the method of making them was not shrouded in secrecy, and soon the manufacture of needles became an important industry, the Whitechapel needles becoming famous the world over.

There are now several centres, in addition to the London quarter, where the needle industry flourishes, Birmingham alone now producing as many needles in a day as the original workman made in his lifetime.

Sir Henry Irving's Kindness.

Stories of Sir Henry Irving's goodness of heart to the members of his company are innumerable. Mr. Mellish cited an occasion when he had been ill and called to see the actor regarding his further association with the organization.

"You look as though you need a change," said Sir Henry. "Go to the treasurer and get three weeks' salary. After you have spent it come back and start to work."

The actor, after receiving the money discovered that it contained $25 more than the three weeks' stipend. He so informed the treasurer.

"Oh, yes," said the official. "I forgot to mention it. Sir Henry said you looked as though you needed plenty of sun and air. The extra money is for carriages so you won't tire yourself out while you're looking for it."

A QUAINT WARDROBE.

The Outfit of a Seventeenth Century Gentleman of Fashion.

In the year 1501 Sir Ralph Verney, aged thirty-seven and recently widowed, decided to make the "grand tour" of the continent with his son Edmund, aged fourteen. He gave a list of the clothes that were to be sent after them to Lyons. It included "6 Fine night capps Laced marked V in black silke, and 2 Fine night capps plaine," for his own use, and "4 new plaine capps marked V in Blew silke" for the boy. There were also numerous elaborate shirts with lace and "New Cambrick double Ruffle Cuffes marked V in blew thread, 5 paires of little Holland Cuffes for Mun, 3 paires of Cambrick double Boot-hose," and a large number of "fine Holland Handkerchers Buttoned." Also "2 Tufted Holland Wastcoates Lined, 2 Dimothy Wastcoates, 4 Face Napkins and 2 old Handkerchers and 2 paires of old Linnen Stockings." At Lyons a "Blacke trunke with 3 lockes and Wooden Barres" was packed to go to Florence and the widowed baronet's careful inventory of its contents shows that there was a great deal of the heavy mourning which the "etiquette of grief" required. "Black Cloath Doublets, Black Breeches and Cloaks, Blacke Cloath Cape for a Cloake and 2 other peeces of Black Cloath, Black Hats and Hatbands, Old Blacke Tafaty garters and new Black ribbon roses and severall peeces of extra crape."

Sir Ralph Verney's baggage contained no fewer than "6 serge under-capps and 6 Browne callico under-capps." These were for wearing by day when the wig was taken off. And "3 plaine new night capps coarse and 30 Fine Peaked night capps and 2 Night Periwiggs." His toilet equipment included "12 Tortus shell Agendas, 2 gold Picktooths, Hair Powder, 2 Paires new Barbing Larmes, Sizars, and 3 Head-rubbers." And there were "Muske for Powder, Ciprus Powder, and a Puffe." For emergencies there were a "Black Leather needle case with a great gold Bodkin, Papers of Pinns, Blew Thread, Shirt Buttons, and old White Round Buttons, Cap-strings and Tape." In the interests of health "3 papers about Phisick" and "Sir R. Hastings' plaster for a straine" were taken, but "rose water, rose viniger and elder viniger" were perforce left behind, though considered most necessary for his comfort for the winter.

Of precious possessions subjected to the risks of travel there were a few rings "whereof one hath 3 Diamonds like harts," two silver rings of the boy's and "a Bundle" of Mary's hair. He took to Florence as a gift to a friend there the new Paris luxury "the Teeth Brushes and Boxes," and in reply to the thanks he received for them said, "These are such inconsiderable Toyes that I must intreate you to speake no more of them."—Chicago News.

Better Than the Toothpick.

We are told that the health and prosperity of the teeth are greatly promoted by the prompt use of the toothpick immediately after eating and that this being so only a "Miss Prim" or an "Aunt Betty" would presume to object to it. We reply that if this is so the person afflicted should at once repair to the dressing room and, away from the observation of others, should relieve his teeth of their fatal burden. It is advisible, however, that he should employ for the purpose the highly hygienic dental floss. This is pronounced by all good dentists far less harmful to the teeth than the ubiquitous toothpick, which has, as we firmly believe, pushed its way into pretty good society by false pretenses and a species of blackmail.—Leslie's Weekly.

Politeness of Children.

The politeness of children is only skin deep. One cannot help sympathizing with the little London girl who said sleepily to her hostess at a party she had not been old enough to enjoy, "Please, will you tell me which is the lady what's giving this party, 'cause I promised mummy to say, 'Goodby, thank you very much for the nice party,' and I can't go home till I've said it, and—and I do so want to get away from this horrible place!" But one's whole heart goes out to the little boy who, having greatly enjoyed one small insufficient chocolate, was asked sharply, "Well, Johnny, what do you say?" "More," answered Johnny.

Size of the Sun.

We sometimes see a huge ring or halo round the moon, occupying a space in the heavens so large that ninety moons' breadths would but just suffice to span it. Yet the body of the sun would fill all that space ere we had approached within 2,000,000 miles of him. Once on his apparent surface were we permitted to travel thereon and with the speed of an express train it would require five whole years of continuous journeying before we could make the circuit of this orb.

Trifles.

We are often reminded of what Mrs. Chillingly said when asked who managed her household. Her reply was, "My husband has agreed that I may decide upon all the small questions if I will let him decide the large ones." As small ones arose many times each day and large ones only at intervals of months, it ended in her "ruling the roost."

Malicious.

Mrs. McCall—I do wish I could get a good maid. Mrs. Vandine—You might interview mine. I think she'd be delighted to go to you. Mrs. McCall—But why don't you keep her? Mrs. Vandine—Oh, she won't stay! She says she wants a place where she won't have so many dresses and hats to take care of. —Answers.

PERFUMES OF THE EAST.

The Crusaders Brought Them From the Holy Land to Europe.

During the dark ages and in early mediaeval times perfumes, with the exception of incense for ecclesiastical use, were almost unknown, and the rude Saxon thanes and Norman barons and their spouses were quite content with the smell of wood fires and huge masses of roast or seethed meat and were not at all solicitous to enjoy the pleasure of sweet odors. It seems to have been the crusaders who brought from the Holy Land into western Europe the perfumes for which the east has from time immemorial been renowned. The original home of perfumes was either China or Egypt. In the last named century the priests of the temple of Heliopolis used to offer every day to their divinity three kinds of perfumes, one in the morning, one at noon and the third at night, the last being a scent composed of sixteen ingredients, forming an ensemble called kaphi. The universality of perfumes in ancient Greece is known to every one who remembers the delightful descriptions of the perfumed baths of Roman ladies in Bulwer's "Last Days of Pompeii," and from Hellas the use of perfumery spread to Rome, where, under the empire, almost every object was scented.

Even the standards of the legions were perfumed, and the velarium of the Coliseum when the emperor was present was dusted with aromatic powders. The successive invasions of the barbarians led to the shutting up of the perfumers' shops with which the Eternal City had abounded, and until the time of the Renaissance perfumery in Italy was only vended by a few apothecaries. Its use, however, had not died out in Constantinople, and at the fall of the Greek empire the Byzantine Greeks found that their Turkish conquerors were as passionately fond of perfumery as they themselves were.

Sweet essences for secular use were first made an article of trade in France by one Rene or Rinaldo, a Florentine, who came to Paris in the suit of Catherine de Medicis, to whom the French people likewise owe the introduction of confectionery and if malevolent rumor is to be credited the confection of at least half a dozen subtle poisons.

THE TIME WILL COME—

When it will be a disgrace not to work when one is able.

When to get rich by making others poorer will be considered a disgrace.

When the same standard of morality will be demanded of men as of women.

When the golden rule will be regarded as the soundest business philosophy.

When all true happiness will be found in doing the right and only the good will be found to be real.

When the business man will find that his best interests will be the best interests of the man at the other end of the bargain.

When all hatred, revenge and jealousy will be regarded as boomerangs which inflict upon the thrower the injury intended for others.

When the "best society" will consist of men and women of brains, culture and achievement, rather than those whose chief merit and distinction lie in the possession of unearned fortunes.—Success Magazine.

Varying Weight of the Body.

A physician points out that several fallacies are common with regard to the weight of the human body. The man who congratulates himself on his gain of several pounds in weight in a given period may have no cause for rejoicing, for he may be under a delusion. Very few persons, says the investigator, have any correct idea of their own weight. As a matter of fact, the weight of the body is continually changing owing to innumerable influences. On a warm day, after breakfast, a man will lose more than a third of a pound per hour. Seventy per cent of the body contains water, and its weight varies constantly. The inference to be drawn from the loss or gain of a pound or two may be mistrusted. Fluctuations of a few ounces are a sign that the body is in a healthy state.

Grunt-Who-Will Tower.

Anne, the duchess in wooden shoes, who brought Brittany in the pocket of her wedding gown to her husband, the king of France, kept the government for herself, and when the bishop of St. Malo protested against the stronghold which she built to cow the too independent Maloons she carved on her tower the irreverent inscription, which may still be read there, "Grunt who will, so shall it be; 'tis my pleasure," and the tower "Grunt-Who-Will" (Quicqu'en grogue) it remains to this day.

Her Little Composition.

A class was reciting in a school.

"Who can give me," said the teacher, "a sentence in which the words 'bitter end' are used?"

Up jumped a little girl excitedly. "I can, teacher. 'The cat ran under the bureau and the dog ran after her and bit her end.'"

Outrageous.

"I want ten two-cent stamps," said Mrs. Youngwed, "and please charge them, because I have no change."

"We don't do that, madam," replied the clerk in the postoffice.

"The idea! Why not? We always get our letters from you."—Philadelphia Ledger.

No Inducement.

Gambetta once offered a prefecture, with a salary of 6,000 francs, to an incorrigible Bohemian, who, however, declined with thanks, saying, "I can make more than that by borrowing."

WHEN THE TIME IS RIPE

GOD COMMANDETH EVERYWHERE THAT MEN SHOULD REPENT.

SERMON FOR THE NEW YEAR

A Clarion Call to Duty—The Battle Ranks of the Almighty Must Be Filled, and the Year 1906 Must Be a Record of Victory For God and His Christ—Paul's Message.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Diver, of Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 7.—Appropriate for the new year as the season for good resolutions and "turning over a new leaf" is this sermon, the text for which is taken from Acts xvii, 30, "And the times of this ignorance God winked at."

What a tremor of excitement must have stirred the minds and the hearts of his men when Horatio Nelson, the celebrated English admiral, gave the order to clear the gun deck for action at Trafalgar! Ah, yes, we can truly say the one armed naval hero whose body now sleeps in St. Paul's cathedral by the side of the Waterloo chieftain was no novice in the art of war. Way back in the uprising of the American colonies he fought as a young captain of twenty-one under Lord Howe. He was in the midst of the British struggles off Cape Vincent in 1798. He was the commander who destroyed the French fleet in the harbor of Aboukir when Napoleon was making his Egyptian conquests. He was part of the naval history of England from 1770 up to the time of his tragic death, but all his previous engagements were mere preparation for his great battle of Trafalgar. Then he gripped Napoleon's admiral—Villeneuve by name—and grimly said, "Thou shalt not make it possible for the conquerors of Prussia and Spain and Austria and Italy and Holland and Westphalia to cross the channel and fight under the shadow of Westminster Abbey and Windsor Castle." Truly that Trafalgar order, "England expects every man to do his duty," must have aroused the heroic in every British heart, for Trafalgar was the supreme battle of Horatio Nelson's life.

What the quarter deck of the British line of battle ship Victory was to Nelson at Trafalgar Mars hill was to the great gospel warrior Paul. Like Nelson, Paul was no novice. He had fought in many a conflict for Christ. He was a scarred veteran of many gospel campaigns. In Damascus, at Jerusalem, over in Corinth, in Ephesus, we can follow his martial footsteps. But though he had fought many battles for Christ the supreme battle of Paul's life was witnessed at Mars hill. "No moment in the annals of the church," wrote the historian, "has larger significance than that in which the gospel of the living Christ came in its first contact at Athens with the worn faiths of paganism, its philosophy and its science." Here it was that Paul not only had to grapple with Plato's philosophy and with the teachings of the Stoics and the Epicureans, but here also he had to preach Christ in the home of the drama and preach Jesus from the rostrum made memorable by the orations of the greatest orators of the past, whose silver tongues had created armies and made laws and started forth Greece on its conquest of the world.

When Paul looked up and waved his hand above him he saw the famous Acropolis crowned with its many temples. There is the Parthenon with its beautiful statue of Pallas, the guardian goddess of Athens, which city was the home of Demosthenes and Lysias and Lycurgus and Aeschines, the orators, and of Aeschylus and Sophocles, the dramatists, and of Thucydides and Xenophon, the historians, and of Solon, the lawyer, and of Socrates, the teacher, and of Pericles, the poet, and of Phidias, the Michael Angelo of the Greeks. To the right of this famous temple was the marvelous colossal statue of Athanae Promachus. And there is a beautiful poem in marble called "the Temple of Wingless Victory." Every column, every shrine, every intricate covering of that citadel of ancient Athens was chiseled by the hand of a master.

When Paul ceased to look up and as a student of the beautiful looked down his eyes in amazement wandered over the massive proportions of the great temple of Jupiter Olympus, which was one of the seven wonders of the world. The few huge columns of this mighty temple still standing inspire more awe in the minds of the modern students than do even the gigantic stones of the pyramids or the ruined foundations of the ancient statue of the god Helios once bestriding the harbor of Rhodes. There was also the beautiful temple of the Theseum, perhaps the most perfectly preserved temple of all the ancients. And there before him was the gigantic temple of Mars, the god of war. Paul was not preaching Christ among a set of ignorant savages. He was preaching Christ to the greatest students of architecture, of sculpture, of poetry and of oratory the world has ever seen. Wherever Paul's eyes turned he could see the beautiful statues and shrines erected not only to scores but to hundreds and thousands of Grecian gods and goddesses. The city was literally full of beautiful idols of all sorts. It was easier to find there a god than it was a man," Petronius once quaintly said. Yet it was on Mars' hill that Paul dared to defy all the faiths and the intellectualities of paganism.

How did he do it? After presenting Christ as only Paul could preach Jesus he lifted up his hands and waved them toward the countless shrines and wicked deities of Athens. Then he uttered the memorable words of my text, "And the times of this ignorance God winked at, but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent." As God bore with the ignorance of the Greeks of old God has been bearing with our ignorance, but now our eyes are opened as were those of the Athenians. Now it is time for us to repent of our past sins and surrender our hearts to Jesus Christ. Could we have a better time to do this than on this first Lord's day of the new year? As the year 1905 has slipped into the year 1906 we seem to be in almost as dramatic a position as were the Athenians when listening to the preaching of the mighty Paul.

God in the first place has borne with our ignorance theological. He has been dealing with our creeds a great deal as he has been dealing with the shrines of the Athenian worshippers. To use a homely figure, he has been shutting his eyes to our superstitions as a mother sometimes pretends not to see the wrongdoings of her little child, because she does not think it best to correct the boy now. Man in the past has been holding the Baptist creed and the Episcopal creed and the Methodist creed and the Presbyterian creed and the Lutheran creed and the Catholic creed sometimes with as little intelligence as did the Athenians worshipping at the altars of a Mercury, an Apollo, a Jupiter, a Juno and a Hephaestus, but now men are beginning to realize that while it is important to adhere faithfully to the creeds of their respective churches the supreme necessity is that they give their loyal worship to the Holy Trinity, of whom God is the Father and Jesus Christ the elder brother and the holy spirit is the paraclete. And yet, my friends, there was a time when Christian people built their sectarian fences so high that they could not see any good in any church unless that church belonged to their own household of faith.

No sooner did John Wesley come into touch with the Moravians and get a broader conception of Christ than had the Episcopalians than at once the chancel of the Church of England was closed against him. To the Episcopalian he became a spiritual outcast. No sooner did John Bunyan attempt to start forth as a Nonconformist preacher than at once he had to surrender his pulpit for Bedford jail. No sooner did Albert Barnes, like St. John, get a broader vision of heaven than had his ministerial brethren than he was deprived of his Presbyterian orders, and the greatest Bible teacher and commentator of his generation had to sit in the pew of the First Presbyterian church of Philadelphia as a worshipper instead of standing in the pulpit as a preacher. All the persecutions of the dark ages were due to the worship of sectarian creed. All the horrors of a St. Bartholomew massacre and the murderings of the Covenanters among Scottish hills and the fiendish works of a "Bloody McKenzie" and of a "Bloody Mary" were due to the worship at a denominational altar instead of the cross of Jesus Christ. Oh, religion, religion, what awful crimes have been committed in they name! The demons of the darkest caverns and the most bestial of sins have drenched their garments with human gore because under the helmets of sectarianism they have been prompted to unsheath the sword of bigotry. But now all things are being changed, Paul revealed the "Unknown God" to the Athenians. Jesus Christ has revealed God to us. Now our religious teachers have become so broad that they are ready to join all Protestant churches in one great federation for Christian work as long as the one cardinal doctrine of those churches is "Jesus Christ the Saviour, who has come to save man, a sinner."

And, mark you, this revelation of Christ has not been gladly acclaimed by the churches during the past centuries, but only within the last few years. God has revealed himself to us theologically. We know, and well know, that foreordination or Arminianism or belief in apostolic succession are not essential for salvation. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and be saved," was the slogan of Paul and is the slogan of the modern Christian pulpits. Sectarian intolerance is being rapidly demolished. We might have clung to our sectarianism in the past as the Athenians clung to their altars of gold and silver and marble, before Paul appeared. But we cannot, we dare not do so now. There is but one true altar, and that is the altar of Jesus Christ. "And the times of this ignorance God winked at, but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent." Repent! Repent! Repent in Christ's name or ye shall all likewise perish.

But God has borne with our moral ignorance as well as our theological intolerance. He has been overlooking for generations the sins of the flesh which men have unconsciously committed as well as the sins of false creeds. And when I speak thus I could roam over a very wide territory if I would, for you have no more right to judge a man of the fifteenth or sixteenth centuries by the moral standards of the twentieth century than you have a right to condemn the Puritans because they exiled Roger Williams from Massachusetts in 1635 or because, under the leadership of Cotton Mather, they burned the supposed witches of Salem on 1691.

But I find God bearing with the social sins of our fathers, as well as their theological and moral faults. I find that he comes to us, as he did to Cain of old, and says, "Thou art thy brother's keeper." And when God speaks thus he means even more than when Christ spoke the parable of the Good Samaritan to the Jews as well as to the Greeks. You cannot judge the Greeks who assembled about Mars' hill to listen to the eloquent words of Paul by our social laws any more than you can judge them by our theological or moral criterions.

In the first place, you must remember that the Greeks for generations had been a slave holding people. You remember how that matchless orator of Massachusetts, Wendell Phillips, tried to make the Haytian martyr, Toussaint l'Overture, the acme of all virtues and human perfections. In his peroration he used these words: "I would call him Napoleon, but Napoleon made his way to the empire over broken oaths and through a sea of blood. I would call him Cromwell, but Cromwell was only a soldier, and the commonwealth he founded went down with him into his grave. I would call him Washington, but the great Virginian held slaves." Oh, Wendell Phillips, is that right? Is that honest? Is that fair? Had Toussaint l'Overture grown up on the banks of the Potomac with a white skin, would he have done any differently from our Washington or our Jefferson, both of whom held slaves? For centuries the law of conquest in olden times meant enslavement. You should judge the Greeks by the standard of their time but not by ours. God has declared that we have another duty to our brothers than to put the yoke of bitterness about their necks and make them sweat blood in the factory or upon the plantation. Hear it, ye capitalists. Ye are your brothers' keepers. Blood money can stick to your hands as well as to those of Judas. A mark of God's condemnation for financial sins can be upon your brow as well as upon Cain's for killing his brother with a club.

Not only are we our brother's keeper in a financial or in a mercenary sense, but also in a physical sense and in a mental. Aye, we walk in wonderment among the beautiful columns of Athens. We can think of the charioteers driving their flashing eyed chargers over those hillsides. We can see the runners, with the speed of the winds, coming back to that capital telling of victories won. We can picture the altars of gold and silver. We can see the palaces filled with the richest art treasures and see the vast amounts of moneys squandered for the worship of the god of wine called Dionysus. But right under the shadow of the prison in which Socrates was compelled to quaff the poisonous hemlock, ignorance and filth were everywhere. And when the poor became sick they were not cared for as we care for our sick; but they were left alone to starve and die. Or they were driven out upon the mountain sides as the Hebrews drove their lepers to the tombs of the dead, crying "The leper, the leper! Room for the leper! Room! Room!" Ah, yes, the Greeks in a social sense had a duty toward their poor fellow men. Have we not as great if not a greater duty? "Thou art thy brother's keeper." Thou art his keeper in a financial way—you must give him work; in a mental way—you must build for him schools; in a physical way—you must care for him when he is sick and helpless. Are you doing it? "And the times of this ignorance God winked at, but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent."

But God has borne with our past missionary ignorance as well as our past social ignorance. We have a duty to fulfill in reference to the kind of homes in which our brethren sleep and eat. We must see that they have the right kind of schools in which to be taught. But above all we must see that they are made acquainted with the gospel of Christ and the mercy of the true God. And yet some people who are members of Christian churches profess to believe that they are not responsible for the kind of God their heathen brethren worship. By their actions they practically say, "Christ did not mean anything when he said, 'Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the father and of the son and of the holy ghost.' But he does mean for us simply to go and teach our friends and our own families and our own kith and kin."

Ah, my brother, when a man is indifferent to the missionary effort to preach Christ unto all men and send Christ's missionaries into the farthermost parts of the earth resembles in his righteous selfishness the Sultan of Turkey. Tourists who have been to Constantinople tell us that the "sick man of Europe" is living in daily terror of his life. His bloody hand has been against all his enemies. Murder and rapine have gone wherever his rule has gone. He dethroned his elder brother and shut him up in prison for many years. He is said to have slain two of his nearest relatives, either one of which would have become Sultan had he died. He has killed scores and hundreds and thousands of his subjects in the hope that their deaths might make his life more assured, and yet there he trembles in his palace, year in and year out, afraid of his foreign foes and fearful of his enemies, skulking within his own capital.

But once a week the Sultan, even in spite of his own fears, goes regularly to the mosque to prayer. He goes there with one motive—to insure his own salvation. It is of himself, his eternal safety, that he thinks and not of the welfare of his people. Can it be possible that any Christian resembles him in this? Is there a Christian whose sole desire in worship is his own salvation and who cares for nothing for the salvation of the heathen at home and abroad? There were such in the past history of the church.

The broader conceptions of the gospel never seem to enter their lives. That because Christ is their Saviour they should try to present him to those who know him not, ah, this indeed has never been the purpose of their hearts. Now, all this narrow conception of Christianity must stop. We must be eyes to the blind and ears to the deaf and crutches to the lame and food for the hungry. But we must be more than that— we must be the means, through the missionaries, of bringing Christ to a dying world. Jesus commands it. "The times of our past ignorance God winked at, but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent."

Thus in closing I would point you to Mars' hill, the most glorious pulpit in the world with the exception of Calvary. And then I would point out for your exemplar the mightiest gospel preacher of all times with the exception of Jesus Christ himself. And I would tell you that Paul did not go to Athens to preach Christ. He was worn out with work. He was resting there for Silas and Timotheus to come to him. But while he rested he saw the Athenians in sin. Then he could not rest any longer. The Bible says, "His spirit was stirred in him when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry." Therefore he went forth to tell the Athenians about his Christ. Ah, my friends, in our modern Athens of America will your hearts burn within you as Paul's burned within him when he saw the wickednesses of mankind? Will you here and now promise not to rest this side of the grave until you have told as many people as you can about the Jesus who alone can save them from their sins? May every hour of every day of the coming year find you proclaiming the gospel tidings from some Mars' hill until at last you stand before the throne of heaven, where Christ shall reveal himself to all his redeemed ones face to face.

ONLY ONE WRIT.

But There May Be Others in Cobalt Matter—Was the Government Tricked By False Evidence?

Toronto, Jan. 8.—Hon. J. J. Foy, Attorney-General, said on Saturday that Mr. Pinkerton, of Messrs. Pinkerton, Clute and Cook, had instructions to issue one writ in connection with the Temiskaming and Hudson Bay Mining Co., Limited, which operates in Cobalt district. This, he said, would, in the course of events, involve several quarter sections of land in that district, and other writs might necessarily follow.

Mr. Pinkerton, of Pinkerton, Clute & Cook, was seen and asked for a statement of the case. He said:

"The proceedings are being taken on behalf of the Attorney-General to set aside certain leases granted by the Ross Government to the Temiskaming and Hudson Bay Mining So., Limited, on the ground that these leases were obtained under affidavits filed with the Department before the present Government went into power, and also that these affidavits were not true in point of fact as to actual discovery of valuable ore or mineral in many of the locations on which leases have been obtained.

"When the first discoveries were made in Cobalt, these men lived in the locality and organized a company.

"It is alleged that they took whole townships, and had them surveyed into 40-acre parcels, and filed their claims without making any discovery. Then they advertised for prospectors to go in, promising them twenty per cent. of any discoveries they made.

"Besides taking out numerous leases in the name of the company, each of the shareholders took out leases in his own name, and, as appears by the evidence so far obtained, gave a declaration to the company that as shareholders they held these leases in trust for it. This was done to overrule the intention of the mining regulations which limit the claims a mining company can hold.

"By this proceeding, however, they perpetrated a fraud on the Government.

"The proceedings are being taken for the protection of individual promotors or investors, who go in there at the present time in a bona-fide manner to locate claims and find that large territories are blanketed by a set of leases obtained from the Government under affidavits misrepresenting the facts."

Changes In Several Of the Chairmanships

Council's Inaugural Meeting To-day—Ald Marsh Gets Executive; Ald. Panter Public Works; Ald. Vermilyea Light; Ald. Gordon Water—The Mayor's Message a Timely and Practical One—Grist of By-laws Passed

The inaugural meeting of the City Council for 1906 was held in the Council Chamber at 11 o'clock this morning. A few of the public were in attendance.

The Clerk announced the result of the nominations for Mayor and Aldermen, and declared that the members of the Council for 1905 were re-elected by acclamation, as follows:

Mayor—C. N. Sulman.

Aldermen — Messrs. Panter, McCrodan, Knox, Gordon, Green, Vermilyea, Marsh, Paterson, Cooper and Sinclair.

His Worship was escorted to the chair by Ald. Gordon and Marsh.

Before proceeding with the business of the session, the Rev. J. P. Wilson, pastor of Bridge St. Church, was called upon and offered up an appropriate prayer.

Mayor Sulman at this juncture delivered his inaugural address which was as follows:

THE MAYOR'S MESSAGE.

Gentlemen of the Council of the City of Belleville;

Last year I was pleased to welcome you as members of the Council. This year I am doubly pleased to welcome you all back for another term, which to me shows conclusively that the work of last year's Council was satisfactory and pleasing to the citizens and they have shown their very great appreciation of your efforts by an event of very rare occurrence by electing you all by acclamation.

Last year's business being wound up within the year we start this year ready for new business.

Although some have criticized the Council as being inactive last year, I find in looking over the work of the year that a great deal was accomplished, and as you did so well last year and are now more seasoned and better acquainted with the requirements of the city, I am submitting to you a great many matters for your serious consideration and approval. I trust you will enter into your work this year with enthusiasm and zeal and that even greater things may be accomplished for the benefit of our city this year than was accomplished last year.

Each chairman should go over the list of employees in his department and have the salary of each employee adjusted for the year at once, and then the Council should not allow any extras to any person for the current year.

Each chairman should become thoroughly acquainted with the by-laws of his department, and not over-step his rights or over-run his estimates for the year.

The securing of the services of an experienced engineer at once to prepare proper plans, etc., for a sewerage system covering both east and west Belleville, so that proper steps can be taken by the Council for securing an act at the next session of the Legislature permitting the city to raise necessary funds and construct a sewerage system.

The appointment of a small committee to secure plans, etc., for an isolation or contagious disease hospital, and for the Council to construct and properly equip same.

The proper fitting up of rooms over the meat market as a laboratory for the use of the Medical Health Board for the proper carrying on of their health tests and proper storage of their paraphernalia.

The placing of a small sum of money to the credit of the Medical Health Board for emergency expenses.

The appointment of a building inspector for the city.

The appointment of a small committee to attend to our civic insurance for the year.

The establishment of a public bathing house.

The taking of proper steps at once to have the Militia Department proceed with the building of the Drill Hall this spring for sure.

The appointment of a small committee at once to secure a proper site for the new Public Library, so kindly donated to the city by Mr. and Mrs. Corby.

The keeping in touch with the C.P.R., to induce the company to connect with Belleville.

An interview with postal authorities to see if we cannot secure better accommodation for our citizens at the Post Office, to avoid the long delays and crowding at wicket, and thereby give to our citizens a quicker and better service.

PUBLIC WORKS.

The placing of a road repair wagon on our streets.

The enlarging of the drain on Moira street to a proper size to carry off all the flood water from the commons.

The re-building of part of the Canifton road.

The placing of a curb on both sides of Bridge street, from Church street to Bleecker Ave., to further beautify this beautiful thoroughfare.

The starting of the construction of cement sidewalks early in the year, and, in addition to those already under contemplation, I would recommend one to be built on the west side of Front street, from the park roadway to Mr. Black's warehouse, and the placing of a cement crossing from Mr Black's across Front street to the walk on the east side.

The connecting of as many of our cement walks with cement crossings as finances will possibly allow you to do.

The re-adjustment of wages paid employees in this department, and the placing of a few of the old employees at lighter work, such as cleaning crossings.

The keeping down of weeds and keeping of the streets clean all over the city.

WATERWORKS.

The printing of by-laws and placing same in the house of every water taker.

The re-adjustment of rates between the city and Water committee.

Better fire protection for the Hospital.

The completion of the Zwick's Island filtering scheme.

GAS.

The paying of employees in this department the same day as other civic employees.

The placing of slot meters on all users of gas who do not pay their accounts promptly.

The building of a cement floor for coal shed at the gas works.

Much of the valuable time of the plumbers and a great deal of money could be saved to this department by securing a boy helper for each of the plumbers.

MARKET.

The placing in the city building of a heating apparatus suitable to heat the whole building thoroughly.

The re-arrangement of the butter market. The taxing of gardeners peddling around our city, or putting a stop to the practice, as it is injurious to our market.

The adjustment of carters' licenses, charging a higher rate to non-resident than to resident carters.

The painting and pointing up of the outside of the City Hall to make it in keeping with the progress of the city. This will also be a good example for the citizens to follow.

FIRE.

I find this department in excellent condition, and the only recommendation I have is that you seriously consider the establishing of an electric fire alarm system throughout the best parts of the city.

PARKS.

The starting of preparations for making a park of the old dump grounds at the corner of Station road and Canifton road.

The building of a small wharf or the rip-rapping across end of water lots bought to enlarge the approach to Victoria Park.

The purchase of new seats for Victoria park and for Corby park.

The proper care of seats during winter, as it is far cheaper to remove and store them than it is to allow them to remain out and become broken and rotten.

LIGHT.

The renewal of present contract with the Trenton Electric Co. for three years, by which time the Hydro-Electric Commissions will have completed its reports on the water powers of the Moira, and we will then likely be in a better position to do our own street lighting than we are at present.

INDUSTRIAL.

While not successful in securing many new industries during the past year, I would recommend that every encouragement be given to the industries that are located here and that you continue to reach out for new ones, and I feel certain that your efforts cannot help but be crowned with success.

ADVERTISING COMMITTEE.

The adoption and carrying out of some scheme to properly lay before the outside world the beauties and advantages of our city.

In conclusion, I heartily appreciate the very kind attention you have shown, and I hope that during the year just entered upon you will all work together as unitedly and harmoniously as in the past.

A woman once wrote us that she was not going to buy Scott's Emulsion any more because it cost too much. Said she could get some other emulsion for less money. Penny wise and pound foolish. Scott's Emulsion costs more because it is worth more—costs more to make. We could make Scott's Emulsion cost less by using less oil. Could take less care in making it, too. GERMANY'S DEMANDS.

Will Cause Irritation In France, But Will Not Lead to War Though Conference Fails.

London, Jan. 8.—According to official information received in London from Berlin, Germany not only demands that all the powers shall participate in the execution of reforms in Morocco, but that the work of watching the frontier shall be divided among them, thus realizing fears expressed by an official of the Foreign Office in an interview with the Associated Press last Thursday, that there was some fear that the German delegates might insist on regulations clashing with what France considered her special privileges, for instance, the policing of the frontier.

If Germany persists in this attitude in the conference, it is believed a most serious situation will arise, as France is certain to resist, and Great Britain will support France. The British Government, while believing the conference finally will reach a satisfactory settlement, realizes that persistence by Germany in her demands will cause irritation.

In official and unofficial circles the possibility of war is considered the remotest, even if the conference fails, particularly as those who are inspiring the German policy do not belong to the war party, but are powerful commercial men.

Firm and Confident.

Paris, Jan. 8.—Public uneasiness over the Moroccan conference has undergone a distinct improvement. This is due mainly to the confident attitude of the officials of the Foreign Office, who consider the selection by the Italian Government of the Marquis Visconti Venosti to head its delegation as strengthening the position of France.

Now that the French delegates are preparing to start for Algeciras there is evidence of the greatest firmness in upholding the French position, the essential feature of which is that France, through geographical proximity to Morocco is justly entitled to have a special and privileged position in Morocco.

Germany, while yielding much, has never clearly yielded the claim of France to a special position in Morocco. This is the vital issue.

Liquor Men Drive Mayor Out.

St. Cloud, Minn. Jan. 8.—The saloon men of this city held a secret meeting Saturday, and decided to issue an ultimatum to the mayor to leave the city within twenty-four hours, and stay away until his term of office expires. Just before Jan. 1 Mayor Benzen issued an order that, beginning Jan. 1, all saloons should close their doors at 11 o'clock at night, and remain closed all day Sunday. This aroused the ire of the saloon men, who were supported by many business men who were in favor of an open town. Three weeks ago he refused to rescind his order. Saturday the mayor said to a newspaper man that he would undoubtedly go to Mexico. He has been given twenty-four hours to get out of town.

EX-MAYOR BOND KILLED

Ran In Front of a Mimico Car and Was Knocked Down.

Death Resulted in a Few Moments From Fracture of the Skull—Mayor of Toronto Junction 1894-5 — Was One of the License Inspectors For West York—Was Hard of Hearing and His Eyesight Was Not Good.

Toronto Junction, Jan. 8.—The flags on municipal buildings are at half-mast out of respect for the late James Bond, ex-mayor and one of the license inspectors for West York.

Mr. Bond was killed on Saturday afternoon by an electric car at Mimico, while on a tour in his capacity as license inspector of West York. He stepped out of Young's Hotel in front of a car and was knocked down. The car was stopped before the wheels reached the body, but the head was badly crushed, and death resulted in a few minutes.

The inquest was opened at Nurse's Hotel on Saturday night, Coroner Orr presiding. County Constable Simpson, who was an eye witness, described the accident, after which the jury viewed the body. An adjournment was then made until Tuesday night at 8 o'clock.

Mr. Bond was slightly hard of hearing and his eyesight was not very good. In addition he had been troubled with rheumatism of late and these infirmities probably led to the unfortunate accident.

Mr. Bond was 63 years of age, and had resided in the Junction for upwards of eighteen years. His municipal career started in 1892, when he was returned as a member of the Council. He retained that position for a second term, and became mayor of the town in 1894-5. He was returned for the council in 1902 as a representative of the fifth ward. He held the position for the year following. He was made a license inspector last spring.

He leaves a wife and two children, Mrs. J. S. Lockhart of North Bay, and Miss Georgia Bond of this town.

INTERESTING FACTS

FOR NEARLY EVERY MAN, WOMAN AND CHILD.

A short time ago we published an article recommending to our readers the new discovery for the cure of dyspepsia, called Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and the claims then made regarding the wonderful curative properties of the remedy have been abundantly sustained by the facts. People who were cautious about trying new remedies advertised in the newspapers and were finally induced to give Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets a trial were surprised and delighted at the results. In many cases a single package costing but 50 cents at any drug store made a complete cure and in every instance the most beneficial results were reported. From a hundred or more received we have space to publish only a few of the latest, but assure our readers we receive so many commendatory letters that we shall publish each week a fresh list of genuine, unsolicited testimonials and never publish the same one twice.

From James Yemmelsler, LaCrosse, Wis.: Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are doing me more good than anything I ever tried and I was so pleased at results that I gave away several boxes to my friends, who have also had the same benefits.

From Jacob Anthony, Portmurray, New Jersey: I have taken Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets with the best results. I had dyspepsia for 6 years, and had taken a great deal of medicine, but the Tablets seem to take right a hold and I feel good. I am a farmer and lime burner, and I heartily recommend to everyone who has any trouble with his stomach to use these Tablets.

From Mrs. M. K. West, Preston, Minn.: I have received surprisingly good effects from using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I gave one-half of my last box to a friend who also suffered from indigestion and she had the same good results.

From Mrs. Agnes K. Ralston, Cadillac, Mich.: I have been taking Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and I am very much better, and feel very grateful for the great benefit I have received in so short a time.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are a certain cure for all forms of indigestion. They are not claimed to be a cure-all, but are prepared for stomach troubles only, and physicians and druggists everywhere recommend them to all persons suffering from nervous dyspepsia, sour or acid stomach, heartburn, bloating or wind on stomach and similar disorders.

CONCENTRATE TROOPS

Sollogub Will Then Clear the Baltic Territories.

Plans For Their Subjugation Preliminary to Long-Needed Reform of Land Tenure Which the Governor-General Will Then Order — Seventeen Districts of Siberian Railway Are Under Martial Law.

Riga, Livonia, Jan. 8.—In an interview with the Associated Press Saturday, Governor-General Sollogub, said:

"My plan is first to concentrate the troops which are scattered throughout the Baltic provinces before my arrival. I purpose systematically to despatch columns to clear territories and garrison the principal towns they occupy. Heretofore the detachments have been wildgoosing, the insurgents disappearing as soon as the soldiers would approach to reappear after they had departed.

"The principal embarrassment now is lack of troops, but a sufficient number, I think are under orders to put down the rebellions. My purpose is to restore order with as little loss of life as possible, but in such an insurrection circumstances sometimes compel harsh measures in which innocent as well as guilty persons suffer.

"The root of the trouble is the intense hatred between the German landlords and the Lettish peasants, which has continued for generations. A system practically approaching feudalism was maintained.

"I purpose to order many long needed reforms, especially on the question of land tenure, through an assembly of representatives of the classes which the Emperor has ordered convoked."

Railway Under Martial Law.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 8.—On account of the serious condition of affairs on the Siberian Railroad, many stations of which are in a state of anarchy, seventeen districts through which the line passes from the Ural Mountains to Lake Baikal, a distance of 1,800 miles, have been placed under martial law.

CHILD SLAVERY IN CANADA.

British Columbia Indians Are Embarked In Awful Industry.

Vancouver, B.C., Jan. 8.—The following is an extract from the report made to the Government regarding the slave trade among the British Columbia Indians, the report being signed by C. J. South, superintendent of the Children's Aid Society:

"Girls with white skins, thick, brown hair braided down their backs, big innocent childish eyes, are being sold to-day and have been sold for years in British Columbia to the highest bidders.

"The slave masters are the Cape Mudge Indian; the slaves are white because their grandmothers were sold before to white men and when their grandmothers wandered back to the tribe, deserted and abandoned, they brought baby girls with them, and in course of time, the male relatives of these abandoned creatures, sold these baby girls, too, when they grew up to young girlhood.

"Dealers have created a market which is constantly growing, the demand has become so great that other markets have been sought, and, it is reported, that Rock Bay Indians are embarking in this awful industry."

Prison For a Dowieite.

Toronto Leader Who Aided in Fatal Neglect Sentenced.

Six Months Hard Labor in Central Prison For Rev. Eugene Brooks—Husband of the Woman Who Died Gets a Year—Judge McCrimmon, Senior Judge of Ontario County, Scathingly Addresses Prisoner.

Whitby, Jan. 9.—Rev. Eugene Brooks, a Dowieite leader at Toronto, and Dowie's representative in Canada, was yesterday sentenced by Judge McCrimmon, senior judge of the County of Ontario, to six months with hard labor in the Central Prison, Toronto.

The charge against the prisoner was of "aiding, councilling and abetting one Marshall Harmon of Victoria Corners, Township of Brock, in neglect in securing medical assistance during his wife's last illness."

Harmon's wife died early last summer, her illness being a severe case of dropsy, which developed one week after confinement. The husband was a faith cure believer, and refused to allow neighbors who wished to render assistance, entrance to the house.

He sent to Toronto for High Apostle Brooks, and met him at Uxbridge Station, ten miles distant from the Harmon house. During his trip to the station to meet the elder, his wife was left alone at home helpless with an infant seven days old. Brooks remained with the woman for a few hours, and prayed with the patient. The husband then drove him back to the station, leaving the poor wife alone a second time.

Doctors Too Late.

During the husband's second absence Mrs. Harmon's brother and sister accidentally came to see her, and when they discovered her condition they immediately sent for medical assistance. The woman sank rapidly, however, and was dead in a couple of days.

Local feeling ran very high, and Harmon was arrested and brought to Whitby jail. He was sentenced a week ago by Judge McCrimmon to one year with hard labor in the Central Prison.

Yesterday Elder Brooks was asked by the judge if he had anything to say, and he took advantage of the judge's offer to deliver a half an hour's harangue, quoting Scripture in support of his belief. He admitted that he had told Mrs. Harmon and her husband that if they depended on the arm of flesh for a cure they could not expect assistance from the almighty.

Had His Doubts.

His honor here interrupted the prisoner with the remark that he saw that he had supplied himself with a counsel in flesh in the person of Wm. E. Sinclair, barrister of Oshawa. The prisoner laughed, and admitted he wasn't altogether relying on divine aid in this trial.

Brooks is a southerner, and, it is said, has served before terms in prison for similar offences.

The judge delivered a scathing address to the prisoner on sentencing him.

Shot and Sandbagged.

On the other hand, Mr. Black has written to the City Council, asking for an investigation by the county judge into the charge made by him against Ellis. He offers, if charge is not substantiated, to pay all expenses.

Dr. Badgley's Funeral.

Toronto, Jan. 8. — Deeply impressive were the funeral services conducted in the chapel of Victoria University on Saturday afternoon over the remains of the late professor of ethics and apologetics, Rev. Erastus Irvine Badgley, M. A., B. D., LL.D., whose death occurred last Thursday afternoon. Among those upon the platform in the chapel were the President of the Toronto Conference of the Methodist Church, Rev. J. J. Redditt; Rev. Dr. Albert Carman, General Superintendent; Rev. Dr. Potts, Secretary of Education; Rev. Dr. W. F. Wilson, pastor of Trinity Church, with which Dr. Badgley was connected; Rev. Dr. N. Burwash, Chancellor of Victoria; Rev. Dr. A. R. Bain, Registrar; Rev. Dr. F. H. Wallace, dean of the faculty of theology; Rev. Dr. A. H. Reynar, dean of the faculty of arts; Professors J. G. Hume, L. E. Horning, Ph.D., and A. J. Bell, and Rev. E. N. Baker, pastor of Broadway Tabernacle.

After a hymn was sung an appropriate passage from the book of Revelations was read by Rev. Dr. Wallace, and Rev. Dr. Wilson led in prayer. A male quartette, "Nothing Shall Ever Grow Old," was rendered by Messrs. Wm. Walden, W. Connolly, Cornelius Lane and Elmer Ley. Brief addresses were given by Dr. Carman, Dr. Reynar and Dr. Burwash, and Dr. Potts announced the closing hymn, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul."

It seems that a mistake was made in stating that the late Dr. Badgley was a native of Prince Edward County. He was a native of Thurlow, where many of his relatives now live.

THIS MEDICINE IS BREATHED.

That's why it is sure to cure catarrh. You see it goes direct to the source of the disease — its healing vapor repairs the damage caused by catarrhal inflammation. "Catarrhozone" always cures because it goes into those tiny cells and passages that ordinary remedies can't reach, goes where the disease actually is. Impossible for "Catarrhozone" to fail, as any doctor will tell you. Don't be misled into thinking there is anything so good as Catarrhozone—use it and you'll soon say good-bye to catarrh.

Unseated and Disqualified

The St. Ann's election in one of the electoral divisions of the city of Montreal, like most of the contests in which Liberalism succeed, was carried by the most barefaced bribery and other illegal acts; and as in the Kingston election trial, no limit to perjury existed. So flagrant was the manner in which the St. Ann's election was carried on, the Judge, in pronouncing judgment, declared the acts of both candidates and supporters, to have been "Without parallel" in the history of election trials.

Referring to the distribution of money for corrupt purposes, the Judge said:

> "As for disbursing these great sums (about $7,000), otherwise than through the legal agent, and for omitting to include them in the official accounts, the facts disclosed have converted presumptions of corrupt intent into a deadly certainty. Lengthy though these observations are, they give an inadequate idea of all that has been disclosed. In the whole range of election law cases, so far as my reading goes, this case is without a parallel."

In the face of this declaration, by one of the trial Judges, the unseated and disqualified member has, it is said, appealed to the Supreme Court against the judgment. In doing this he has been badly advised, unless the appeal has been made for the purpose of enabling him to retain his seat in Parliament for another session, as the judgment of the Court cannot take effect while the case is pending in the courts. In commenting upon this case a contemporary says:

> "It probably never occurred to him that the election law had been placed in the Statute Book for any serious purpose. The 'Thou shalt not' contained in it, probably never struck him in the same way as the legislative enactments against murder and theft would have done. As seen at Ottawa, Dan Gallery is one of those good-natured chaps who would see no harm at all in bribing the people with what in its last analysis must have been their own money.
>
> So he was led into an offence which in magnitude ranks next the capital offences, since it seeks to shake at its foundation the fabric of constitutional government. No one, personally, would like to see Dan Gallery in jail, but in New York City no less than 18 agents of the sort which he employed have been sent to Sing Sing for corrupt practices during the mayoralty elections in November."

Instead of imprisonment for election crimes, the practice of late in Canada has been to reward the offenders. Look at the "hug-machine" Preston, now enjoying a fat office in London, England; Jackson, the Oxford witness, manipulator and briber, who acknowledged and was proved to have been guilty of crimes that should have sent him to break stones in a jail, now in England living at the expense of the people of Canada, ostensibly performing the duties of a commercial agent; Bole, the ballot-box manipulator in West Elgin, spirited away to avoid a trial, was provided for by the life company of which the immaculate Premier Ross was president; Denoit, is a single case in which, for the committing of almost every election crime, at an election in Montreal, a man was sent to jail, but was, after a short time, pardoned by the Minister of Justice before he had served half his time.

Is it any wonder that under such circumstances, and under the rule of such a Government as we now have in Canada, and as we had so long in Ontario, that election crimes are not only excusable, but justifiable?

* * *

It would appear from the following telegram from Ottawa, that Mr. Gallery has been in that city consulting Sir Wilfrid and the Minister of Justice as to the course he should pursue. "Finding," says the despatch, "that neither the Prime Minister nor the Minister of Justice would listen to the suggestion that he take his seat in Parliament pending decision of his appeal to the Superior Court against the judgment unseating and disqualifying him, Mr. Dan Gallery, as it was predicted he would do, has made a virtue of necessity and has given out the following statement to the press:

> "It is my intention to appeal, not for the purpose of retaining my seat in Parliament to draw the sessional indemnity. I shall never take any seat until such time as my character shall have been vindicated."

The Minister of Justice would have done Dan a good turn had he, with the evidence given at the trial before him, advised him not to spend more money by appealing.

SPLENDID ORA OR TALKED TO YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION

REV. WALTER RUSSELL, OF TORREY AND ALEXANDER STAFF, MADE FINE IMPRESSION ON A BELLEVILLE AUDIENCE LAST NIGHT.

The first meeting of the world-wide "Week of Prayer," was held last night in Bridge St. Methodist Church. The attendance was unusually large. It was in charge of the Young People's Union of the city, and the President of this organization, Mr. H. C. Hunt, was the chairman. At the opening of the meeting there was considerable singing and numerous prayers.

The Rev. Walter Russell, of Toronto, gave an address which will not soon be forgotten by those who had the privilege to hear it. It abounded in epigrams, Scotch wit, similes, illustrations taken from science, history and every-day life, but all used with rare skill to bring home great truths to the listeners. Mr. Russell is unlike anyone else we have heard, he dares to be himself, is totally free from all conventionalities, and possesses in an unusual degree that which always attracts and holds an audience, downright earnestness. No wonder that Messrs. Torrey and Alexander are using him so much in their meetings in Toronto. The meeting to-night is to be in John Street Presbyterian Church, in charge of the Pastor, and the Rev. A. M. Hubly, of Emmanuel R. E. Church, is to be the speaker.

LIVED 100 YEARS

JAMES BEATTIE GAVE FOOD TO SOLDIERS ON WAY TO WINDMILL FIGHT.

Brockville Times: Upon New Year's day James Beattie, of Morristown, rounded out a full 100 years, having been born in Dumfriesshire, Scotland, Jan. 1, 1806. The old homestead bore the name of Holliday Hill. At the age of 25 he sailed for America. During the summer of '32 he was employed on the first river boat which made regular trips on the St. Lawrence. The name of the boat was the Great Britain. It plied between Toronto and Prescott. Toronto at that time was a village about the size of Morristown. That summer was the one which has come down in history as the one when cholera raged in the river town. The following year he purchased and settled upon the farm which has for more than 70 years been known as the Beattie Homestead. It has a commanding view of the grand old river St. Lawrence.

In early life Mr. Beattie was married, and many years ago his faithful helpmeet was called home. Of the several children, four are now living, George, who with his family occupies a neighboring farm; William Francis and Norvel, who take charge of the Beattie Homestead. Mr. Beattie remembers distinctly the day of the birth of Queen Victoria, the day of the Windmill battle, when the soldiers stopped at his house for provisions. He has been a successful farmer, a man of affairs, a worthy citizen and now enjoys the tender care of those who have risen to call him blessed.

The day of his 100th anniversary was a perfect New Year's day. The sleighing was good, and relatives, neighbors and old friends drove long distances to greet the dear old man. Loving hands had beautifully decorated the house. Four generations were present. The centenarian was the recipient of a Morris chair from the family and a rocker from Dr. McMonagle, of Rensselaer Falls, who is the family physician.

JAIL MANAGER OF YORK LOAN COMPANY

Barrister Hunter of Toronto Goes His Bail For $5,000

Broad Charges Against Joseph Phillips Is That He Falsified Statements to the Government for Several Years—Arrest Is the Outcome of the Cross Investigation, the Report of Which Is Given Below.

Toronto, Jan. 9.—Joseph Phillips, erstwhile president and manager of the York County Loan & Savings Co., and some of the other companies, was jailed last night. The manager was in the cells for some hours while bail was being sought. Crown Attorney Curry consented to $5,000 in two sureties, but the two were not handy. W. H. Hunter, barrister, and son of the provincial inspector of loan companies, eventually agreed to become bondsman for the whole $5,000, and Mr. Curry consented to it. Mr. Phillips was arrested shortly before 5 o'clock and taken to the City Hall. He was released at 10.30 from Court street police station, Mr. Hunter having been successful in persuading Magistrate Kingsford to come down and sign the necessary papers to ensure a more comfortable bed for the accused.

The broad charge of falsifying statements to the Government for several years is what Mr. Phillips is up against for the present, and the arrest is the outcome of the evidence given by Phillips and others at the investigation held by W. H. Cross on behalf of the Ontario Government, through the Attorney-General, Hon. Mr. Foy. The report has been in Mr. Foy's hands since Friday. Yesterday he called in Crown Attorney Curry and after a conference it was decided that Mr. Phillips should be taken into custody.

MR. CROSS' INTERIM REPORT.

Basal Plan of Company Was Such as Foredoomed Failure.

The interim report of W. H. Cross, the examiner appointed by the Attorney-General to make a special examination of the York County Loan and Savings Co.'s books, accounts and securities, and to enquire into the conduct of the business of the said company, is as follows:

Organization and Operation.

1. The York County Loan and Savings Co. is a loan corporation organized under the Building Societies' Act, R. S. O., 1887, C. 169, by declaration filed with the clerk of the peace for the County of York, on the 21st day of December, 1891—its lending and borrowing powers being governed by the Loan Corporation Act, R. S. O., 1897, C. 205. It has been under its present management since the year 1893, and has carried on its operations throughout the Dominion of Canada. The number of shareholders is roughly approximated at over 100,000 and they are scattered over Canada, from the extreme east to the extreme west.

Assets and Liabilities.

2. An attempt was made by me to ascertain the amount of the present assets and liabilities of the company, and to give an estimate of what return might be expected by shareholders. I find, however, that the books of the company have not been written up since August last, which renders it impossible to prepare an intelligent statement of the company's position at this date. I am, however, able to report that there are substantial assets, exceeding the liabilities to creditors, and mortgages which will allow a partial return to shareholders.

Causes Leading to Insolvency.

3. (a) I find that the basal plan of the company was unsound; the industrial insurance methods as adopted being inapplicable to savings and loan business, hence as a savings and loan association the York County Loan & Savings Co. was foredoomed to failure.

3. (b) I find that the company invested its funds largely in unproductive real estate, thus abandoning its proper business as a loan company.

3. (c) I find that from the organization of the company and down to the year 1903 forfeitures by members for non-payment of instalments were a substantial source of revenue to the company.

In that year a statute was passed by the Ontario Legislature regulating and limiting the right of loan corporations to declare such forfeitures for non-payments of instalments. This legislation substantially reduced the receipts of the company from that source, and is stated by the officers to have been a principal cause of the company's failure.

Cause of Suspension.

3. (d) The immediate cause of suspension was heavy withdrawals of shareholders, which in 1904 amounted to $1,500,000 and in 1905 to an amount not greatly less.

3. (e) I have, with the aid of C. A. Masten as counsel and with the aid of G. T. Clarkson and the books and records of the company, investigated, so far as time and opportunity has permitted, the question of any supposed misappropriation of the funds of the company, and have inquired, so far as I have been able, into the question of whether any officers or directors of the company have derived collateral personal advantages from its operations; particulars were given of the salaries paid the officers and servants, and these appear to have been reasonable. These inquiries are still proceeding, but, so far, I have not found anything of such a character operating as a contributing cause to the company's insolvency.

Subsidiary Companies.

4. I find that the York County Loan & Savings Co. promoted and assisted the following corporations:

1. The Toronto Life Insurance Co.
2. The Liszt Piano Co.
3. The Southern Light & Power Co.

The amounts in which the York County Loan & Savings Co. is now interested in these corporations is as follows:

Southern Light & Power Co., $212,500.00, covered by bonds, part of an issue of $300,000.00, the issue being secured by a mortgage on all the assets of the power company.

The Liszt Piano Co., debt about $65,300.00, covered by unsecured bonds of the company, payable in ten years. This company is an independent corporation, said to be conducting a successful business and without any liability except this debt. It is stated that the piano enterprise was primarily taken up by the company to enable its agents to add to their incomes, and such company now occupies a factory erected by the loan company at an entirely inadequate rental, and also has an option to purchase it for $60,000 at the end of two years.

The Life Company.

Toronto Life Insurance Co., $22,500.00, represented by 190 shares of its capital stock. The relations of the York County Loan & Savings Co. with the Toronto Life Insurance Co. were of an intimate description, the same directors and the same agents. In November last the loan company sold its office premises and some adjoining buildings and land, which cost it more than one hundred thousand dollars, for sixty thousand dollars, taking as part payment therefore maturing and matured shares of its own withdrawable stock, which had been acquired by the Toronto Life Co.

Accounts of Company.

I find that no accounts have been kept with the instalment shareholders, nor is there in possession of the company any means of determining the amount of its liability to them, except an undigested mass of reports from agents of the company. The instalment share account was grossly incorrect, the shortage appearing to be at least $1,800,000, and the published statements issued by the company were increasingly untrue each year, accompanied by similarly false returns to the Government.

From the evidence it would appear that none of the officers who prepared the published statements and the Government returns were aware of their gross misstatements. The auditors also testified that they believed them to be true, as also the members of the board of directors. This ignorance is possible, and even likely, in every case save that of the president, in whom centred the entire management of the company, and in whom the confidence of the servants and officers was singularly unlimited; even a vice-president, who, with his brother, was solicitor to the company, disclaimed any more than a casual acquaintance with the course of events.

The Last Returns.

I find that the last return made to the department of loan corporations, dated Dec. 31, 1904, shows the mortgage loans on real estate as $1,001,125.51, which should have appeared as $272,565.17, the difference consisting of the following three items:

(1) Mortgages representing the full purchase price of land transferred by the York County Loan Co. to the City Realty Co., which latter company had no independent existence being created solely for the purposes of the York County Loan Co.	$646,525.00
The misrepresentation of this large amount was deliberate, and the president did not disclaim knowledge of its obvious effect.
(2) Advance without security to the Liszt Piano Co.	42,897.52
(3) Advance to the Southern Light & Power Co.....	39,138.12
Both the latter amounts have since been increased as before mentioned.

Real Estate Claims.

I find that in the said Government return as of Dec. 31, 1904, the item of real estate appeared as	$10,909.78
To which should be added the item mentioned in the last paragraph	646,525.00
Making in all	$1,557,434.78

From the ledger account covering real estate, it appears that this item is made up as follows:

On hand Jan. 1, 1896	$ 4,536.55
Purchased since.	731,372.34
Buildings and improvement . ..	565,637.82
Taxes and fire insurance	77,045.85
Real estate expenses	29,806.39
Transferred from general expenses	199,500.00
Profit assumed ..	15,600.00
	$1,623,548.95
Cash sales	66,114.17
	$1,557,434.78

Actual Value Undetermined.

The actual value of this asset has yet to be determined.

In the said return as of Dec. 31, 1904, the amount of the forfeitures for that year are made to appear as	$ 14,750.00
The amount shown by the books being	$134,750.00

The difference was disposed of as follows: $50,000 was transferred to interest account, and $70,000 to the instalment share account.

An Attempt to Save.

I find that the president of the company, Joseph Phillips, discovered some years ago the unsuitability of his industrial plan to the operations of the York County Loan & Savings Co., and thereupon formed a life insurance company to take over the large staff of trained agents, when the outstanding withdrawable shares of the York County Loan should have been converted into permanent shares. This life insurance company was not formed until the year 1903, and the weakness of the scheme of operations of the York County Loan must have made itself apparent to any thinking man long before.

I find that if the financial statements of the company during its earlier years had truly shown the result of its operations, and those results had been regarded, the undertaking must either then have been converted into an industrial insurance company, or it would have disappeared with slight loss to the few persons interested. Instead of this, some $8,000,000 have been collected, out of which more than $5,000,000 have been paid out preferentially to withdrawing shareholders.

Further investigation is still to be made into various expenditures of the company and the subsidiary companies.

BULLER WAS INJURED.

A Remarkable Statement Regarding South African Operations.

The Court Journal refers to the movement for bringing about the recall of Gen. Sir Redvers Buller to the active list, and says: "The following facts have, we believe, never been made public: That Lord Roberts' plan of campaign was identical with that Sir Redvers Buller had decided upon had he been able to follow his own judgment; that he eventually attacked and relieved Ladysmith in spite of Lord Roberts' orders not again to attempt it; that the Minister whose duty it was to defend or condemn Gen. Buller in the House of Commons never asked him one single question as to his operations, and when the documents concerning them were laid before the War Commission no pains were taken to get from him the full correspondence, but only certain copies of telegrams—which were incorrect in many instances—were given to the commission. It is also not generally known that if it had not been for Sir Redvers Buller's remonstrances Sir George White, after his first failures, would have been superseded. The Government afterwards made Sir George a Field Marshal, and bestowed upon him every decoration it was possible to give. Lastly, the public does not know, because the fact was suppressed by Sir Redvers, that during the action of Colenso he was struck on the upper part of the body by a shrapnel bullet, and as a result from breast-bone to back-bone was one huge bruise, which caused him acute agony for days. When the Government and every principal commander in South Africa, from Lord Roberts downwards, made mistakes, and we know that he who makes no mistakes makes nothing, it is only fair for the nation to insist that justice should be done to Gen. Sir Redvers Buller."

Quick-Change Artist Plays a Trick.

Mr. Fregoli, the quick-change artist, who is performing at the Barrasford Alhambra, in Paris, played an amusing joke on the public and police on Sunday afternoon, telephones The London Express Paris correspondent.

As crowds of passengers were streaming out of the Metropolitan Station, on the Place de la Republique, an old Italian woman suddenly raised an outcry that her purse had been stolen. As usual in a Parisian crowd, everybody gave evidence, and the police arrested two men on suspicion.

But on examination no purse was found on them, and when the old lady was wanted to answer further questions she was nowhere to be found.

Five minutes later the ticket-collector was replaced by an authoritative person in the Metropolitan uniform, who insisted on passengers giving him their tickets instead of throwing them into the box at the exit, as is usual.

One of the passengers happened to be a director of the line, and suspecting the man's bona-fides, he went to fetch the stationmaster, but on his return the ticket-collector had disappeared.

Ten minutes afterwards a police magistrate, with the tricolor sash round his waist, came down, examined the two men arrested and ordered their release.

It was only when Mr. Neighbor, the Alhambra manager, came round later in the evening to apologize, that the director and the police realized that the old woman, the ticket-collector, and the magistrate were Mr. Fregoli, who wished to see if he could deceive the public without the aid of the footlights.

England Revives Spelling Bee.

Now that winter has set in in earnest it appears that the progressive spelling bee, which has been out of sight and out of mind for years, has made its reappearance as a social pastime in England, but it is a spelling bee in a new and more complicated form, and one which offers greater opportunities for the exercise of ingenuity and resource than were provided by the old form of the game.

In the new game, which is known as the double demon spelling bee, the novel point is that each player, when it comes to his or her turn, has the option of either affixing or prefixing a letter, and this opens up all sorts of new opportunities. Thus, in a case where the fifth player had to continue the letters "s t i f," he would be able to get out of his difficulty by prefixing the letter "a," thus turning the growing word in the direction of "mastiff."

Some people display great ingenuity in playing double demon and discover all sorts of unexpected ways out of difficulties. Thus the other day a well known lady had to continue the letters "s c a l." She might have added another "l" and continued the word in the direction of scallop, but the next player, happening to be a Conservative politician, she had the happy idea of prefixing the letter "f" to "s c a l," and the gentleman, to every one's amusement, was so appalled by the imminence of the dreaded word fiscal that he overlooked his means of escape, which lay in prefixing the letter "m" and diverting the same toward the word "miscall."

Origin of the Blue Jackets.

The use of the blue uniform faced with white, which originated with the British navy, but which has been widely copied, was suggested by a riding habit worn by the Duchess of Bedford.

It had been determined to clothe the sailors of the navy in a distinctive uniform, and George II. deputed the matter to the then Duke of Bedford, First Lord of the Admiralty, and Admiral Forbes. At the conference the admiral suggested that red with blue facings, or vice versa, would be the most appropriate, since these were the national colors.

The duke agreed with him as to the appropriateness of the suggestion, but explained that His Majesty had that morning seen the duchess in the park in a riding habit of blue faced with white and had given orders that the uniform of the navy should carry out this idea.

Other nations, seeing the effectiveness of the combination, adopted the idea, and now in most navies of the world the uniform is the same—blue and white.

Ontario is four times as large as England.

As It Was in the Beginning.

"I wonder how graft originated?" said the studious man.

"Away back in the garden of Eden," answered Senator Sorghum, "man was a grafter at the outset. Adam couldn't even let Eve enjoy an apple without getting a rakeoff."

Generous.

"Some men say," remarked the beautiful heiress, "that I have no heart."

"Oh, that doesn't matter!" replied the poor but willing youth. "I'll give you mine."

What makes old age so sad is not that our joys but our hopes cease.—Richter.

Baffled.

The word baffled now has a meaning entirely different from that applied to it 300 years ago. It is new understood to mean thwarted, foiled or disappointed, but then it was applied to the process of degradation by which a knight was disgraced. A baffled knight was one who had been pronounced guilty of conduct unbecoming one of his order and had accordingly been shorn of his plumes, his sword was broken before his eyes, his knightly robe torn away, his spurs cut off with a cleaver, and after being publicly chastised he was declared to be baffled. The word is used in this sense by Shakespeare and other writers of that time.

About Breathing.

In the ordinary respiration of man sixteen or seventeen cubic inches of atmospheric air pass into the lungs twenty times a minute, or a cubic foot every five and one-quarter minutes, 274 cubic feet in twenty-four hours. The lungs hold 2.80 cubic feet. At each respiration 1.375 of oxygen is converted into carbonic acid gas. The nitrogen inspired and expired is exactly equal. During the act of inspiration the lungs have been found to be the coldest parts of the body.

The Point of View.

"It all depends on the point of view," he said reflectively.

"What do you mean?" she asked.

"Well, by way of illustration," he answered, "there's Mrs. Jones next door, who sings all day long. Looking at it from one point of view, we say, 'Happy woman!' and from another, 'Unhappy neighbors!'"

MIDDLE AGE.

The Harvest Season of Life According to Ian Maclaren—Then Man Knows Himself.

"Ian Maclaren" writes: Captious people will ask at once the date, forty or sixty? and one had better admit at once that middle age is not a fixed frontier which divides every life into the same size of provinces, but varies with each person. Some children are old at 15, with precocious talk and solemn faces, and some men at 30 have the air of 50. They are stout in body, they amble in their walk, they drop oracular remarks, they endure with an effort the gayety of youth. There are others who defy time and put the record of the registrar general to confusion.

With most of us there is a turning point in life like the watershed on a railway journey. For so many years we are climbing up, for a little we run on a level, and now we are beginning to go down, only beginning, but going down. Say at 50 years if an exact and pedantic reader must have a date. Our body changes about that time; we give up every game except golf, we puff slightly when we hurry to catch a train; we do not care to stand for a long time if we can get a seat, our walk grows more impressive.

We are not old now, but we are not young, we are half and between, we are middle-aged, and our mood corresponds.

The man has come to know himself, and that is the first great necessity of successful living. He knows what he can and what he can't do, and therefore he is not intoxicated when he is praised, because this was his strong point, and every man surely has some strong point, and if he is not dashed when he is censured, if a neighbor blames him, the chances are he is quite right, for that was his weak point, and every man is weak somewhere. If he were to praise him why that would be too friendly. The fact is the man has no illusions. They have been dispelled as morning dreams. He has weighed himself and understands how he stands, and where he is, and so there comes over middle age a certain mood of calmness, which has not, of course, in it the force of youth, but has its own compensation in contentment. Instead of the flush of spring there is the mellowness of autumn.

Akin to this mood is a gracious magnanimity. When one is young he is of necessity fighting for his own hand to win a prize, to obtain his degree, to establish a business, to acquire a practice, to make himself secure. Every man is his rival, if not his enemy, and he is not inclined to rejoice in other people's success, for it may be at his expense, or at least it may be a reflection on his failure. Nor has he leisure to concern himself about other men's reverses or to give them pity. He was down himself yesterday, and if he does not take care he may be down again to-morrow in the dust of defeat. When his battle has been fought and the struggle is over, especially when he has won and reached the crest of the hill, then he has time to rest and to observe and to take an unselfish interest in his comrades. When a man is running his race it is not possible for him to consider the other runners or wish them well. He needs all his breath for his own race. When he has come in and put on his coat, having won or lost, but all the more if he has won his prize, he stands by to applaud the panting runners as they pass the goal, the goal he has already passed. Renan had all his life prided himself upon not pushing but preserving calmness amid life's fiercest fight. "If a man shoves me," he used to say, "I say pass, monsieur," and it is not wonderful that as he grew old he was entirely satisfied. "His unimpaired curiosity continued to interrogate the universe," but he was full of rest, he suffered terribly, but he had not abdicated. "I have done my work," he said to Mme. Renan, "I die happy."

When one has had his fill of work and has had some moderate reward he wishes the younger men coming up behind him to have their share of things, and earn their wages. This is not so much charity on his part, it is justice, it is not to be ascribed to religion, but to middle age.

And so comes another mood, which one may call altruism, or living for other people. The middle-aged man (or woman) lives not for himself, but for his children. He does not care what men say about him, but he is desperately concerned about their judgment on his sons. If some one praises the boy the father is lifted for days, if they run the boy down, the father is cut to the heart. He boasts about his son's success, he tries to cover his son's defeat, he would willingly pass on his own gain to his boy and bear his boy's suffering. He has died to himself and is alive again in his family, and if he is spared to be a grandfather he grows preposterous in his pride over that child, and his admiration of all its doings. No doubt there is such a thing as a disappointed and bitter middle age, when men profess to have seen the end of all perfection and to believe neither in man nor woman. There was an old prayer, "Lord preserve me from a young judge," and one expects an old judge to be broad in charity and pitiful towards humanity, but there are old men who spend the last quarter of their lives in carping and complaining, in sneering and discouraging. This is the opprobrium of middle age, but when one sees this ungracious spectacle let him be pitiful, for the man has most likely failed. He has been a victim of circumstances or perhaps his own enemy. He has never reached the crest of the hill; he has never passed the goal post; he has been thrown out by the wave, he has been trodden underfoot. And now he has a vendetta against the young who are full of hope, because they mock him; against those who have succeeded, because he thinks it has been at his expense, and against human life because it has been such a deceit and mockery. Pardon his sourness, he is one of the failures of humanity, fruit which has never ripened. Deal gently with him. And turn to that big-hearted man who did great things in his day, and now is ready to lend a hand to every struggler, and to give a cheer to every winner. Who wishes well to all men in their place, and blesses God that life on the whole has been so kind to him, and that the best of it is yet to come when the sun, already beginning to sink, will set gloriously behind the western hills.

Webster's Wit.

Most men of weight dislike the frail gilt and satin chairs which accidentally fall to their lot in a crowded drawing room. They were in use in Mr. Webster's time. At an evening reception given to some western lawyers soon after the accession of President Tyler and the dissolution of President Harrison's cabinet Mr. Stanberry, late attorney general, was accompanied by his bashful friend, Mr. Leonard, who immediately retired to a corner and selected this gilded trifle as a resting place. In order to withdraw still farther from notice he tilted the frail structure backward. Down it went, smashed into a dozen pieces, and Leonard the embarrassed was Leonard the observed by all. Mr. Webster immediately rushed to the rescue of his unfortunate guest and raised him from the floor with the reassuring remark, "Why, my dear Mr. Leonard, you should have remembered that no cabinet work would hold together here."

Boomerang Testimonials.

The oriental point of view is an instructive one, as is shown by the following:

At Allahabad, India, there has just been issued the report of the Hospital For Women, and the Pioneer of that city prints a couple of graceful letters quoted in the report. The first addressed the lady at the head of the institution thus:

> Dear She—My wife has returned from your hospital cured. Provided males are allowed at your bungalow, I would like to do you the honor of presenting myself there this afternoon, but I will not try to repay you—vengeance belongeth unto God. Yours noticeably.

The second was in a strain of even more punctilious courtesy. It ran:

> Dear and Fair Madam—I have much pleasure to inform you that my dearly unfortunate wife will be no longer under your kind treatment, she having left this world for the other the night of the 27th ult. For your help in this matter I shall ever remain grateful. Yours reverently.

An Arctic Dog.

It is said of Dr. John Brown, the genial and much loved author of "Rab and His Friends," that he was personally acquainted with every dog in Edinburgh. Once while out driving he stopped in the middle of a sentence and looked out eagerly at the back of the carriage.

"Is it some one you know?" asked the friend who was with him.

"No," he replied. "It's a dog I don't know."

An old resident of Edinburgh tells this story: A dog had recently been brought to the city from Iceland and for a long time apparently suffered from all the pangs of homesickness.

Dr. Brown became much interested in the animal and tried frequently to comfort it. At last one day he came to the house of his friend, Dr. Peddie, with a smiling face and said:

"That dog is all right now. He went out last night and saw the pole star, and that has made him feel quite at home here."

LEGAL PHRASEOLOGY.

What Some of the Terms Common to Court Practice Mean.

To most persons the phrase "This indenture witnesseth" is as much Greek as the other common phrase "Witness my hand and seal." Yet both are relics of a time when these legal forms carried with them a significance not obtaining at present.

Legal documents were once engrossed upon parchment because paper cost so much more than dressed skin. The parchment was seldom trimmed exactly and the top was scalloped with the knife; hence the term "This indenture." Even where the lawyers have departed from the custom, still obtaining in England, of using parchment for their legal forms the phrase has been retained.

In the same way the signature of "hand and seal" is a relic of those olden times when only clerks and the clergy could wield the pen. It was the custom for the contracting parties to lay their hands upon the document in token of good faith, and there remained a smudge. As these original thumb marks were not easily identified, the gentry added their seals for the purpose of further establishing the validity of the document. It may not be generally known that a seal is still required in law, though the need for it passed with the spread of education, and the bit of red paper affixed by the lawyer is as necessary as the signature to certain documents.

A court of law is a reminiscence of the time when justice sat in the open courtyard, and the "dock" is from a German word meaning a receptacle, while the "bar" is a Welsh word meaning a branch of a tree used to separate the lords of justice from their vassals.

The entire phraseology of the bench is reminiscent of the earlier days, but, having been proved proper, has been retained.

JAPANESE PAGODAS.

Earthquake Proof and Able to Stand the Severest Shock.

The absence of buildings of any size and antiquity in Japan is ascribed to the destruction of them by the frequent earthquakes which occur. The only structures which seem to be earthquake proof are the pagodas which are erected before the temples. There are many pagodas which are 700 or 800 years old and as solid as when first built. There is a reason for this, and it lies in their construction. A pagoda is practically a framework of heavy timbers which starts from a wide base and is in itself a substantial structure, but it is rendered still more stable by a peculiar device. Inside the framework and suspended from the apex is a long, heavy balk of timber two feet thick or more. This hangs from one end, and to the other end are bolted at each of the four sides four more heavy timbers, and if the pagoda be very lofty still more timbers are added on to these. The whole forms an enormous pendulum which reaches to within six inches of the ground. When the shock of an earthquake rocks the pagoda the pendulum swings in unison and keeps the center of gravity always at the base of the framework. Consequently the equilibrium of the pagoda is never disturbed, and this is the explanation of the great age of many of them, when from their height one would suppose them to be peculiarly susceptible to the effect of an earthquake.

A Bit of English.

A Frenchman was boasting that he had thoroughly mastered the English language when he was asked to write from dictation the following specimen of our choice eccentric vernacular:

"As Hugh Hughes was hewing a Yule log from a yew tree a man dressed in garments of a dark hue came up to Hugh and said, 'Have you seen my ewes?' To which he replied, 'If you will wait until I hew this yew I will go with you to look for your ewes.'"

After an attempt the Frenchman admitted his mistake. He used to imagine he was used to English speaking, but he would be more careful how he used the language in future.

Quick Delivery of a Letter.

It is a curious fact that a century and a half ago a letter traveled much faster than ever it has done since.

It was in 1753 that Lord March made a heavy wager that he would cause a letter to be carried 100 miles within an hour. His lordship engaged a score of cricketers, all expert throwers and catchers, had the missive enclosed in a ball, and arranging his men at intervals in a circle, got them to throw the ball as swiftly as possible from one to another.

At the end of the hour it was found that the letter had traveled almost exactly 120 miles.

A Gilbertian Situation.

What the Melbourne (Australia) papers call a Gilbertian situation was recently created in that city by the telephone girls of the central exchange. They suspended all telephone work in the busiest hour of the day in order to have themselves photographed in a group. They were allowed five minutes for the purpose by the head of the department, but the operation lasted for nearly half an hour, during which numberless fussy subscribers were "ringing up" in vain. The metropolitan fire brigade, failing to get any response, dashed at full speed to the exchange and retired disgusted on learning the true state of affairs. The Melbourne papers are flooded with letters calling for the abolition of the lady telephonist. A board is inquiring into the incident.

A man from Spokane tells how he killed a grizzly bear with a jack knife. This will be interpreted in some quarters as a dastardly slap at Mr. Roosevelt, the mightiest bear hunter and raconteur of his generation.

A temperance wave is sweeping over Ontario. There is always, says a Quebec paper, a danger of a corresponding depression following a wave. The history of temperance reform in the past proves that too much has been expected from votes, and in too many instances the latter state of "reformed" communities has been worse than the former. Eternal watchfulness is needed quite as much as votes.

It is scarcely fifty years since the first friction matches were invented. They were merely splinters or shavings of wood tipped with sulphur. The sulphur would burst into flame on being dipped into a bottle of phosphorus.

It was Professor Huxley's belief that the productivity of the sea was so great that man's influence in depleting its wealth was hardly worth considering. This view is not borne out by the experience of the last twenty years in the North Sea at least, where it appears that man's influence is by no means so harmless. In this respect, as in other ways, the great economic importance of the present investigation is brought fully into view.

Of 7,872,929 tons of coal exported by the United States during the ten months ending last October, British North America took more than 6,000,000 tons, or practically all of the anthracite and about two-thirds of the bituminous coal exported by our neighbors.

One of the most remarkable instances of the name of an article surviving its use is the penknife. We talk of it every day, but the purpose for which the penknife was originally designed exists no longer. The pen of western civilization was fabricated, as old people remember, of quills, and quill pens are still affected by old-fashioned persons, who declare that no efficient substitute has yet been found for them. The penknife of our grandfather's day was, indeed, a triumph of the cutler's art in the keenness of its edge. According to a rhymed list of the requirements of a complete writer, the scribe needed "a penknife, razor metal," always at hand and people who remember how soon a quill pen became unsuitable in the hands of vigorous writers will appreciate the necessity.

ASTHMA

A Wonderful Cure that has the Endorsement of the Medical Profession.

When the leading medical journals of Canada, England and the United States give their unqualified approval to Clarke's Kola Compound, there can be no doubt of its remarkable power. It is not only used by physicians in private practice, but is fast becoming the recognized specific for asthma in the modern hospitals. The London "Lancet," the most famous medical journal in the world, has this to say about Clarke's Kola Compound:

"Clarke's Kola Compound has gained an enviable reputation in England for successful treatment in Asthma. We are informed that its use in cases of Asthma in the Home for Incurables, Toronto, has met with marked success."

Write us to-day and we will send you a free sample of this grand medicine.

PLUMBERS AT THE ASSIZES.

Chancellor Boyd Explains the Conspiracy Charge to Jury.

Toronto, Jan. 9.—At the opening session of the Criminal Assizes here yesterday, Chancellor Boyd explained fully the plumbers conspiracy case. "There are three groups—the supply men, plumbers and employes," he said. "Justice Clute has made a careful investigation, and laid down the law in one case. If it was found that there had been a combine to stifle competition and raise prices, a true bill should be found. Where plumbing was necessary to keep you warm in winter or from being parched in summer, these men are charged with raising the prices and making you pay."

Lennox Knows No Graft.

At the civic investigation yesterday Architect Lennox swore he never told Dennis that Lynd wanted money and most positively that no amount had ever been fixed as far as he was concerned. "No graft, to my knowledge, to any civic official or anyone else has been paid in this building," he declared.

Granted an Injunction.

Another stage in the dispute over the mining claims of Cobalt was reached yesterday when the Attorney-General issued a writ against Henry Thompson and the Temiskaming and Hudson Bay Mining Co. He is asking for the forfeiture of the lease on forty acres held by the company. The Attorney-General received much of his information through the affidavits of J. H. Gaiser and based his actions upon these. In the meantime the company have secured an injunction from Justice McMahon restraining Gaiser from trespassing on the company's claim in Coleman Township and from erecting any buildings thereon.

Industrial School Burned.

Deferred from escaping either by the cold night or the fear that they would be blamed for the fire, the two hundred boys confined at Victoria Industrial School at Mimico united their officers and saved thousands of dollars worth of property in a blaze which carried away their school house yesterday afternoon. It was only by their prodigious efforts that the gymnasium and several other buildings were saved. As it was the damage will amount to something like $12,000. Insurance is about $8,000.

TACK COMBINE INVESTIGATION.

Shows There Was a Pool Between the Manufacturers.

Toronto, Jan. 9.—Samuel Frame, the Jenkins and Hardy clerk, was again Crown Attorney Curry's witness in the tack combine investigation yesterday, and the minute book the principal assistant. Mr. Curry showed there was a pool, that if a member exceeded the output limit by $1,000, he had to "ante" $250, and on the other hand if one was $1,000 behind, he drew $250 out of the "pot."

The business done by the tack association was about $150,000 a year.

Succession Duties $700,000.

Toronto, Jan. 9.—Provincial Treasurer Matheson intimated yesterday the total net proceeds from the succession duties department for 1905 would be about $700,000. The exact amount has not been fixed on account of certain refunds. This is $250,000 above the estimate. In 1904 this El Dorado department produced $460,363, which was up to the time the record. The largely increased receipts do not include the Gooderham and the major portion of those from the rich Fulford estates. Some $150,000 was received from the latter this year, but somewhere about $400,000 altogether is expected.

The Cattle Embargo.

London, Jan. 9.—(C. A. P.)—A member of the deputation received on Friday by Earl Carrington, speaking to the Canadian Associated Press, said Lord Carrington's reply was the most favorable of any president of the Board of Agriculture since the enforcement of the embargo, and, in view of the utterances of other members of the Cabinet, the members of the deputation feel very hopeful that their efforts for the removal of the restrictions will soon be brought to a successful issue.

Armour's Extract of Beef in the Kitchen.

Armour's Extract of Beef gives a rich flavor of roast beef to hash, stews, ragouts and potpies. It restores to left-over meats the full flavor lost in the first cooking. With Armour's Extract of Beef in the kitchen a soup or sauce is made ready for the table in a few minutes that it would take an hour or two to prepare with fresh meat, and it would not be as good and would cost more.

Don't forget that a 2-ounce jar of Armour's Extract of Beef will go further than an 8-ounce bottle of Fluid Beef. It is therefore less expensive. Use a quarter teaspoonful to make a cup of beef broth, etc., etc. Sold by all Grocers and Druggists.

FAMILIAR LINES.

Arranged so that the little ones can always remember them.

The boy stood on the burning deck,
His fleece was white as snow,
He stuck a feather in his hat,
John Anderson, my Joe!

"Come back, come back," he cried in grief,
From India's coral strands
The frost is on the pumpkin and
The village smithy stands.

Am I a soldier of the cross
From many a boundless plain?
Should auld acquaintance be forgot,
Where saints immortal reign?

Ye banks and braes o' bonny Doon
Across the sands o' Dee,
Can you forget that night in June—
My country, 'tis of thee!

Of all sad words of tongue or pen,
We're saddest when we sing,
To beard the lion in his den—
To set before the king.

Hark! from the tombs a doleful sound,
And Phoebus gins arise;
All mimsy were the borogroves
To mansions in the skies.

KISS ALBUM LATEST FAD.

London Girl Invents Curious Companion For Autograph Book.

A clever young Kensington woman, Miss Evans, has devised a new kind of autograph album that is likely to be popular. It is contrived so as to enable the young woman not only to collect the autograph signatures of her friends, but to preserve also the imprints of their kisses.

The book is equipped with a little pad of a soluble carmine-tinted substance upon which the lips first are lightly pressed so as to take up a little of pigment.

Then the kiss is imprinted upon the page in a space provided for the purpose, leaving a clear carmine record of the pressure of the lips. By the side of the kiss print space is another for the autograph and the date, and together the kiss and the signature make a precious and intimate keepsake.

"It is really marvelous what a lot of character there is in kisses," says Miss Evans. "People who are not students of the subject have no idea how they vary. You know no two persons have fingers prints alike, and so no two persons' kisses are the tiniest bit alike.

"I have 200 in one album and there is not one of them that you could possibly mistake for any other. The kiss prints look like kisses, too.

"The kiss album bears on the title page the motto:

"'Give me a kiss for a keepsake and a quotation dear as the remembered kisses.'

"To be complete the kiss album should be sprinkled liberally with kissing quotations from novelists as well as poets."

A Cruel Imposture.

A beggar in London recently accosted a man and whined, "I'm paralyzed in both me 'ands, mister, an' can't work, for I can't grasp anything with 'em. Could you spare me a trifle, mister?" "I'm deaf," replied the gentleman. "You'd better write down what you want to say. Here's a pencil and a piece of paper." "Deaf, is 'e?" thought the beggar. "Then 'e didn't 'ear about the paralysis." So he wrote down: "I've got a wife and six children starvin' at 'ome, an' 'em in a dreful state of destertushon." He handed the paper to the man, who said: "I thought you said you were paralysed in both hands, and couldn't grasp anything; and yet you can write!" "Didn't yer say yer was deaf?" stammered the beggar. "Yes, to find out if you were an imposter, which you are, as I supposed," replied the man. "Well, of all the bloomin' frauds, yer the biggest!" exclaimed the beggar. "The idea of yer sayin' yer was deaf, and tryin' to impose on a poor feller!" And he shuffled off sniffing the air with righteous indignation.

A Daughter of Trafalgar.

There is reported to be now living a daughter of one of Nelson's officers at Trafalgar. This is Miss Jane La Penotiere, a lady residing at Liskeard and now in her 92nd year. Miss La Penotiere's father was the lieutenant in command of His Majesty's ship Schooner Pickle, and on the eve of Trafalgar did useful service in scouting amongst the French fleet. To Penotiere was assigned the honor of bringing home Lord Collingwood's despatches with the tidings of Nelson's victory. Though the bearer of a French name La Penotiere's great grandfather, Col. Frederick La Penotiere, came over with William III. and married Bridget, daughter of the Rev. the Hon. John Fielding, Canon of Salisbury, chaplain to the King, and grand-daughter of Lord Denbigh.

The Microbes' Kitchen.

In a London hospital where bacteriology is a feature fine crops of typhoid can be seen flourishing in the scientific garden.

There is even a microbes' soup kitchen, where several highly-trained and most learned chefs in white linen overalls are composing dainty repasts for the microbes.

Their tastes require the most careful study. Over the fire potatoes are steaming in a caldron, and in the course of a few days these same potatoes may be found under glass covers with flourishing growths of various diseases on the top.

In various pots and pans the most savory soups are in progress—chicken broth, meat broth, beef jelly—all specially prepared to suit the various wants of the microbes.

English Debt to the Jews.

There are many examples of Lord Palmerston's ready wit in Sir M. E. Grant Duff's recent book, "Notes From a Diary."

In a debate about the Jews an orator rather bored the House by enumerating many of the things which the English owed to Hebrew initiative.

Lord Palmerston in reply gave the discussion a sprightlier turn.

"I quite agree with the honorable gentleman," he remarked. "Many of us owe a great deal to the Jews."

COMMONS' "DON QUIXOTE."

Col. Saunderson, Head of the Anti-Home Rule Party in Ireland—A Well-Loved Landlord.

Col. Edward Saunderson, who was raised to the peerage in the last "creation," sometimes has been described as the "Don Quixote" of the English House of Commons; and, in view of the fact that he is the head of the anti-home rule party in Ireland, it is interesting to recall that his grandfather, who was member for Cavan in the old Irish House of Commons, not only bitterly opposed the union but even declined the offer of a peerage and of a large grant of money as the price of his vote in favor of the union, of which his grandson, Col. Saunderson of to-day, is so vigorous a champion, writes the Marquise de Fontenoy.

The colonel is a typical as well as a born Irishman, and might have been born in one of the novels of Charles Lever. He is racy of the soil—a Donnybrook romance all to himself. He began life as a Liberal and served the profession of arms in the North Cork militia, which is about all the soldiering that he ever has done, although he conveys the impression of a "beau sabreur" or of the heavy Guardsman. A big, angular man, with long arms, square shoulders, a broad chest, a strong resonant voice, tinctured just a little with a brogue, and a face which, seamed and weather beaten, is nothing if not truculent, Col. Saunderson is a fighter, and, like most of his countrymen, prefers the offensive to the defensive.

Longer in Parliament than any other Irish member, he is never heard out of Irish environment, in this sense that he never speaks about anything save the sufferings and trials of the Irish landlord and the wickedness of the Irish Nationalists. In fact, he is a one idea and one speech man. He manages to bring Ireland into nearly every question that comes before the House and into every debate, just as Mr. Dick brought in the head of King Charles in "David Copperfield."

Although he spent all his Parliamentary life in fighting the Nationalists, he is quite popular among them, and, while he champions the cause of those landlords who by their absenteeism and greed are so largely responsible for all the Nationalist and agrarian movements, yet he is known throughout Ireland as so kindly and openhanded a landlord that not even in the worst days of "Capt. Moonlight" would any one have ever dreamed of attempting to shoot him.

While the colonel invites humor, it cannot be said that he is a humorist. He is so terribly in earnest. His method is to read the Irish papers sedulously and to cut out and put aside for use some day such "bits" as tell against the Nationalists and the priests and the ways of both. When the House sees Col. Saunderson diving into the pockets of his perennial frock coat it knows that "points" are coming into action, and these points never fail to carry home, and when the word passes that "Saunderson is up" terrace, dining-room, and smoking-room empty in a hurry and the House fills immediately. He is a clever artist and has painted some admirable pictures in sea and landscape, and is also a caricaturist of no mean skill, one of his most successful cartoons being that of Mr. Gladstone—of the Mr. Gladstone of the heated days of home rule just as Col. Saunderson saw him. It expresses precisely those negative qualities which the artist summed into the true type and inwardness of Gladstonianism. Besides this Col. Saunderson is a skilled boat-builder, a certificated member of the Institute of Ship Builders, and is qualified to build and to rig a three-master from its keel to its "skyscrapers." His yawls are celebrated in the north of Ireland and in the Solent, and one of them is in the possession of the Kaiser, between whom and the colonel there exists quite a warm friendship.

Let me add in conclusion that the member for County Armagh is the grand master of the Order of Orangemen, is married to a daughter of the third Lord Ventry, and boasts of having been the first to introduce bicycling in Ireland. Mounted on those huge wheeled old velocipedes which preceded the present style of machines, he presented, especially in the dusk, a terrifying spectacle, as weird as the banshee itself, as he sped along, his tall, gaunt figure apparently treading the air, and many is the Irish peasant who, after encountering the colonel in the gloaming, rushed terror-stricken to the nearest cabin, exclaiming, "Bedad, an' I met the divil."

Art is the work of man under the guidance and inspiration of a mightier power.—[illegible]

What People You Know Say About Gin Pills

THE GREAT KIDNEY CURE

TORONTO, June 6th, 1905.

I take great satisfaction in writing to you and telling you of the splendid condition of health that I am now in, which was brought about entirely by taking your Gin Pills.

For years my kidneys have been my weak spot and kept me unhealthy, and although I knew the cause, I could not get relief. Six weeks ago I heard that Gin Pills were being widely sold in Ontario, and I concluded to try them, though I did not believe that they could entirely cure me, but they have, and I am now sure that my kidney trouble has disappeared.

I will always have some of the pills on hand, and will recommend them to my friends who are troubled with ailments due to the defective work of their kidneys.

Yours respectively,
F. R. BASKERVILLE.

ANECDOTES OF NELSON

REMINISCENCES OF THE DARLING HERO OF OLD ENGLAND.

His Immortal Message, "England Expects Every Man Will Do His Duty," and its Final Evolution — Scotch Soldiers Consolation When Scotland Was Not Mentioned—The Sailor's Letter—Fatal Determination.

When Nelson visited the Royal Naval Hospital, at Yarmouth, after the battle of Copenhagen, he went round the wards, stopping at every bed, and spoke some cheering and soothing words to every man. At length he stopped opposite to a bed on which was lying a seaman who had lost his right arm close to the shoulder joint, when the following dialogue ensued:

Nelson—Well, Jack! What's the matter with you?

Seaman—Lost my right arm, your honor.

Nelson (looking down at his own empty sleeve)—Well, Jack, then you and I are spoiled for fishermen. Cheer up, my brave fellow!

Call of Duty.

Capt. Blackwood, while traveling from Portsmouth to London with despatches, called on Lord Nelson at Merton, where the hero was living in quiet retirement before going on his last voyage.

"I am sure you bring me news of the French and Spanish fleets!" exclaimed Nelson. "I think I shall yet have to beat them."

The captain informed him that the enemy's fleets were in Cadiz.

"Depend upon it, Blackwood," his lordship repeatedly said, "I shall yet give Villeneuve a drubbing."

Capt. Blackwood then left, and Nelson, after a short period of restlessness, offered his services to the Admiralty. They were at once accepted. When the great admiral arrived in London Lord Barham, First Lord of the Admiralty, gave him the Navy List and desired him to choose his officers.

"Choose yourself, my lord," was Nelson's reply. "The same spirit actuates the whole profession — you cannot choose wrong."

Home, Sweet Home.

When leaving his home at Merton Nelson seemed to have a presentment that he would never return. He thus expressed himself in his private journal:

"Friday night (Sept. 13), at half-past ten, I drove from dear, dear Merton, where I left all which I hold dear in this world, to go and serve my King and country. May the great God, whom I adore, enable me to fulfill the expectations of my country! And if it is His good pleasure that I should return, my thanks will never cease being offered up to the throne of His mercy. If it is His good providence to cut short my days upon earth I bow with the greatest submission, relying that He will protect those so dear to me whom I leave behind. His will be done. Amen! Amen!"

Valuable Quarters.

When Nelson was leaving London to board the Victory for the last time, a quantity of cabin furniture was ordered to be sent down to Portsmouth. His lordship had a farewell dinner party at his house, and while this gathering was in progress the upholsterer arrived with an account of the completion of the goods.

Nelson had him brought into the dining-room, where he conversed with him in a corner. The upholsterer stated that everything was finished and packed, and would go in the wagon from a certain inn at six o'clock.

"And you go to the inn, Mr. A——, and see them off?" asked the admiral.

"I shall, my lord," said the upholsterer; "I shall be there punctually at six."

"A quarter before six, Mr. A——," returned Lord Nelson; "be there a quarter before six. To that quarter of an hour I owe everything in life!"

The People's Homage.

No one can read without emotion the account by Southey of Nelson's departure from Portsmouth on his last voyage:

"Having despatched his business on shore, he endeavored to elude the populace by taking a by-way to the beach; but a crowd collected in his train, pressing forward to obtain a sight of his face. Many were in tears, and many knelt down before him and blessed him as he passed.

"England has had many heroes; but never one who so entirely possessed the love of his fellow-countrymen as Nelson. All men knew that his heart was as humane as it was fearless, and that there was not in his nature the slightest alloy of selfishness or cupidity; but that, with perfect and entire devotion, he served his country with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his strength; and, therefore, they loved him as truly and as fervently as he loved England.

"They pressed upon the parapet to gaze after him when his barge pushed off, and he was returning their cheers by waving his hat. The sentinels, who endeavored to prevent them from trespassing upon this ground, were wedged among the crowd, and an officer, who, not very prudently upon such an occasion, ordered them to drive the people down with their bayonets, was compelled speedily to retreat; for the people would not be debarred from gazing, till the last moment, upon the hero—the darling hero of England!"

Sailor's Letter.

When the last mail before the battle had been collected from the ships of the fleet, and the despatch-vessel was leaving with its precious freight for Old England, Nelson discovered that one of his coxswains, who had been very busy making-up the bags, had forgotten to include his own letter, which was still reposing in his pocket.

"Hoist the signal to bring her back," said Nelson, promptly. "Who knows that he may not fall in the action to-morrow?"

The despatch-vessel came back, and the sailor's letter went with the others.

Deeds, Not Words.

On one of the British liners, a short time before the opening of the battle, the commander thought he would make a rousing speech to his crew. All hands were ordered aft therefore, and the captain exclaimed:

"My lads, there's the enemy, no doubt about it. And now, my lads, if you don't take the enemy, my lads, why then—my lads—why then, my lads—the enemy will take you. Pipe down!"

After all, few speeches have been more to the point.

Timely Warning.

A midshipman named Flinn once rescued a man who had fallen overboard from the flagship and Nelson, who had witnessed the affair, was so delighted that he made the officer a lieutenant. The other middies cheered loudly in honor of the event. Putting up his hand for silence, Nelson, therefore, good-humoredly, exclaimed:

"Stop, young gentlemen! Mr. Flinn has done a gallant thing to-day, and he has done many gallant things before, for which he has got his reward; but, mind, I will have no more making lieutenants for servants falling overboard."

Officer's Sword.

A few months before his death Nelson was entertaining some officers of his fleet to dinner. They had left their swords on the quarter-deck before descending into the cabin, and Nelson examined these while the party were walking the deck after dinner. Picking up one belonging to Lieut. Lapenotiere, of the Pickle, Nelson found that the weapon stuck fast in the scabbard, and, on finally wrenching it out, saw the blade covered with rust.

"Whose sword is this?" he asked, turning to the company.

"It belongs to the commander of the Pickle, I believe, my lord," was the reply.

"A pickle-prong, indeed," was the admiral's rejoinder. Then, raising his voice, he said: "Is this your sword, Mr. Lapenotiere?"

"Yes, my lord."

"Oh, then kindly have it sent on board the Victory, and the armourer shall polish it up for you. I like, sir, to see an officer's sword as spotless as his honor."

Immortal Message.

On Nelson deciding to spur the ardor of his men with a message, his first order to Lieut. Pasco, signal officer of the Victory, was: "Say, 'Nelson confides that every man will do his duty.'" The lieutenant, after referring to the signal book, replied that the word "Nelson" was not shown in the vocabulary, and that it would have to be spelt out. "Would not 'England' do?" asked the officer.

Nelson assented. "Let it be 'England' then. 'England confides that every man will do his duty.'"

Further investigation, however, brought to light the fact that "confides" was also unknown in the book; and Lieut. Pasco suggested "expects," which was fortunately in the code.

To this Nelson readily agreed, and also to the further suggestion that "that" should be dropped, too. Thus the original message of "Nelson confides that every man will do his duty" was twisted into the better and world-famous one of "England expects every man will do his duty."

To give this message to the fleet eleven distinct hoists of flags had to be given, viz., one for each word except "duty," which had to be spelled out letter by letter, as it was not shown in the code. If the message had been given as originally suggested no less than twenty-four separate hoists of flags would have been necessary.

Scotland's Boast.

Nothing galls the natural pride of the true-blue Scot more than to have Scotland overlooked, and a rather amusing instance of this feeling occurred at Trafalgar.

Two Scotsmen, messmates and bosom cronies, happened to be stationed near each other when the celebrated signal was given from Nelson's flagship, "England expects every man will do his duty."

"Not a word aboot puir Scotland," dolefully remarked Donald.

"Man, Donald," said the other, turning to his friend, "Scotland kens weel eneuch that nae son o' hers needs to be tell't tae dae his duty; that's just a hint tae the Englishers."

"Old Coll."

Admiral Collingwood, second in command at Trafalgar, had been curiously associated with Nelson almost throughout his naval career. He formerly commanded the Excellent, and when that ship joined the fleet just before the battle of St. Vincent in 1797, Nelson gleefully exclaimed, "See, here comes the Excellent, which is as good as two added to our number!"

At Trafalgar Collingwood led the lee column in the Royal Sovereign, and, owing to an alteration of course, got into action before Nelson. As he broke through the enemy's lines, pouring in terrible broadsides, Collingwood laughed and said, "What would Nelson give to be here!"

At the same instant Nelson, watching the brave doings of the Royal Sovereign, enthusiastically exclaimed, "See how that noble fellow, Collingwood, takes his ship into action! How I envy him!"

Dying Cheers.

Among the slain of the Royal Sovereign was William Chambers, the master, who had part of his side carried away while steering the ship towards the close of the battle. Admiral Collingwood, who was standing near, said: "He laid his head upon my shoulder, and said he was slain. I supported him till two men carried him off. He could say nothing to me but bless me."

Chambers just lived until the firing ceased, when with a feeble voice he exclaimed: "Oh, could I but read the Gazette of this glorious day!" Then he gave three feeble cheers, in which he was joined by another dying man, and both immediately expired.

Fatal Determination.

Nelson was dressed in full uniform, with all his stars and orders, and his officers, knowing that he would thus form a very conspicuous mark for the enemy's riflemen, pressed him to wear a cloak to cover the decorations.

"No," said his lordship, firmly; "whatever may be the consequences, the insignia of the honors I now wear I gained by the exertions of British seamen under my command in various parts of the world, and in the hour of danger I am proud to show them and the enemies of England that I will never part with them; if it please God that I am to fall, I will expire with these trophies around my heart."

YES—THEY ARE.

We have talked so strongly about "Fruit-a-tives" being a liver tonic, and curing Constipation and Biliousness, that some may think they are not for anything else. Well, they are. "Fruit-a-tives" are a grand, good tonic for the whole system. One "Fruit-a-tives" tablet three times a day, makes rich, red blood and firm flesh. The same daily treatment and a sensible diet takes away dyspepsia and gives you sound digestion, and good appetite. "Fruit-a-tives" clear the skin of pimples and blotches—make the complexion fresh and rosy. Get "Fruit-a-tives"—take them the right way—and see how you improve.

FARM AND FIRESIDE

Useful Hints Which Will be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper.

THE IMPORTANCE OF AN AMPLE ICE SPUPLY AT CREAMERIES.

(Dairy Commissioner's Office, Ottawa.)

The season is now at hand when the creameries must lay in a stock of ice for use next summer.

The reports of Mr. C. E. Mortureux, Mr. F. A. Knowlton and other members of the Dairy Commissioner's staff, show that many creameries have in the past been out of ice before the season is finished. No creamery has a right to solicit the support of milk producers unless they are prepared to take proper care of the butter by keeping it at a sufficiently low temperature to prevent undue deterioration in quality. The age of butter is to be calculated more by the temperature at which it is kept than by the number of days that may have elapsed since it was made. Creamerymen must get rid of the idea that no harm results from a high temperature, say 50 degrees, when the butter is held only for a few days. If the butter was consumed in that time it would not be so important, but it is weeks after the butter is shipped before the bulk of it reaches the consumer, and it cannot be exposed to a high temperature ONE HOUR, to say nothing of days, without shortening its life, or in other words, the period during which it will be in its best condition. When the writer was in England last summer he was continually reminded that one of the weakest points of Canadian butter is that it does not keep well. Too high a temperature at the creamery is one of the principal reasons for this very very serious defect. Butter, unlike cheese, is at its best when newly made. Any further fermentation tend towards rancidity, staleness or other objectionable flavors. Fermentation is checked by reducing the temperature. The temperature in every creamery cold storage should be kept below 40 degrees—the lower the better — and the patrons have a right to know if this matter is being attended to. Our records show that very few of the creamery cold storages are kept below 40 degrees.

Creamery owners are sometimes satisfied with results if the buyer of the butter find no fault with the temperature at which it has been kept, but they forget that it is not the business of the buyer to point out these things. It is his business to purchase the butter and to sell it again at a profit. When he has done that he has no further interest in the matter. It is not so with the creamery owner or the patrons, whose real interest in the butter does not cease until it is finally consumed, because the condition of the butter at that time will determine whether the demand for it will be increased or not; and demand for any article on account of its superior quality is a most important factor in determining the price that will be paid for it.

These words are written with the object of inducing creamery owners to make sure of having an ample supply of ice for all purposes during the season of 1906.—J. A. Ruddick, Dairy Commissioner.

FARM HINTS FOR JANUARY.

A Good Outlook.

Another year has passed and gone. Generally it has been a favorable one, agriculturally considered. Crops have been good, especially hay and grain. Prices of farm produce have been well kept up throughout the year. Altogether we have reason to be grateful for the blessings of the old year and should be ready to commence the new one with hope and courage.

Each year should mark some progress on the farm, and the benefits gained from experience should be of the greatest value to those who are thus fortunate. Even the failures may become of value in enabling one to shun a course or method that in individual cases has been found to be unprofitable.

Securing Farm Help.

Where farmers have to depend in a large measure on hired help, it is always well to secure it early in the season. Exorbitant wages are being demanded, more than most farmers can afford to pay, and even then it is difficult finding such help as is wanted. This condition of affairs is causing farmers to make some changes in their methods of management, so as to reduce the amount of work to be done.

The farmer who is able to secure a good, trusty man or woman, even at large prices, may be considered fortunate. Where reliable help is once obtained it is well to try and keep it. In this the farmer who hires for the year has the advantage over those who only engage for six or eight months.

Making Most of the Equipment.

The cost and scarcity of hired help will tend to increased use of labor-saving implements and machines. Frequently two farmers can jointly own and use some of the more expensive machines with much advantage to themselves.

If any repairs are necessary this should also be attended to in season, so there may be no delay when the time for use has arrived. The farmer who begins the new year with the intention of reducing expenses will find many opportunities for so doing, and will also be surprised at the end of the year at the many avenues for allowing the loss. One cause of loss is the neglect of the farm wagons and implements. An account kept of the cost of repairs will show that quite a large sum goes in that direction, much of which could be saved. The use of more oil on tools, and in keeping them sharp and in the best condition for use, will save labor, which is an item that must be paid for. Too many unprofitable animals, however, cause more loss than anything else, and the farmer should begin the new year with sufficient courage to thin out the flocks and herds so as to retain only the best and most profitable.

Pure, Clean Seeds.

If the different kinds of grain intended for seed are run through a good fanning and grading mill, one that is adapted to the purpose, the light chaff portions that are of no value can be separated, as well as the seeds of weeds, leaving that to be sown of a uniform and superior quality.

Less of such seed will be required per acre and the crop will be more uniform in growth and yield, as well as heavier in weight. Corn may be improved by careful selection and care of the seed from year to year and so can potatoes.

Often the yield and quality of the grains and potatoes can be quite a little improved by obtaining seed of the same varieties from a different location and soil. Try this method and see.

Much care should be taken in obtaining the various kinds of grass and clover seeds, as these often contain injurious seeds of weeds that thus become widely scattered over the country. Perhaps this cannot always be avoided, but if obtained from reliable dealers and of those grades, not the cheapest and poorest, there should be some degree of safety.

The same may be said of the seeds for the garden. Buy from these dealers that have a reputation at stake.

Brood Sows and Young Pigs.

Those making a specialty of raising and fattening pigs will find something to occupy their attention during the winter. From quite a long experience we find that with proper quarters and care there is little trouble with getting along in cold weather. The brood sows and young pigs should be kept where the conditions are so favorable that there will be no more difficulty in getting along than in warm weather. A little more time and care may be required, but this can be afforded usually in winter. With the skimmilk from the dairy and a proper amount of grain feed, it is a pleasure to note how these youngsters will grow and fatten at the same time. But this will only occur where there are warm, dry, comfortable quarters with a good bed and plenty of nutritious food. Then they will eat to the fill, and lie down contented and grow fat. The sows should be sparingly fed when not suckling their pigs, but they should have plenty of suitable feed.

The Ewes in Winter.

The care of the ewes during the time they are raising their lambs is all important. They should not only have such food as will produce a good flow of milk, but the strength and vigor of the ewes should be considered as well; and they should have enough of carbonaceous food to aid in this direction. A ration composed of born, oats and bran, equal parts by measure, we have found very satisfactory. For roughage we prefer nicely cured clover, provided it is fine in the stem. Sheep do not like coarse hay of any kind, and for this reason mammoth clover is not a desirable food, but clover and timothy may be made a desirable feed if cut when green. In fact, we have many times been able to produce better sheep hay from clover and timothy than from clover alone, because the two together grew more thickly and finer than the clover alone, but too many destroy its good qualities by allowing it to become too ripe and by overdrying. Previous to the lambing season, corn stover is a good feed, to be fed during the day, provided the weather and the ground is suitable to feed it on a sod. But we have not had very satisfactory results from feeding cut fodder in the mangers; and to feed whole fodder in the sheds is not worthy of consideration. Further, by feeding it on a sod has the advantage of giving exercise to the ewes, which is very desirable during pregnancy. In fact, in our practice we keep the ewes confined as little as possible up to the lambing season, after which they are housed very closely. They should have succulent food of some kind a month previous to the lambing season until pasture is ready. And for this purpose roots are very desirable. Almost any kind may be utilized, but mangels are preferable on account of their good keeping qualities, but in practice we also use a great many turnips.

It is all important to have good, fresh spring water convenient, and so arranged that they may get it easily. If they have to put their front feet into the water in order to reach it, the chances are they will do without, otherwise they will consume a great amount while being fed on dry feed. During a severe cold spell we often water in the stable while the lamb is very young, and under these conditions we can better determine the amount they will consume.

The Honey Crop.

If you wish to surprise your family or friends with a nice article, take some liquid honey which has recently been separated from the comb, pour it into stout paper bags and set it in a cool, dry place to solidify, which it will do very rapidly during cool weather. When ready for use tear the paper bag from the candied honey, as you would the skin off a bologna, cut off a slice and serve. We have known people to prefer it to comb honey.

Planning Campaign.

This is now comparatively a time of rest for the farmer, the short days are partly taken up with the daily routine of chores, and perhaps replenishing the supply of fuel, but when the wind howls outside and the snow drifts into every nook and corner, he can sit by his comfortable fireside content that these days of leisure have been well earned.

Before all great campaigns of either war or politics, before great feats of the architect or civil engineer, there is always a period of reasoning and of consultation. Plans are carefully weighed, the whole ground is gone over and mapped out, past mistakes noted to be avoided in future, and in all this lies the measure of success."

And yet the science of agriculture is the greatest of them all. Neither the lives nor the wealth of a nation depend upon the successful building of a cantilever bridge, the skilful making of a great canal or upon political differences. But it is the success or failure of the tiller of the soil, the man with the hoe and at the plow, which turns the tide of the nation's weal or woe. And so during these months of rest from the hard labors of seed time and harvest, let us concentrate our thoughts upon the best plans through which we may carry forward the work of the coming season.

There is always wisdom in counsel, and we believe that the farmers of a neighborhood in forming a club for the purpose of comparing their past successes and failures, and formulating plans for the future, cannot spend the long winter evenings with more profit or entertainment.

The subject of fertilizers is one which cannot be studied or discussed too much and the farmers of any community will act wisely if they make this an especial topic of discussion.

The farmer should be a careful observer. As he goes about the country he should have his eyes open, ready and quick to see anything that will be of interest or use to him in his business. And there will generally be something to see and benefit by.

During the winter season, when work does not press, occasional visits should be made to other farmers for the purposes of observation and comparison.

There will usually be something found that will be worthy of notice and that can be successfully put in operation at home. No man can be supposed to have all the good things and each can better by the other's experience. Ideas and suggestions can in this way be picked up that will be worth more than a day's outing to obtain. Even the mistakes of others can be made useful in their avoidance.

The farmer in his provision for the winter's work and entertainment should not neglect to have plenty of good and suitable reading. There is usually more time for reading in the winter than during the rest of the year. There should be the good readable agricultural and religious journal or something for the children and whatever pertains to local happenings.

Every farmer should have a library where his boys and girls will find good reading. In the library have a good supply of agricultural books, and let the boys read up on their business; also take several farm papers and other good reading. Make the farm businesslike and the boys will want it, for it is a business and an important one.

Don't forget and keep throwing those ashes out on a pile and all is lost except what the chickens get. Save and apply to the land. Keep them dry until ready to apply. A few may be all right for the chickens, but so many will do them no more good.

FITTING FOR EXHIBITION.

In order to be successful in preparing fowls for exhibition, the poulterer must take things by the forelock. The birds, in truth, should be properly fed and kept in a healthy condition from the first. Unless they are healthy, it is impossible to obtain the fine gloss on the feathers and the red combs, so valuable in winning prizes.

Accordingly, with a good flock to choose from, the pair to be sent to the shows should be selected about a fortnight beforehand. A nice, dry place, the floor of which is thickly covered with straw, should be prepared for them, and to keep them occupied and become thoroughly acquainted with each other, a few handfuls of wheat scattered among the straw. Thus left alone together, a pair of birds will become so accustomed to one another as seldom to quarrel when on exhibition.

As to further care, give them, daily, clean, fresh water to drink in which a little sulphate of iron has been dissolved. This will bring a bright red to their ears and combs, let alone improving their general appearance. Give them, also, oatmeal and cornmeal, boiled together, and at all time, plenty of green food. Don't aim to get them too fat. Rather endeavor to keep them in good health, and, at the same time, procure a nice gloss on the feathers.

Their last meal the night before starting for the shows, should consist of buckwheat and hemp seed in equal proportions; this will improve the appearance of their combs as well as plumage. While en route to the place of exhibition, it is sometimes advisable, if the distance is very great, to give each bird about half a tablespoonful of port wine; they will then sleep or doze nearly all the way, and so lose but little of their vigor. To keep them in good condition during the exhibition, the week preceding, rice, prepared by boiling one pound in a pint of water, and adding a little milk and a handful of coarse brown sugar, should be fed once or twice.

THE VETERINARIAN.

Answers to Correspondents.

Eye Running—Mare seems to have stuck something into her eye while grazing; it is running and turning white. Can you tell me what is good to use for it? (Cocaine, 20 grains; fluid extract of belladonna, 1 drachm, fluid extract of opium 30 minims, sulphate of zinc 20 grains; water four drachms, mix. Put some of this in the eye twice a day with a camel's hair pencil. Open lid with thumb and finger and lay brush on eyeball; let go the lids, then pull brush out and put two dips of the brush in the eye at each dressing.)

Cracked Hoof — Driving mare is troubled with crack in forefeet. A crack which appeared a year ago gradually worked off, but a new one somewhat shallow in character, has since developed. It is situated about three inches from heel, and though shallower than the previous one, seems to make her slightly lame. Can you suggest cause and treatment?—(Have shoe removed and foot cut down as much as practicable, then cut out the crack in shape of a letter V, an inch wide at top and about an inch in length. Put on a bar shoe and apply blister a month later. If you can let the horse be idle for a while so that a solid block of hoof can grow in the V, you will have a sound foot.)

Lameness — Horse lame since May 15 last; leg had swollen previous to that in barn, but was not lame. He was driven some 18 miles next day; was very lame in left hind foot, which was swollen large. It was poulticed, and broke, discharging freely; in a few minutes after it broke it was all clear from bunch, but soon came back and filled with a sort of core. This left a hard bunch; it ran two or more weeks; pains him a great deal; can drive him only on a walk. Have blistered his leg once. (You do not give a clear statement of the present condition of the leg. Clip hair all around and from hoof to body. Rub well two or three times a day with some of the following, as warm as he can bear it; Nitrate of potass., 8 oz.; muriate of ammonia, 2 oz.; vinegar, 1 qt.; water 1 qt.; mix. Give as a drench once a day for three days the dose as follows; Spirits of turpentine, 3 oz.; linseed oil, 6 oz.; mix. Give in feed twice a day for a week an ounce of the following, and after that half an ounce: Iodide of potass., 4 oz.; water, 1 qt.; mix. Refer to this page.)

Cough—Gelding, weight 1200, about nine years old, spirited, rather nervous, bought 2 1-2 years ago, has coughed a little ever since, and gradually reached his present condition. At present he coughs quite bad, rattling sound in head; some discharge from nose; peculiar motion in flanks, as if afflicted with heaves; bad odor about him all the time. He feels good; eats well, only a little particular what he eats; not fond of ground feed, eats oats, and grinds them well; also, some bran. Never eats heavy of hay, and now we feed very little, and that is wet. He never drinks much water at one time. He is a good horse, and we should like instructions as to treatment. (Barbadoes aloes, 6 dr.; powdered gentian, 2 dr.; and a sufficient quantity of syrup; mix, and make into a ball. Give this, and feed bran mashes for 24 hours; water as usual; no hay. After that, feed hay and grain as usual. Horse may be exercised, but not worked for two days. Give 20 drops hom. tincture bryonia on tongue every three hours for 2 weeks; then report. Feed corn fodder and oat straw, instead of hay after 4th day.)

If you are not troubled with rheumatism, and never have been, be thankful and take good care of yourself. If you are a victim of its torturing pains do not be discouraged.

HAVE YOU RHEUMATISM?

You are not doomed to go on suffering forever, because there is a sure and speedy cure for you in Tuck's Rheumatic Bone Oil. Perhaps you have tried a lot of patent medicines and now have no confidence in any. Do not condemn this until you have tried it. We have such confidence in it that if you try it and it does not cure you we will refund your money. It is a powerful, penetrating oil that acts directly on the bone—the seat of the disease—and has brought deliverance to so many that we have no hesitation in saying it will deliver you. Here is one case:

Dear Sirs.—I am free from rheumatism to-day because I used Tuck's Bone Oil. I had rheumatism in my hands and feet and thought at one time that my life was going to be ruined by it. I consulted a doctor and tried various remedies, but while some of them that I took internally made me feel better for a time, none of them took the pain away. After I had suffered for six months or more doctoring all the time, I was advised to try Tuck's Rheumatic Bone Oil. I did and I never can be thankful enough to the man who told me to get it. I had not used a bottle until I was better and before the second one was done my joints were loosened up, the pain was gone, and I was well. Tuck's Bone Oil did it. That was six years ago and I have not been bothered since.

H. S. BROWN, Merrickville.

DISCRIMINATING LADIES.

Enjoy Using Herpicide on Account of Its Distinctiveness.

The ladies who have used Newbro's Herpicide speak of it in the highest terms, for its quick effect in cleansing the scalp of dandruff and also for its excellence as a general hair-dressing. It makes the scalp feel fresh and it allays that itching which dandruff will cause. Newbro's Herpicide effectively cures dandruff, as it destroys the germ that causes it. The same germ causes hair to fall out, and later baldness; in killing it Herpicide stops falling hair and prevents baldness. It is also an ideal hair dressing, for it lends an aristocratic charm to the hair that is quite distinctive.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Eggs Scrambled in Milk.

Heat one cup of milk, melt in it a teaspoonful of butter and stir into it six eggs which have been beaten just enough to mix the yolk and the whites. Stir constantly until the eggs thicken and as soon as you have tolerably firm mixture salt to taste, add a tablespoonful of minced parsley and serve.

Boston Scallops.

Break into bits a half dozen raised biscuits, and allow them to soak for a few moments in a cupful of sweet milk. Then add one cupful of grated cheese two tablespoonfuls of melted butter, a little salt and pepper; mix well, put into buttered scallop dishes and bake slowly for twenty minutes.

Tapioca Consomme.

Boil three tablespoonfuls of minced onion and two tablespoonfuls of minced celery together for an hour and a half; then strain the water and add to it five tablespoonfuls of pearl tapioca, and cook for another hour: then pour in one quart of milk, a dessertspoonful of salt and a generous sprinkling of pepper. Beat three spoonfuls of butter with two of flour, and stir into the soup. Allow it to cook for twenty minutes, then serve.

Sand Tarts.

Beat separately the yolks and whites of four eggs, then fold together and add one cup of butter, 1 1-2 cupfuls of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of water, one-half teaspoonful of baking powder, mix in flour sufficient to make stiff enough to roll. Roll out thin, cut in shapes, sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon and bake in a moderate oven.

Creamed Beef.

Scrape perfectly lean beef to pulp, mince, put in a pan with salt, pepper, one tablespoonful of water, two tablespoonfuls of rich cream, butter the size of an egg. Cook two minutes, stirring constantly. Add one tablespoonful of biscuit dust, one teaspoonful of made mustard.

THE FAMILY IN INDIA.

A Man Does Not Leave His Parents After He Marries.

In India a man does not leave his parents after marriage to live with his wife, as he does in this country, but he stays at home and the wife becomes a member of his family, being treated as a daughter of the husband's parents, writes the Swami Abhedananda. The old Jewish law, "Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother and shall cleave to his wife" (Gen. xxiv.), has no place in Hindoo society. It is considered to be extremely selfish to be separated from the parents for the sake of a wife. Parents, indeed, have a greater claim upon their children in India than in any part of the world.

This joint family system is a very old institution handed down through generations. It has great value in developing humane qualities like fellow feeling and sympathy, and in extending the field of love among all such relatives as live under one roof. To-day there are to be found families which consist of nearly fifty members living together in perfect harmony and peace, and the moral standard among them is kept so high that each husband looks upon every other woman of the household as his mother, while every wife looks upon all other men as her children.

The members of such a household daily perform their respective duties. The women divide the work of housekeeping among themselves and take the entire management in their own hands, following the direction of the most elderly lady of the family. Whatever they decide becomes a law in the home. Men attend to their business, deal with the outside world, supply the needs of the family and at the beginning of each month give to the women of the family enough money to meet all the expenses of the household.

Universal Penny Post.

In a letter published in The London Times, Mr. Henniker Heaton, M. P., marshals afresh the arguments in favor of universal penny postage, and at the same time made public a number of letters from prominent men who have consented to join the league that the hon. member is forming to promote the much-desired reform. The existing machinery is ample to meet any development of correspondence, Mr. Henniker Heaton contends, and to show the profits earned by the principal postoffices in Europe, Africa, and Asia gives the appended figures, the amounts being reckoned in francs:—

Germany	76,812,000
Austria	4,776,000
Belgium	13,612,000
Spain	16,260,000
France	73,863,000
Great Britain	120,000,000
Hungary	15,350,000
Italy...	4,000,000
Japan	12,700,000
Holland	5,000,000
Russia..	78,000,000
Portugal	2,300,000
Sweden	2,600,000
Turkey	4,950,000

International halfpenny postage already exists for printed matter, and there is a penny postal rate between Canada and the United States, while Germany and Austria form one postal union. Here the hon. member denounces so glaring an anomaly as the charge of 2 1-2d. for sending a letter to France, only 21 miles away, while 1d. is charge for sending a letter to Fiji, 11,000 miles. He believes that the loss to the revenue due to universal penny postage would be £125,000 in the first year, which, with the development of correspondence, would probably be turned into a profit at the end of the third or fourth year. To establish a penny post to the United States would cost, he estimates £25,000, and to counterbalance this let it be considered that last year Americans of British origin sent to poor relatives in Britain no less than £1,559,579 in money orders of from 5s. to £5. If the charge were reduced to a penny, British emigrants would write three letter home where at present they write only one. Nor would trade be imperilled, as the English merchant could address five foreign customers for the same money as he now spends in addressing two.

A Puzzled Husband.

Patient Man—Suppose a woman makes it so hot for her husband that he can't live with her and leaves her. What can she do?

Lawyer—Sue him for support.

"Suppose she has run him so heavily into debt that he can't support her, because his creditors grab every penny as quick as he gets it?"

"If for any reason he fails to pay her the amount ordered, he will be sent to jail for contempt of court."

"Suppose she drives him out of the house with a flat iron and he's afraid to go back?"

"She can sue him for desertion."

"Well, I don't see anything for me to do but go and hang myself."

"It's against the law to commit suicide, and if you are caught attempting it you'll be imprisoned. Six and eightpence, please. Good day!"—London Tit-Bits.

Brummel and Byron.

Byron while walking along Piccadilly one bright summer morning encountered Beau Brummel, who was returning from his tailor's.

"How are you, Brummel?" said the poet.

"Pretty well, thank you," returned the beau. "I've been reading 'Don Juan.'"

"Yes?" said Byron, with a smile. "There is some clever rhyme in it."

"So?" observed Byron, with affected surprise.

"And some pretty good versification."

"Ah!" returned the poet.

"Why don't you try your hand at poetry, Byron?" asked Brummel.

The two never spoke to each other again.

Dean Hole and the Oxford Snob.

Dean Hole, the distinguished English churchman, dearly loved a good joke. One day a somewhat snobbish Oxford friend of his, wishing to impress upon the dean the high social character of his familiar acquaintances, wrote him a letter beginning "My dear countess," and then scratching out "countess" substituted "Hole."

Whereupon the dean, not to be outdone, began his reply, "My dear queen," and then drew his pen through "queen" and substituted "Dick."

TAVERNS OF OLD EDINBURGH

They Were Popular Resorts With Classes of Men and Permitted Escape From Fireside Dullness.

Some excuse may be found for universal devotion to tavern life which formerly prevailed in Edinburgh in the harshness of the northern winter, says a writer in The London Globe. "It is one of the vilest climates under Heaven," wrote Stevenson, as he shivered at the remembrance of it; "you are liable to be beaten upon by all the winds that blow, to be drenched with rain, to be buried in cold sea fogs out of the east, or to be powdered with the snow as it comes flying southward from the Highland hills."

It is small wonder that a Scotsman's ideal of enjoyment should have been, a warm cozy corner by the fireside in one of the innumerable "howfs" or "laighs" (taverns and oyster cellars) which studded the closes on either side of the High street, or that every poet, from Allan Ramsay to Fergusson and Burns should have sung of the delights of the joyous evenings at John Dowie's or the Crochallan Club, with high jinks, the uproarious mirth, the hilarious songs, when the air was thick with the steam from the punch bowl.

Another reason for the popularity of the tavern was the cramped space and limited accommodation in the tall flats and lands, where a large family was often crowded into a couple of small rooms. There could be no comfort or social enjoyment in such narrow quarters, and so the tavern became the mutual rendezvous for business and pleasure, and it was here that doctors would see their patients, lawyers interview their clients and tradesmen meet their customers. Indeed, the time had not long passed since the Lord Provost of the day would invite his guests to supper at Clerihugh's or Fortune's.

Even men of the highest social position preferred the ease and freedom from restraint at the "howf" to the decorous dullness of their own firesides, and just as the Baron of Bradwardine's guests left the castle to finish the evening in the genial license of Luckie MacAlroy's tavern, so Lord Cockburn in his youth saw some dozen of the aristocracy of Midlothian, including the Duke of Buccleugh and the Lord Advocate, crowded in the low-roofed room of a village alehouse drinking huge potations of claret and whiskey punch and making the rafters echo with songs and toasts and uproarious festivity.

These taverns varied in degree and quality from the larger and more fashionable "howfs," frequented by the lords of sessions, the great advocates and men of letters, to the humble "laigh shops," where clerks and shop assistants repaired after the day's work, and where fun and merriment were as unrestrained as at "Poosie Nancy's" which sheltered the "Jolly Beggars." The prices—for eatables, at all events—ruled low, and at many of the clubs with strange and convivial names, of which the humor has now evaporated, a man might sup frugally off collops or a haddock or a roasted skate and onions for a few pence.

The quality as well as the quantity of wine and spirits consumed by the hardened revellers of that day is appalling to a more temperate age. For the humbler toper there was "twopenny ale" in mutchkins, as strong as the home brew immortalized by Nyren, and drams of gin as potent as turpentine. For richer customers there was genuine mountain dew—Glenlivet and usquebaugh; huge jorums of steaming punch prepared after some immemorial recipe like that of Bailie Nicol Jarvie "tappithens," mantling with claret fresh drawn from the cask, and at a later date port, strong and fiery as the Newcastle "blackstrap," of which Lord Eldon used to drink his three bottles with impunity. It is no wonder that nights passed in the consumption of such potent beverages should have played havoc with the strongest constitutions, or that sobriety at table should have been regarded as the exception rather than the rule.

Concerning Orange Blossoms.

Authorities speak of the use of orange blossoms at weddings as due to the fact that the orange tree, bearing its ripe, golden fruit and fragrant flowers at the same time, is a symbol of fruitfulness; and this, we may take it, is the main reason of the pleasing custom. In Crete, the bride and bridegroom are sprinkled with orange flower water; and in Sardinia, oranges are attached to the horns of the oxen which draw the nuptial carriage. Dr. Brewer says that Saracen brides carried orange blossoms at weddings, and suggests that our modern custom is a survival, or revival of their. In "Vanity Fair" Thackeray speaks of orange blossoms as "touching emblems of female purity imported by us from France." This happy thought, however, is merely a fancy of his, for orange blossoms, according to French scholars and writers, simply indicate that "mademoiselle" has attained the status of "madame."

Thrust A Pitchfork Into The Intruder.

REV. DR. JAMES GARDINER, OF THIS CITY, HANDLED A SUPPOSED BURGLAR PRETTY ROUGHLY THIS MORNING, GIVING HIM A TASTE OF COLD STEEL—A WARLIKE OLD DIVINE.

What was supposed to be a daring and unsuccessful attempt at burglary occurred on Evans street, near Albert College, at about 2 o'clock this morning.

That the party did not enter the residence was due to the sturdy resistance made by the man of the house, who was the Rev. Dr. James Gardiner, a venerable superannuated minister of the Methodist church, who is in his 85th year.

A representative of The Intelligencer this morning visited the scene and from Mrs. Gardiner learned the particulars of the affair.

At the hour above mentioned Mrs. Gardiner, who was awake, was startled by the breaking of glass. She awoke the Doctor and also a lady friend, who was in the house. They went down stairs and in the porch, at the front of the house, saw a man.

He had broken a glass panel out of the door and had his hand inside, endeavoring to find the key so as to unlock the door. He was ordered away, but made no effort to do so, but continued to feel for the key. Then for a few minutes a battle royal ensued.

The old Doctor at first used his cane, but that did not deter the man or frighten him away. The friend who was with the old gentleman, broke an umbrella over the man, who still continued to try to force his way in.

It happened that a four-pronged pitchfork was in the house, and this Dr. Gardiner secured. Through the opening in the front door the Doctor thrust this weapon, at the intruder, and it had the desired effect. The man caught hold of the fork and made every effort to wrench it away, but was unable to do so, and in the struggle the man outside was severely wounded by the pitchfork.

Judging from the blood in the porch and on the walk leading to the door the wound must have been quite serious.

At this juncture a second man appeared upon the scene, and he was called upon to assist in securing the man stabbed, but, instead, the two went away together.

Neighbors were aroused and every effort was made to trace the men, but light snow, which was falling, prevented this.

However, blood stains were to be seen on the walk for some distance.

The police were notified of the affair and are making every effort to find who the parties are.

The supposition at first was that the second man was a guard near by, watching and waiting until his companion had entered the house.

Mystery Cleared Up.

The matter was this morning investigated by Constable Hayes, and it did not take that astute officer long to find out the facts. It seems that there was no attempt at robbery, as was at first supposed. It was simply a bad case of misunderstanding. A young man, who lives close to Rev. Dr. Gardiner's, slipped off the water wagon last night and, when he went home, tried to make his way into the wrong house. The reception he received must have certainly astonished him. The wonder is that Dr. Gardiner and his companion did not recognize the man, who, of course, had he been in his sober senses, would at once have seen his mistake. The victim, is known as a quiet, inoffensive young man, who bears an excellent character. Just at present he is in pretty bad shape, being confined to his bed, with cuts in his head, in one of which the attending doctor had to put several stitches; also many bruises and wounds in his arms through which the tines of the fork had been thrust.

Rev. Dr. Gardiner, we are told, feels very badly over the unfortunate affair, as between his family and the injured man's there has always existed the most friendly relations.

It seems to have been a comedy of errors, which came near to being turned into a tragedy.

Broke his Leg

William Zufelt, a young man who resides on James street, at noon today met with an accident which will lay him up for some time. He was, with some companions, passing up Catherine street, going home to dinner, when he was tripped, either accidentally or otherwise, and fell heavily to the sidewalk. The fall caused a fracture to the right leg just above the ankle. The unfortunate young man was conveyed home and a physician summoned to reduce the fracture.

Fatal Mishap to A Wedding Party.

EXPRESS TRAIN STRUCK A SLEIGH AND INSTANTLY KILLED THREE PEOPLE.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

Montreal, Jan. 9. — Three members of a wedding party were struck by the Montreal Portland Express and instantly killed at Upton, this province, early last evening.

The party, consisting of Aime Pisanneault, his bride, who was Donalda Lavalee, and a dozen others occupying sleighs, were driving from Roxton Pond to Upton, where they were all to dine at the home of the bridegroom. Muffled closely, they evidently did not hear the oncoming express. Five sleighs crossed the track safely, but the sixth, carrying Caliste Lavalee, his wife and son, the father, mother and brother of the bride, was struck and all the occupants were instantly killed.

Awful Result of Shifting Clay.

TWO SCORE PEOPLE BURNED TO DEATH IN HAVERSTRAW, N.Y., TENEMENT HOUSES.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

Haverstraw, N.Y., Jan. 9.—Shortly before midnight last night seven tenement houses on Rutland street, in the east end of the town, undermined by the shifting clay that had been softened by yesterday's snowfall, with their three score sleeping occupants, toppled over the brink of a gravel pit and crumbled to pieces.

The houses, which were of wood, were set on fire from overturned stoves and the debris was soon a mass of flames.

Some fifty or more inmates escaped with more or less serious injuries, while a number, variously estimated at 15 to 18, are believed to have been killed outright or burned to death.

So far ten bodies have been taken out of the debris burned beyond recognition.

Did Not Hear the Train

William Kelly, an aged resident of Tyendinaga township, was killed yesterday on the line of the Grand Trunk Railway near Marysville. He was walking along the tracks, and being somewhat deaf, did not hear an approaching freight train, which struck him, killing him instantly. Deceased was 70 years of age and a respected farmer.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

HOCKEY.

Belleville Made a Grand Stand Finish

It seemed like old times in the rink last night, when the Belleville and Port Hope juniors were playing hockey, and a crowd of shouting enthusiasts were "rooting" for the home team to beat all the bands in the city. Alas! It made one think of the good old days, when Belleville had a team which could show its heels to the best of them. Will we ever have another like it? In the words of the poet, you can search me, but they do say that there will be a fine new rink and a cracking good team in this city next winter. However, let's talk about the match last night. The Port Hope bunch showed up as about the huskiest crowd of juniors you ever saw. Their defence men were big enough to go in the middleweight class, and the team as a whole showed up as a well-balanced, skilful aggregation, not any to gentle in their methods, either. That Belleville beat them speaks volumes for the grit and good condition of the local boys. It was just these two things that kept the Port Hopers from galloping home with the big end of the score. The locals played an aggressive game, but have not learned yet to depend much on each other. Some of them do not hold their positions quite so well as they should, either. However, in pluck and aggressiveness the boys are the Real Gilt-Edged Thing, and the way they, last night, stuck to the big Port Hopers and snatched victory out of the jaws of defeat was enough to make every man in the rink uncork the best cheer that was in him. The story of the game, in brief, is that for three-quarters of the match the visitors had the best of it; the score was 4-2 in their favor, and they were just as cheerful as a coon with chicken for dinner. Then a change came over the scene. The Belleville boys came with a rush, and the western lads faded, the locals eventually winning by 6 to 5, after as exciting a twenty minutes as anybody would want. It was great. To win is gratifying, of course, but to win after the game has about been given up for lost puts one in the very zenith of good humor. What do you think? And the moral of all this is that a hockey game is never over till it is played out and the Belleville boys are great finishers. The ice was in grand condition when Referee J. B. McArthur, of Toronto, rang his bell for hostilities to begin, and the teams faced each other this way;

Belleville goal
Phillips
Pepper
Connolly
Weller
Burke Allen Alford
Murphy Mercer R. Hemmick
A. Hemmick
McLean
Bennett

Port Hope goal

It was 8.40 when the match started, later than there was any necessity for. Belleville started off with a rush, and had two close tries, but the Port Hope goal-keeper was right on the job. All night long this young fellow played a star game, and showed himself good enough for intermediate company. On the third attack, however, Belleville scored. Port Hope got the next two goals, and had rather the best of the play. The local forwards were mixing it up with the husky Port Hope defence, and were cheerfully getting the worst of it. Then the home lads braced a bit and got the next goal, tying the score, but a minute before half-time the visitors notched another. Half-time score, 3-2, in favor of Port Hope. It was a blue look-out for those who had staked their ducats on "Sandy" Burrows' men.

When play started again the Port Hopers jumped into the game and for a time put the home lads entirely on the defensive. The visitors scored after about ten minutes' hard play, which probably exhausted them more than it did the Belleville boys. Then the locals came to life and, with grim determination on each youthful face, started to bore in on the Port Hope goal. They simply would not be denied. They scored the next goal, and the spectators made the rafters ring. Score 4—3, in favor of Port Hope. "By the Piper that played before Moses," said the man on the next block, "we're going to beat 'em yet." He'll hang out his shingle as a prophet next week. "Tie the score," shouted the crowd, and the locals cheerfully did as they were told. It was pretty exciting just now, if anybody asks you. The locals were boring in on the visitors' defence, and the tables had turned with a vengeance, Belleville scored again, after playing the visitors off their feet. Score 5—4 in favor of Belleville. There was only about two minutes left to play, and it looked sure for us. But you never can tell. A swift Port Hope forward followed up a long shot, and a rather careless bit of play by the local defence gave him a chance to score. Full time came with the score a tie, 5 all.

Ten minutes' rest followed, and then two five minute ends. In the first five minutes there was no scoring; in the second five Belleville shot a goal and won as hard-fought and exciting a match as was ever seen on local ice. It was a hard game for the visitors to lose, but, though defeated, they were by no means disgraced. When in better condition, that Port Hope bunch will make any of them travel some.

Caught in the Net.

Belleville has a fine defence in Connolly and Pepper.

Weller's proper position would seem to be on the wing.

It was a fairly clean game, though 9 Belleville men and 6 Port Hopers were penalized. Most of the locals were given rests for bodying their checks into the fence, something which used to be accepted without a murmur.

A little more seasoning, and the younger lads on the Belleville team will make their mark in hockey. They are lacking in steadiness at present.

Referee McArthur was very impartial, but not any too strict on offsides.

An effort should certainly be made to start future matches on time. It is no joke for ladies to sit around the rink on a cold night waiting for the trouble to begin. Advertise the time to start, and then start on time.

The officials last night were; Timekeepers—Port Hope, A. Alcott; Belleville, Mr. Vandervoort. Goal umpires, Port Hope, A. Beamish; Belleville, Mr. Heaslip. Penalty timer, Mr. Fish.

SPORTING NOTES.

A bitter game is expected when the Federal league teams of Brockville and Smith's Falls meet in the latter place to-morrow. There is a Belleville boy on each team.

Peterboro and Port Hope intermediates played in Port Hope last night, and the Petes won by 8 to 3. It looks like the intermediate championship for Peterboro this year.

Toronto Telegram: The Federal League seems to be in a position to advertise "Free fight goes with every game." In the Brockville game, Larose, of Cornwall, was on the bench seven times, and he generally had company. The league might also put up a sign, "Players will please leave their axes in the dressing rooms." A Cornwall man feels only half dressed without an axe.

No, there wasn't a reason in the world why Hod Stuart should have been mobbed in Portage Lake. He simply skated back on the ice after he had been ruled off for the game and clubbed Hall over the head. If the mob had chased Hod clear out of the game they would have simplified matters a whole lot.

Other O.H.A. junior games last night resulted thus: Midland 14, Victoria Harbor 6. Woodstock 7, London 6.

OLD LONDON STONE SIGNS.

Ancient Figures Which Are Rapidly Disappearing Before the March of Modern Improvements.

A new London is rapidly rising around us—a London of to-day, which is ruthlessly erasing the few remaining relics of the past, almost every new building supersedes one which served to link us with less utilitarian, but more romantic, times. Care is certainly taken in the process of demolition to preserve any portable fragments of antiquarian interest, but a mere collection of stones or carvings in a museum is a poor substitute for the original building of which they formed a part. More commendable is the plan of incorporating such relics in the new building which displaces the old, so that they may remain connected with the site, and this practice was followed in the city with many of the old carved signs which adorned the houses of the seventeenth century, says a London correspondent. Several of these may be found, with a little search, in dark alleys, or built high up in walls, looking strangely forlorn and out of place in their modern settings, but reminding one forcibly of the old associations of the spots they mark.

One of the best known of these is the "Boy and Pannier," in the narrow passage between Paternoster row and Newgate street, opposite the postoffice buildings. This is mentioned by Stow as far back as 1539, though there is some doubt as to whether the present is the original sign. It represents a boy sitting astride what is said to be a basket, commemorative of the custom of bakers' boys vending their wares there. The inscription beneath, setting forth that the spot is the highest ground within the city, has nothing to do with the sign, and was probably brought from some other site and built into the wall with it for convenience sake. Anyway, its contention is not justified by fact. Not far off, high up in the wall, forming the front of No. 37 Cheapside, is an heraldic sign, a swan with a collar and chain, but its associations with the site are unknown. Close by, within No. 47, the mutilated figures of a bear, muzzled, is preserved, which was dug up some twenty years ago when excavating for the foundations of the present building. There is also a bear on the front of a house in Addle street, at the top of Alderman Bury, and another in Lower Thames street, both bearing date 1670, and the initials, probably of the builder and his wife. All three animals have a substantial collar, and a chain across their backs, but the one in Cheapside faces the opposite way to the others. This is much the most lifelike of the three. There used to be a similar bear, carved in wood on the front of the house in Piccadilly, where the Citerion now stands, and this is now going to decay in a garden near Croydon.

High up in front of No. 70 Alderman Bury is a good example of "The Pelican," carved in the legendary attitude of drawing blood from her breast to feed her young, and at the corner of Gresham street and Old Jewry is a female head with a helmet, probably meant for Minerva. The Prince of Wales' feathers, with the date 1670, appears in St. Paul's churchyard, at the corner of Cannon alley, and a sign dated 1669, representing a fox sitting on its haunches, is shown inside No. 26 Lombard street, which, like the bear in Cheapside, was dug up on, or near the site. Built into the wall of the staircase just inside the doorway of 28 Budge row is an excellently preserved sign, that of the Leopard. This may conceivably be the original sign of the hall of the Skinners' Company, which stood close by, for the leopard is their crest, and the street takes its name from the "budges" or lambs' fleeces, which were at one time exposed for sale there. Perhaps the oldest of these signs is the Mitre, in Mitre court, Hatton Garden, to which attention was called in a contemporary the other day. This is dated 1516, and no doubt is the same that originally ornamented the gateway of the chapel in Ely place close by. In the same neighborhood, in an alley in Holborn, can be seen a stone sign of the Bell, with initials and date 1668. Just inside the archway of the Belle Sauvage yard, Ludgate Hill, is the elephant and castle, the crest of the Cutlers' Company, who owned a house on this site late in the sixteenth century.

A notable stone sign is the halfmoon in the Borough, High street, which still serves the sign of the inn of that name—a unique case. Its date is 1690, when the hostlery, which was burned down in the great Southwark fire of 1689, was rebuilt. There is another sculptured sign, the running Hare and Sun, close by, with the date 1676 or 1696.

UNSAVORY ENGLISH NOVELS.

Publishers Not So Careful as Newspaper Proprietors and Editors.

The London Review prints some strictures upon modern English novels from the pen of Mr. Basil Tozer, a critical reviewer of books. The writer says that the "problem" novel is being supplanted by a type which shows "an increasing tendency to deal with unsavory topics with quite unnecessary freedom" and declares that out of eighty-seven selected novels of average merit at hand seventy-two are morally objectionable. He finds that an author's second book is usually more "daring" than the first, while the third goes to the limit in pruriency.

A directly opposite tendency is noted by Mr. Tozer in the serial fiction published by English newspapers and periodicals, and the statement and conclusions upon this feature of the situation in England are applicable to conditions in Canada. To quote:

"How different is the tone of the serial story of average merit that appears in our weekly and monthly periodicals from that of the average novel of equal literary merit that is published between covers before appearing elsewhere. It is safe to say that no serial story at present running in any English daily newspaper or in the ordinary periodical press of England is unfit to be read by the class that we have gradually come to speak of as "young people." Why this should be I am unable to say, unless it is that editors of periodical publications have a greater sense of their responsibility and of the duty they owe to the community than certain publishers. But such a supposition, considered from the rational standpoint of hard common sense, must unfortunately be deemed quixotic, and therefore the only alternative conclusion to be arrived at is that a vast section of the multitude of men and women who read serial fiction regularly have not really a craving for stories that have a vein of double entente running through them or that appear to advocate a loose code of morality, but that, on the contrary, they desire the fiction they read to be sound and wholesome throughout."

However it may be in England, Canadian editors do have a sense of responsibility both to the community and to their patrons. By providing for their readers stories of a healthy type they first forestall and in the end obliterate the craving for those of equivocal character.

The King's Librarian.

Sir Richard Holmes, the King's Librarian at Windsor Castle, it is understood, retired on Nov. 1 from the position he has held since 1870. As far back at 1854 Sir Richard, who was born in 1835, was an assistant in the library at the British Museum, and in 1868 he served as archaeologist to the Abyssinian expedition. He also acted as war correspondent, and was the first Volunteer to be presented with a medal.

A distinguished author, painter, designer and expert in calligraphy, Sir Richard has been much in demand at Windsor Castle for many years. If any one at Windsor had an old print, document, coin, or medal, he invariably went to Sir Richard to get his opinion upon it. He is one of the finest judges of prints and works of art in Great Britain. Mr. Fortescue is his successor.

Power of Radium.

In an address before the British Scientific Association, Prof. Darwin said radium was a substance which was perhaps millions of times more powerful than dynamite. Thus it was estimated that an ounce of radium would contain enough power to raise 10,000 tons a mile above the earth's surface. Another way of stating the same estimate was that the energy needed to tow a ship of 12,000 tons a distance of 6,000 sea miles at fifteen knots was contained in twenty-two ounces of radium. Now, we knew that the earth contains radio active materials, and it was safe to assume that it forms in some degree a sample of the materials of the solar system; hence it was almost certain that the sun is radio active also.

Queer Remedy For a Burn.

Here is a description of an old Sussex cure for a burn, and its application:—"A poor woman who was severely burned peremptorily refused to see a doctor or to buy any remedy until Sunday evening came round. She then sent for an old woman who bower her head over the wound, crossed two of her fingers over it, and after crooning to herself the lines:—

There came two angels from the north,
One was Fire, and one was Frost;
Out Fire, in Frost,
In the name of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

Then she breathed heavily upon the place," and so left the poor suffering patient.

Carlyle's Bad Shilling.

A farmer in Manitoba wears on his watch chain a blackened metal disk, which has attached to it the following history: Some thirty years ago he was a booking clerk in a railway station in Dumfriesshire. One day Thomas Carlyle, whom he knew by sight, took a ticket for a short run by rail and laid down a shilling. The clerk, eager to secure a souvenir of his famous countryman, put the coin aside and from his own pocket made up the deficiency. He left the railway service and for a long time was out of a situation. Ultimately, although sorely against the grain, he was impelled to part with his last — the treasured Carlyle — shilling. But it would not stand the ringing test. Then the fact was made evident to the ex-railway clerk that somebody had palmed on the Sage of Chelsea a spurious shilling! Thus the lack of value on the relic's part enabled him to stick to it. Relatives sent him to Manitoba, where he prospered, and the fraudulent Carlyle shilling has long been his most treasured possession.—London Daily News.

De Quincey's House.

An English paper relates that several American tourists were "doing" the lake region in England recently. One of them, an old lady, rather deaf, was on the box seat. As the vehicle passed the houses associated with famous names in literature the driver directed the attention of the passengers to them. With a jerk of his whip he announced, "De Quincey's house." "Whose?" demanded the old lady. "De Quincey's" repeated the driver. "Would you repeat? I'm a little hard of hearing." "De Quincey's" again bawled the driver. "Oh, Dick Winsey's," said the old lady, and down it went in the note book with all the other celebrities.

An Odd Wager.

A queer wager is one popularly believed to have been won by Sir Walter Raleigh from Queen Elizabeth, on the debatable question of how much smoke is contained in a pound of tobacco. A pound of the article was weighed, burned and then weighed in ashes, and the question was held to be satisfactorily settled by determining the weight of the smoke as exactly that of the tobacco before being burned, minus the ashes. The fact that the ashes having received an additional weight by combination with the oxygen of the atmosphere was unthought of by Elizabeth and the knight.

"Facts are stubborn things" is an aphorism first used by La Sage in "Gil Blas." It has since become proverbial.

BRITISH WRITS ISSUED

New Parliament to Assemble on the 13th February.

The First Polling Will Take Place Jan. 13 at Greenwich, Where Lord Hugh Cecil, Conservative Free Trader, Is in a Triangular Fight—Last Polling Must Close Jan. 27—Cabinet Members Busy.

London, Jan. 9.—King Edward, who had been absent at Chatsworth as the guest of the Duke of Devonshire, returned to London yesterday afternoon, and held a meeting of the Privy Council, at which the proclamation dissolving Parliament was signed. Immediately afterwards writs were sent to the returning officers for the election of the members of the new Parliament, which will assemble on Feb. 13.

Election Details.

It is expected that the bulk of the borough elections will be decided by Wednesday week; indeed, in many cases the elections in the urban constituencies will be held on Thursday or Friday of this week. In the county divisions the nominations may take place at the earliest on the 15th, and at the latest on the 19th, and the polling may occur not before the 18th, and not after Jan. 26. So that before the end of the month, all the members of the new Parliaments, with the exception, perhaps of the representative of Orkney and Shetland, will be returned.

The first polling will take place Jan. 13, at Greenwich, where Lord Hugh Cecil, leader of the Conservative free traders, is engaged in a triangular fight for the Unionist seat against a Liberal and a Chamberlainite. The last poll must close Jan. 27. Therefore within a fortnight the verdict of the majority of the electors will be known and the probable life of the Liberal Government will be measurable.

Cabinet Members Busy.

The leaders of the opposing forces mounted the hustings last night, and the rallying cries of the main forces and factions engaged in the combat were heard everywhere. No less than fifteen members of the past and the present Cabinet spoke in different parts of the country, including former Premier Balfour, Herbert Henry Asquith, Joseph Chamberlain, John Morley, Lord Lansdowne, John Burns, David Lloyd-George and Austen Chamberlain.

The speakers continued to ring the charges against home rule or tariff reform. The Liberals all along the line attacked the Unionist record of the past ten years, while the Unionists in the main were on the defensive.

Dilke's Novel Address.

London, Jan. 9.—Sir Charles Dilke has issued a novel address to his constituents of the Forest of Dean division of Gloucestershire, which he has represented in the House of Commons as and advanced Radical since July, 1892, consisting of a single sentence, as follows: "I solicit a renewal of your trust."

BOTH SIDES WINNING.

New York, Jan. 9.—With the beginning yesterday of the second week in the national strike of union printers for a shorter work-day and the closed shop, both sides claim to have gained ground.

Officials of the Typothetae issued an official statement Sunday night to the effect that, while the strikers were not resorting to any violence, they were buying off the new men with free membership in the union and strike pay of $12 to $15 a week without work. In some cases, it is said, the union has given $50 to $100 to men to quit work.

Montreal Gazette Strike.

Montreal, Jan. 9.—The editor-in-chief of The Gazette and a dozen more were setting type last evening in The Gazette office. About 75 printers in the news and job office are now on strike and the paper will be crippled for a few days. The Gazette trouble occurred over the putting of apprentices on the monotype machine.

Prisoner on Liner Suicides.

New York, Jan. 9.—C. C. Meir of San Francisco, a prisoner on the steamer Carmania, shot and killed himself in his cabin yesterday just as the big liner was entering New York harbor. Meir was charged with embezzling $20,000 from a San Francisco wine merchant, and was returning from London to answer this charge.

A Wonderful Pagoda.

The great Buddhist shrine, the Shway Dagon at Rangun, is no temple, but a great pagoda, rising from its platform to a height of 368 feet and all completely covered with gold leaf. This platform, with a perimeter of nearly 1,400 feet, is the place of worship. The pagoda itself has no interior. It is a solid stupa of brick raised over a relic chamber. A cutting made into its center has revealed the fact that the original pagoda had seven casings added to it before it attained its present proportions. The shape of the pagoda is that of an elongated cone. It is divided by Burmese convention into twelve parts: First, the base surrounded by a great number of small pagodas; then the three terraces, called Pichayas; next the Bell; the inverted Thabeik, or begging bowl; the Baungyit or twisted turban; the Kyalan or ornamental lotus flower; the Plantain Bud; the brass plate for the Hti or umbrella; the Hti; the Sein bwin or artificial flowers; the vane, and, last of all, the Seinbu or bud of diamonds.—"The Silken East," by V. C. Scott O'Connor.

The Voters Must Walk.

Kingston Candidates Will Not Use Rigs Election Day.

A Clean Election Wanted by Both Sides and So Keen Is That Desire That an Agreement Has Been Signed Whereby the Successful Candidate Will Resign His Seat if His Followers Bribe in Any Form

Kingston Jan. 10.—This city has acquired an unenviable notoriety in connection with bribery and corruption in elections, but a better day would seem to have now dawned. Yesterday a document was signed by the leaders, whose contents, if loyally observed, will on the 29th secure purity where impurity has reigned.

The memorandum of agreement, made the 9th day of January, between the candidates undersigned, and their respective agents and supporters, witnesseth that, whereas it appears that improper practices have prevailed in recent elections in this city, and both political parties are desirous of preventing any recurrence of the same, and that both the letter and the spirit of the Election Act should be strictly observed in the impending election, they mutually agree, as a matter of honor and good faith, to do all they can to avoid any violation of the law; therefore to that end it is mutually agreed as follows:

1. The agreement shall be signed by each candidate, and at least 150 of his supporters, who shall be selected and named in writing, by or on behalf of the opposite candidate. When satisfactorily signed, it shall be marked "approved" by each candidate and then become operative.

2. The supporters of each candidate who sign the agreement are acknowledged by each candidate as his agents within the meaning of the Ontario Election Act, for the purposes of this election.

3. The parties signing bind themselves in honor and good faith to absolutely refrain from and prevent, as far as they can, any infraction of the Ontario election law, among which infractions are: (a) The bribing of voters by money or other valuable consideration or promises. (b) The procuring or promising of office, place or employment for voters or unduly influencing them. (c) The subscribing, advancing or paying money for the purposes of the election except the money bona fide paid into the hands of the financial agent of the candidate, such agent to keep an accurate account thereof, open to the inspection of any party signing the agreement. (d) The corruptly treating or furnishing entertainment to voters. (e) The corruptly betting or wagering on the election. (f) The hiring of vehicles to convey electors to the polls or the paying of the traveling expenses of voters. (g) The personation of voters.

4. The parties to the agreement undertake that they will not be guilty of or privy to any such infraction in respect of the election.

It is further agreed that to prevent any doubts as to the observance of the law, no vehicles shall be hired, asked to be volunteered, volunteered or used either in connection with the registration of voters, to take persons up to register, or on election day to take voters to the polls to vote. Each candidate is, however, allowed to have one vehicle on election day for his personal use, which he may also employ to transfer his workers from one poll to another to work, but not to vote.

For the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this understanding, it is agreed that Bishop Mills, R. V. Rogers, K. C., and J. L. Whiting K. C., shall be a tribunal, with full power to inquire into and determine all cases of alleged violation of the agreement. They shall have power to call before them any party to the agreement, and obtain any other evidence they may be able. They may employ a stenographer to take any evidence by statutory declaration, if they see fit. If at any time, upon information furnished within 30 days of the election, said tribunal shall, upon inquiry, find that there has been a breach of this agreement, directly or indirectly, by or with the knowledge, consent or connivance of any person a party to this agreement, then the candidate of whom such person is admitted and declared to be an agent, shall, if successful at the bye-election, forthwith resign his seat.

Italians Arrested For Murder.

Sault Ste. Marie, Jan. 10.—The police arrested three Italians, who have not given any names, suspected of attempting to murder in cold blood John Calbeck, a well-known citizen. The men went to his home, stabbed him three times and fired four shots, which did not take effect. A doctor arrived just in time to save him from bleeding to death. No reason for the attack is given and the men arrested are strangers to Calbeck.

Edna Wallace Hopper Loses.

Victoria, B. C., Jan. 10.—The full court of British Columbia yesterday afternoon handed down a unanimous decision sustaining the judgment of Hon. Justice Drake in the Hopper-Dunsmuir will case, and dismissing with costs the appeal therefrom of the original plaintiff, Edna Wallace Hopper, and the intervener, Mrs. Joan Dunsmuir, mother of the defendant.

Baron Richtofen Stricken.

Washington, Jan. 10.—A cablegram received at the State Department yesterday from Berlin, says that Baron Richtofen, the German Minister of Foreign Affairs, has suffered a stroke of paralysis and is seriously and critically ill.

Glory For Them.

Quebec, Jan. 10.—Major George W. Stephens, M. P. P., has been asked to second the motion to adopt the reply to the speech from the throne in the Legislature on the 18th inst. Dr. Cote, M. P. P., for St. Sauveur will move the address.

ENDS LIFE WITH BULLET.

Head of the Cleveland Stock Exchange Takes His Life.

Cleveland, O., Jan. 10.—Leland W. Prior, a well-known coal financier and junior member of the stock brokerage firm of Denison, Prior & Co., shot and killed himself at the Hollenden Hotel yesterday.

A letter to his son E. C. Prior was found in his pocket. Prior was about 45 years, married and had two children.

Prior was president of the Cleveland Stock Exchange. He was also a member of the New York Stock Exchange, the Chicago Stock Exchange and the Chicago Board of Trade.

In a statement given out last night Chas. E. Denison, jr., senior member of the firm to which Prior belonged, said: "I have ordered the business closed and requested a committee to assist me in making a thorough and complete investigation of the affairs of the firm. I believe that it will be found that large stock transactions were the cause of Mr. Prior's act."

It is said that the firm is involved in the stock market to the extent of at least half a million dollars.

Dominion Finances.

The Toronto Globe is sometimes delicious in its simplicity. Speaking of the Dominion accounts for 1905 the Globe says: "The public accounts "show a consolidated revenue of "$71,182,772. Out of this there was "expended $63,319,682, leaving a "surplus of $7,863,089. But for using "it to offset capital expenditure "this would have enabled the Fin"ance Minister to make a very sub"stantial reduction in the public debt; "as it was, the capital expenditure "amounted to $15,484,455, involving a "net addition of $7,621,366 to the "debt."

This is another way, the St. John, N. B., Sun points out, for saying that the surplus revenue would reduce the debt, only there is no surplus. Rather there is a deficit, and so the debt is increased.

The truth is that a large part of this alleged capital expenditure has no possible place in that category. For example there is an item of $2,234,685 paid in bounties on iron, lead and coal oil. How can this be described as capital outlay? It pays for no property. The country has bought nothing to show for it. There is no more reason to charge to capital the bounties than there is to credit the excise revenues to this account. Another item in capital account is $774,403 paid for surveying Dominion lands in the west. These are placed to capital while all the money received for lands sold goes to current account as if it had been earned, and not received for property alienated. If the money received for land sold is to be treated as ordinary income surely current income should take care of the cost of the survey. A large part of the militia expenditure is charged to capital, and the Finance Minister has even placed in this account the cost of floating a loan.

We do not say that these methods are all inventions of the present Government. One or two large purchases of new militia equipment were, we believe, so charged before the change of Government, but Mr. Fielding seems to have gone much farther in the same direction. The late Government, against the protest of the Opposition, charged Northwest surveys to capital in the period when large areas were mapped out and before the sale of these lands had assumed large proportions. At the time of the change of Government the receipts from the sale of lands were from $150,000 to $200,000 a year. The cost of surveys charged to capital were under $100,000 a year, though they had been much larger ten or twelve years before. Even at that time the proceeds of the sale of land and the cost of surveys should have been charged to the same account. We should say that both belonged to capital. But the matter did not particularly affect the general result when the figures were small. Now that the proceeds of the sale of lands are climbing up into the millions it is quite a different thing to consider them a part of the regular revenue of the country, and at the same time count as capital outlay the cost of surveys. It is generally understood that a capital statement is represented by additional property, but the area of Federal lands decreases while the capital account grows larger. The largest item in this capital expenditures, bounties on iron and other products, is a patent of Mr. Fielding's own. Bounties were paid before Mr. Fielding's time. They were not charged to capital. When charged with making the change Mr. Fielding explains that the sums paid in bounties by his predecessors were so small as to make it of no importance how they were charged. But now that they exceed two millions they would make a great difference in financial balance. Mr. Fielding seems to think that this is a reason why bounties should be charged to capital, though there is no property to represent them. It will be seen that the minister reasons in the opposite way respecting the receipts for the sale of lands. These have grown to large proportions, but Mr. Fielding takes the revenue into current account the same as if it belonged there.

Injured Man is Doing Fairly Well

The young man who was the victim in the unfortunate misunderstanding yesterday morning, in which a pitchfork figured so prominently, is, we are told, doing as well as can be expected. If blood poisoning does not set in his recovery before very long is looked for.

TIMELY TOPICS.

It is said a whole lot of men went home early last night. Probably afraid of running against a pitchfork if they stayed out late.

• • •

Anyhow, that chap who had the pitchfork jabbed in him got off easy. Dr. Gardiner might have admitted him to the house and preached to him for an hour or two.

• • •

Two lions leaped in fright from a train while it was in motion near Paris and lay down on the railroad line, where they were shot by four farmers. By all rules, the wild beasts should have eaten at least one of the farmers before they were shot.

• • •

President Roosevelt shook hands with 9,052 persons in three hours and 44 minutes on New Year's Day. Yankees who criticize him for taking a short vacation now and then should place this to his credit.

• • •

This is indeed the age of the petition. A Chicago lad fifteen years old has been circulating a petition to his parents to put him in long trousers. Many parents in his neighborhood have signed it.

• • •

A Salem (N.J.) man who was about to be taken to prison to serve a sentence of three years sold his coat and overcoat to pay a small debt and went to prison cold. So honest a man should have been able to keep out of prison.

• • •

Some girls in a certain eastern city have agreed to say good night at 10 o'clock whether he desires to go home or not. They must use slot gas meters in that place.

• • •

The Crown Attorney of Toronto has started a raid on the alleged usurers of that city. The question has been asked, Are there no cases of usury in this city which might well be looked into? Rumor says there are.

• • •

The Help the Hospital fund, we note, continues to grow, but not so fast as it should. It certainly should not stop short of the $2,000 mark. Get busy, good people.

• • •

In a New York State Court the arguments of counsel were presented to the jury over a long distance telephone. No doubt the prisoner would have liked to have entered his plea in the same manner.

• • •

The Brantford Ministerial Association has canvassed the merchants of that city on behalf of the early closing movement, especially on Saturday evenings. The canvass was not very encouraging. Three objected entirely to closing early. Eight thought that business should cease at 8 o'clock, 18 at 9, 5 at 9.30, 14 at 10, four at 10.30, 9 at 11, and 1 at 11.30. It is likely that a canvass of this city would result just about the same as the Brantford one did.

• • •

The death of a barber in New Albany, Indiana, from inhaling hairs, which became embedded in the tissues of his throat and lungs, was unavoidable, since his only plan of salvation was to keep his mouth shut.

• • •

No doubt if Pharaoh's daughter could have foreseen that Alma Tadema was going to get fourteen thousand pounds for his picture of "The Finding of Moses," she would have dressed up a little bit more for the occasion.

• • •

Messrs. Torrey and Alexander, the two evangelists who are conducting services in Toronto, have declared against dancing, theatres, cards, and tobacco. Commenting on this, an irreverent Brantford paper says, In fact the only form of excitement they seem to favor is revivals.

• • •

The famous lot case has advanced another step, the Divisional Court at Toronto having decided in favor of the Belleville City Council's contention and against Mr. Phillips. The case, we are told, will now go to the Court of Appeal. Commenting on the matter a Toronto paper thus puts it: "John P. C. Phillips offered Belleville $326.50 for a number of lots that were put up for sale for taxes. Joseph Caldwell offered $265. Caldwell got them, and it completed for him a strip of land down the east side of the city, the only direction in which the city can very well grow. Phillips started an action against the Council for not having sold the lot to the highest bidder. Judge Magee gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The Divisional Court now upsets this judgment, and finds a proper motive for the Council making the sale in the fact that Caldwell had made some arrangement with the committee which had the sale of the lots in hand, and the Council feared legal action unless the bargain was carried out."

• • •

Canada gained some beautiful citizens among the foreigners and Ishmaelites whom Sifton brought in. A despatch from Winnipeg says: "An astonishing example of the lax morals prevalent among the Galicians of Winnipeg has just been unearthed. Severin Roovinsky grew tired of his spouse and made a bargain recently with Michael Sedar to sell her to him for $40. Sedar gave Roovinsky a note for the money. When he went to collect Sedar refused to pay. Roovinsky then went to a city lawyer in order to sue him for the amount. The sorest touch of all for Roovinsky is that his wife does not wish now to return to him."

• • •

Many queer things come up in the courts these days, but assuredly one of the strangest was that in a North Carolina court, where a man was found guilty of disturbing a church service by singing out of tune. The case was appealed and a higher court reversed the decision, affirming that the man was quite within his rights, on the ground that the accused had no intention of disturbing the congregation and was acting conscientiously. It was shown that the disturbance was so great that the preacher in one instance declined to sing the hymn announced, that the presiding elder had refused to preach in the church on account of such disturbance, and that, after a sermon of especial solemnity, a leading member of the church had on one occasion gone to the defendant and specially requested him no to sing at that time, and in this instance he refrained. But he speedily resumed his alleged singing and was finally arraigned in court for "disturbing public worship." The congregation will have to bear the affliction with whatever Christian resignation it can command. Had the verdict of the lower court been maintained perhaps one-half the congregation might have been liable to be indicted for singing out of tune.

• • •

We know a party in this city who sings at least two tones flat when he warbles in church—but he means well. Perhaps you know some like him. It would never do to indict everybody who sang out of tune. The local "wobblers" would be up against it, sure.

Congressman W. Burke Cockran was narrating in San Francisco his experiences in the Far East. "But we made the best of it," he said, of a sampan mishap. "We were like the Gloversville widow. 'This woman's husband, a glove finisher, died, and so inconsolable was the poor lady that she spent $3500 on a granite shaft, inscribing on the base thereof: "My grief is so great that I cannot bear it.' "Before a year had passed, however, her grief had sufficiently faded to allow her to marry a young glove stitcher. She sent a stonecutter to the cemetery a few days before the wedding, and caused him to add to the inscription on the shaft the single word; "'Alone.'"

A GHASTLY MONUMENT.

(Boston Transcript.)

It is not strictly accurate to include the Bavarian in the list of great vessels lost in 1905. The Bavarian is not lost. The Allan company knows exactly where she is and can lay hands on her any day. This magnificent new million dollar trans-Atlantic liner lies in this mid-winter weather on Wye Ledge, near Grosse Isle—high enough out of water to serve as a ghastly monument to the antiquated and knockkneed school of pilot practice on the St. Lawrence that owes its tolerance to provincial politics in Quebec.

Former Resident Dead.

Rev. R. S. Laidlaw, pastor of St. Andrew's Church, this city, has received a letter from Rev. C. A. Mitchell, of Quesnel, B. C., stating that, some six weeks ago, a man named Patrick Gaffney, whose home was formerly in this city, died at Stanley, B.C. His home was supposed to be in the neighborhood of Belleville. He was a Roman Catholic, born in Ireland, but came to this country when an infant. He was an only son, but had two sisters. His father was a Roman Catholic, his mother a Presbyterian. In conclusion, the letter says: "The boys gave him a nice funeral, a co-religionist reading the service over him." Anyone knowing the family of deceased is asked to communicate with Rev. Mr. Laidlaw.

A Good Appointment.

Mr. Robert Shaw, of Kingston, son of Mr. Abraham Shaw, Inspector of Customs, who has been in the freight department of the G.T.R., in this city for a couple of years, has been promoted to an important position in the G.T.R. offices in Ottawa and left for there last night. Mr. Shaw made hosts of friends with the public while here by his obliging manner and prompt attention to business, and in social life he and his wife were universally esteemed.

Laid Away in the Tomb.

The funeral of the late Mrs. A. A. Corham took place yesterday afternoon from the family residence to Emmanuel R. E. Church, where a service was held. There was a large attendance, and the service was very solemn and reverent, a short funeral sermon being preached by the Rector, Rev. A. M. Hubly. The bearers were three sons, two sons-in-law and one grandson of the deceased lady, namely, William, Walter, and Arthur Corham, R. Embury, W. J. Ridley and W. Embury.

Week of Prayer.

The week of prayer service was held last evening in the John Street Presbyterian Church. There was a fair attendance and the meeting throughout was of interest. Rev. A. H. Drumm, pastor of the church, was chairman and conducted the devotional exercises. Rev. A. M. Hubly, rector of the Reformed Episcopal Church, was the speaker of the evening, and his address was much appreciated. The subject for the evening was "For a revival which shall renew the churches of every name into full accord with the mind and will of Christ." This evening the usual midweek services will be held in the various churches, conducted by the pastors.

Ant Communication.

Sir James Boyle, the great Irish naturalist, always contended that ants had a language of their own, by which they made known their wants and fears to others of their kind. One day he encountered a colony that was evidently moving to new quarters. All appeared in the very best of spirits, and whenever two met the naturalist noted that they put their heads together as though chatting very earnestly. To settle the matter in his own mind as to whether they were really talking or not he killed one of them to observe the effect it would have on the others. The eyewitnesses to the murder hastened to the rear and halted every one of the advancing column by laying their antennae together. The column instantly separated to the right and the left, none of the marchers afterward passing within less than six feet of their dead companion, though the remains of the insect were directly in the beaten path.

President Daniel Derbyshire's Address.

DELIVERED AT THE OPENING OF THE 29th CONVENTION OF THE EASTERN ONTARIO DAIRYMEN'S ASSOCIATION IN PETERBORO TO-DAY.

The 29th annual convention of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association opened in Peterboro at 10 o'clock this morning. Following is the address delivered by the President, D. Derbyshire, M.P. After the customary felicitations, Mr. Derbyshire said:

With reference to the dairy industry I might point out that both in the aggregate production and returns reached, 1905 has been the banner year. It is certainly very gratifying that we made about the same quantity of cheese as formerly, and our butter production has beaten all previous records.

Our cheese exports from Montreal for the season just closed were 2,121,101 boxes. I estimate the cheese on hand in Canada at the close of navigation at 450,000 boxes, which would make 2,600,000 boxes, valued at $22,000,000.

Our butter exports from Montreal were 573,449 packages and the estimated stock in Canada is 125,000 packages, so we made in the season 700,000 packages, valued at $9,000,000.

The bacon trade, so closely allied with the dairy industry, amounted to about $15,000,000.

In the above estimates no account has been taken of our home market, and this must be looked into, especially for butter, for our Canadian people are consuming larger quantities of fine creamery butter each year. Our home consumption in 1905 was about 3,500,000 packages.

You will be glad to know that we received about $10,000,000 more in 1905 than in 1904 for cheese, butter and bacon. It will be noticed that our dairymen produced (excluding condensed milk, milk for our cities, towns, etc.) cheese valued at $22,000,000; butter, $8,000,000; bacon, $15,000,000, and the home consumption was $50,000,000, or a grand total of $95,000,000. We are sending our goods not only to the Mother Country, but to the Orient and Japan as well, and in increasing quantities each year.

We are also making advancement. Our factories are being improved, and some really first-class ones are being erected, and our makers are becoming better educated. A larger number and better qualified instructors have been employed, and doing very satisfactory work. This has been made possible by the liberality of our Provincial Department of Agriculture. We had twenty-six instructors, besides our chief instructor, and they have done good work—visiting, giving instructions and attending meetings — so we have given better service to our factories than in any previous year.

Our goods have been finer and more uniform than ever before. Our Dominion Department of Agriculture has rendered splendid assistance by giving us regular refrigerator service, not only on cars to Montreal, but on the steamships from Montreal to the British market, and employed inspectors at Montreal and the different English ports to examine our goods, and report weekly to our dairy commissioner at Ottawa the temperature of our goods on arrival at destination. This has been of great importance to dairymen, for the goods were never before delivered to their ultimate market in as fine condition. We want this refrigerator service enlarged and improved, as well as our transportation facilities, so our goods the coming season may be landed in perfect condition.

The watching of our goods arriving at Montreal, as well as the different ports on the other side, is working well, for they do not now lay around on the docks, but are quickly taken care of. The erection of two large warehouses at the Surrey Commercial dock, fitted up with cold storage at London, is of great importance. Our goods are taken from the ships and immediately placed in these warehouses. Bristol is coming to the front with new docks, and other ports will have to do the same or lose the trade. So you see the result is we have made finer goods and had them delivered in better condition, thus receiving better prices and increased demand. With the improvement of trade in every line, and high prices assured, we should do very much better in 1906, and I ask for your hearty co-operation in building up the dairy industry.

While we have had such a splendid season, I think this would be a good time to urge all makers to attend our dairy school at Kingston, which has been greatly enlarged and improved, with a competent staff in charge, where the latest and best instruction is given. I would like to urge all factories to join our syndicate system and assist us to make a uniform high quality of goods everywhere in Eastern Ontario. While a large number of factories are good and well equipped, we still have a large number not fit to make cheese in, and where finest goods cannot be made. We must improve our factories, for no business in Canada rests on a more solid foundation, and why our factories should not be first-class buildings, well painted, clean and tidy, with proper drainage, no one can explain. Why should shade trees not be planted and the grounds around the factory made beautiful. Possibly I can explain why, because the makers of our cheese are the only ones that are not properly paid. A large number of our best men are quitting the business. While the milk producers are prosperous this last year, our manufacturers are poorer, having more to pay for labor, fuel and furnishings. Why not give them one and a quarter cents for making and demand better boxes and a better service. We appointed a committee to report on licensing factories, and I hope their report will be favorable, so we can demand a good factory or close it up.

The Canadian Dairyman has been doing good work showing up some of our poor factories, and I trust they will continue. This is the official organ and every dairyman should take it. With our past experience, with the full knowledge that the production of cheese, butter and the bacon pig is the one industry exactly suited to Eastern Ontario, all our energies should be directed to improve the quality and increase the quantity of our goods.

And now, gentlemen, with our present opportunities for education and instruction, there will be no excuse for having an ordinary maker, for they are dear at any price; or having an old open factory resting in the mud, with no drainage, or not having modern machinery, or not delivering your cheese to the station in clean wagons, with proper covers to keep the cheese or butter clean, or not doing everything in your power to make the watchword for 1906 cleanliness and improvement all along the line.

Once more let me urge hearty cooperation in Eastern Ontario among all our dairymen, and make one supreme effort the coming season and take hold earnestly and make the needed improvements, so we can step right out of the way of any of our competitors, by making and placing on the market regularly the finest goods in the world. We can do this by all working together.

A PERFECT FOOD.

That Scott's Emulsion should act so quickly and satisfactorily in all cases of lost flesh and continued wasting is not surprising when its food value is understood. With pure Norwegian cod liver oil, hypophosphites of lime and soda and glycerine, there is combined in Scott's Emulsion the best elements of nourishment and strength building known to medical science. Any physician will tell you this. The use of these ingredients in the proper proportions; the employment of only the purest grade of each, and to combine them perfectly is the secret of the success of Scott's Emulsion. You will not find a more certain way to stop waste, build flesh and strength and supply nourishment than through Scott's Emulsion.

SILVER WEDDING.

INTERESTING EVENT AT SHANNONVILLE ON FRIDAY LAST.

On Friday evening, Jan. 5, 1906, about forty relatives gathered at the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Taylor, of Shannonville, to celebrate the 25th anniversary of their wedding. A bountiful six o'clock dinner was served, after which music and social converse made a most enjoyable evening. At a late hour the company left for their homes, wishing Mr. and Mrs. Taylor many happy returns of the day, leaving them many beautiful gifts as a reminder of the auspicious event. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor are the parents of seven interesting children all living at home. Those who attended from a distance were; Mr. and Mrs. Edward Long, Mr. and Mrs. John James, Trenton; Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Taylor, Mrs. Willett VanAlstine, Napanee; Clayton Taylor, Lyn; Mr. and Mrs. B. Osborne, Rossmore, P. E. Co.; Henry Taylor, Belleville; Dr. and Mrs. Fred Taylor, Carson City, Mich.; Mrs. Allison and Miss Una Allison, Darlington.

35 VESSELS WRECKED DURING PAST MONTH.

HURRICANES, HIGH SEAS AND BLIZZARDS ON THE ATLANTIC FOR FORTY DAYS.

New York, Jan. 9.—The Journal of Commerce says: While this season is notable for climatic moderation throughout the country, being particularly free from pronounced disturbances, it has been one of the most rigorous winters on record at sea. Everything from hurricanes, high seas and blizzards on the Atlantic to 40 days of typhoons on the Pacific is reported by surviving mariners.

Steamers arriving both here and abroad report boisterous weather. Not one of Saturday's liners last week arrived on date. The Campania, which left Liverpool December 23, and was due here on the 30th, came in late Sunday afternoon, the 31st.

The St. Louis arrived from Southampton on Monday about two days late, and the LaTouraine, from Havre, reached her dock Tuesday morning, 72 hours behind schedule.

The Statendam from Rotterdam was 11 days making the passage, whereas under normal conditions she would take from nine to ten days.

La Touraine had the most varied experience of the fleet. Twice she was forced off her course by furious gales, and the height of waves, her officers estimated at 80 to 100 feet. She encountered hail storms and at one time her decks were heaped with snow.

The Sagamore arrived at Boston Wednesday, damaged by the heavy seas.

The British steamer Manxman ended a 18 days' voyage from Liverpool at Portland, Me., Wednesday. Her officers said it was the roughest passage in their experience.

The new turbine steamer Carmania, which left Liverpool last Saturday for New York, was held up by a gale off Queenston Sunday night, and could not get away until Monday forenoon.

During the month of December, including the last week of November, 35 vessels have been reported wrecked. Nineteen of these were steamers. One ship was lost and three barks. The balance were schooners.

One blow over the lakes during the last week of November demolished 19 vessels, eight of which were steamers.

Several trans-Atlantic liners have had their cabins flooded, lost lifeboats and sustained minor damages during the month, while scores of sailing craft have been stripped of their canvas and towed to port in a waterlogged condition.

Among the Pacific coast disasters the most fatal was the wreck of the British bark Pass, of Metford Ancon, for Port Townsend, Wash., which was blown ashore on Vancouver Island December 26, when 25 members of her crew were drowned. The following day the Pacific coast steamer Portland was wrecked on Spire Island.

The ship Hekla survived a series of encounters with hurricanes making for San Francisco badly crippled, however. The Hekla was bound from Manila for Port Townsend. She experienced a succession of typhoons lasting 40 days. She put into San Francisco to make repairs.

FATHER FOR 27TH TIME.

FIFTEEN ARE LIVING — ALL BUT THREE AT HOME.

Chicago, Jan. 9.—In a big leather easy chair, seemingly unaware of the noise which eight of his children made with their new Christmas toys, Jonathan Allen Monroe last night sat in his home meditating deeply upon the fact that for the twenty-seventh time he was a father.

The youngest of the twenty-seven children of Mr. Monroe, who is a cattle buyer at the Union Stock yards, arrived yesterday. It is a fine, bouncing baby boy and the proud father last night declared that in all of his experience he had never seen a better one.

Mr. Monroe, who is sixty-three years old, is a bitter opponent of race suicide and a long time friend of President Roosevelt.

"I know the President in Albany, N. Y., many years ago," he said. "But, pshaw, I won't impose on his good nature by telling him of so small an affair as the arrival of the twenty-seventh child."

Fifteen of the children are still living, and all but three remain at home with their father. The three who have left home, are married daughters none of the sons ever having been married.

Miss E. Robinson has taken charge of the Public school on Huff's Island.

Those who attended the lecture of Dr. Potts at Bridge St., Church, Belleville, on New Year's night, report a splendid lecture.

Mr. and Mrs. Coughlin, of Belleville, have the sincere sympathy of this neighborhood in their sorrow at the loss of their son on New Year's day.

Mr. and Mrs. Morley Anderson, of Dunbar St., Belleville, spent Monday with David Walker.

Mr. Frank Lent has purchased what is known as the Snider property from Mr. Baker.

"GOOD GROWING WEATHER."

When the New Scalp Antiseptic is Used.

A good head of hair is as much a "crown of glory," for man as it is for woman, notwithstanding all the poetry on the subject applied to the female sex, exclusively. In the season when the flies bite, the baldheaded man can sympathise with the Egyptians who were so sorely plagued on account of the children of Israel. Why not try Newbro's Herpicide? Others have been benefited and are loud in its praise. It cleanses the scalp, kills the germ at the root of the hair and by keeping the scalp sweet, pure and wholesome, the hair is found to grow as nature intended, regardless of the temperature. Try it and be convinced.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

QUEER INDUSTRIES OF PARIS

MAN WHO TAKES DRUNKARDS HOME — COLLECTORS OF CIGARETTE AND CIGAR STUMPS.

The ramasseur de nuit is the humblest member of the ragpickers' corporation. He is generally a laborer out of work, and collects whatever he can find and judges salable, from a scrap of paper or an orange peel to a dilapidated glove. Take old boots, for example. However bad, they have a market value, for they always contain in the instep one sound piece that can serve again, and generally two or three more at the heel and the back.

Old provision tins, again, are full of money; the lead soldering can be removed and melted into cakes, while the tin goes to make children's toys. There are about 6000 of this class of night birds in Paris, and their earnings average 9d. a day, a respectable total of £212 daily for the lot.

Another quaint night bird is the "guardian angel." The "guardian angel" is a person attached to the establishments of some mastroquets—low barkeepers and certain public houses, for the purpose of looking after the safety of drunken customers. He accompanies them to their homes, defends them in case of need, as often as not has to put them to bed and leaves them only when they are without the reach of mischief. He earns about 2s. a day. Cases are also on record where grateful drunkards have remembered the "angel" in their wills. To return the compliment, the "angel" has invested some of his funds in the purchase of a barrow, the object of which is but too obvious.

An important night bird is the member of the guild des pattes mouillees. He deals in tobacco manufactured from stumps of cigars and cigarettes picked up in the street, and holds assizes on the Place Maubert by the statue of Etienne Dolet, twice a week at 3 o'clock a.m.; on these days the square is called the "market of wet paws." The industry is quite remunerative, on a very modest scale, of course, and would be ever more so were it not for the government who stepped in with characteristic greed, and on the grounds of the monopoly it holds proceeded to tax the tobacco collected with so much painstaking care.—From the Pall Mall Magazine.

THIS MEDICINE IS BREATHED.

That's why it is sure to cure catarrh. You see it goes direct to the source of the disease — its healing vapor repairs the damage caused by catarrhal inflammation. "Catarrhozone" always cures because it goes into those tiny cells and passages that ordinary remedies can't reach, goes where the disease actually is. Impossible for "Catarrhozone" to fail, as any doctor will tell you. Don't be misled into thinking there is anything so good as Catarrhozone—use it and you'll soon say good-bye to catarrh.

FOUND WOMAN'S RED HAT.

DISCOVERY MADE IN THE FAMOUS HAMILTON MURDER MYSTERY.

Hamilton, Jan. 9.—The police have evidently not yet given up hope of solving the Barton murder mystery. This was the date set for the adjourned inquest, and it was expected that the authorities would admit defeat, and that the jury would bring in an open verdict. Contrary to expectation, however, Crown Attorney Washington asked for another enlargement for six weeks, and the request was granted without any questions being asked. The authorities had good reasons for asking for the adjournment. An important find was made close to the scene of the murder yesterday afternoon. When the body of the unknown woman was found no trace could be found of the red hat that she wore when she was seen going towards the spot where the murder was committed. Yesterday a gang of men employed by James Marshall in opening up a quarry found a red hat concealed beneath a quantity of brush and underwood. Constable Nichol was notified of the find, and he drove out and took possession of the headgear. While not positive, the police believe that it is the hat that the murdered woman wore.

Maloney Discharged.

It will be remembered that, a few days ago, a man named Maloney, a storekeeper of Cordova, was sent to jail here for four months for an alleged second offence against the Liquor law, the sentence having been passed by Mr. Carscallen, justice of the peace at Marmora. Mr. Maloney, through a local lawyer, appealed to Osgoode Hall, Toronto, and the following judgment tells its own story:

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE — BEFORE MABEE, J.

Rex v. Maloney.—J. B. Mackenzie, for defendant, moved for his discharge from custody under a conviction made by a justice of the peace at Marmora, County of Hastings. No cause shown. Order made for discharge.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio., is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Literary Notes.

With the March Designer begins an exceedingly interesting continued story, "A By-Path in Altruria," by Mrs. Susie Bouchelle Wight, whose clever short stories are well-known to magazine readers. It is charmingly and appropriately illustrated by J. A. Williams, and will run through several numbers. Craig S. Thoms contributes one of his characteristic articles, "The Seeds of Trees," accompanied by reproductions of photographs made by the author, and Anne O'Hagen supplies a most laughable little comedy, "A Question of Etiquette," for three performers. A short story, "The Revolt of Margaret Heywood," by the popular writer, Isabel Gordon Curtis, carries with it a hint to overambitious fathers of families, while "The Story of Billy," by Gabrielle E. Jackson goes far in encouraging humanity toward dumb creatures.

Chinese Swine.

The American swine of today are very different from their English ancestors, which a few centuries ago constituted one of the chief sources of British wealth. The improvement in the race is largely due to the introduction of the Chinese and Neapolitan breeds. The crossing of the former upon the English hog has resulted in the production of the Berkshire, Essex, Poland-China, Small Yorkshire and Suffolk breeds. The Chinese hog is remarkably prepotent, as is shown by the tendency of the modern breeds to revert to the original type. This is doubtless owing to the many centuries of inbreeding which have so firmly fixed its characteristics. One of the most important of these is its propensity to fatten under the most adverse circumstances. This superabundance of fat prevents the flesh of this breed being highly esteemed in this country, but it has had a most valuable effect in modifying the lean, gaunt hogs of England, while the Neapolitan has added delicacy of flavor. The original Chinese hog is a very peculiar shape. It has a long body, with short legs, very heavy jowls, small prick ears, short head, neck and snout and the eyes wide apart. In color it is white or black or a mixture of both, with the white predominating.

Gold Mining in Australia.

Gold is being found far down in the earth in Australia. A beautiful piece of gold bearing quartz is on view at the mining department in Melbourne. It was found at a depth of 4,200 feet at Bendigo, the greatest depth on record at which gold has been obtained. The geological experts say that this discovery is interesting as establishing the fact that the conditions of gold deposition are as favorable at this depth as they are near the surface.

Mrs. French Sheldon.

Mrs. French Sheldon started recently for the West Coast of Africa, when her tour will embrace Nigeria, Sierra Leone, and Liberia. She is just finishing her book on the Congo, which will be out in the early part of next year. Mrs. French Sheldon has done a great deal of important exploration. She knows the whole of Africa, and has written a great deal to add to our ethnological knowledge of the various races of that continent. She has been three times round the world, giving three years to each journey. The love of genuine exploring has grown upon her, says The Queen, and she goes off with her rifle and her native servants; plunging into countries where few white men have been, with less fear of danger than she would have in walking about a civilized city in the dark. The journey to West Africa she will now undertake as a rest and change after the hard work of getting her book ready for the press.

Movable Pulpits.

The Church of St. Paul's, in Cheltenham, England, at present boasts the only cable road pulpit in the world.

There is a recess chancel some fifty feet deep, and when not in use the pulpit stands in the rear, some thirty feet from the edge of the chancel. When the earlier part of the service is concluded and the rector is ready to preach the sermon, he walks to the centre of the chancel and waits until the pulpit moves to the front. At the conclusion of the service he leaves the pulpit, which promptly moves backward and to the side.

The pulpit is mounted upon a truck, which moves upon rails, between which is a slotted cable way. There is a small electric motor to operate the cable, and when the sexton perceives that the rector is ready to preach the sermon he switches on the current and the cable draws the pulpit to the front.

HIS PARENT'S OPINION.

He's never been to college and has little use for books,
Except the ones with lots of pictures in,
He's not a fluent talker, though you'd think it from his looks,
But pretty soon we think that he'll begin.
We don't know how he learned so much, you'd be surprised to see
What marvellous intelligence he shows,
It's just a source of never-failing wonder, sir, to me,
The heaps of things our little baby knows.

Some children are accomplished; they can do a lot of things,
And do a number of them fairly well,
One dances to perfection and another plays or sings,
Or in some other manner may excel —
But not at two years, often. They're comparatively old,
Our little skeezicks now is barely two,
You hardly would believe me, I imagine, if I told
You half the things our little one can do.

I've heard of other babies that their parents brag about,
They're prodigies, you'd naturally think,
The fond and foolish fathers quite believe it all, no doubt,
But I just smile and turn my head and wink.
I'm not disposed to blame them for their foolishness a bit,
They've got to make the most of what they've got,
But if you saw our youngster you would cheerfully admit
The cunning little rascal beats the lot.

Claret, champagne and German and French wines contain on an average from 8 to 10 per cent. of alcohol, lager beer and ale from 3.8 to 5 per cent., Madeira and sherry 15 1-2 to 17 1-2 per cent., gin 30 per cent., whiskey from 35 to 40 per cent., brandy 47 per cent., and rum 60 per cent. There are certain so-called patent medicines, sold under the names of bitters, compounds and nerve cures, which, according to Dr. John S. Billings, chairman of the Committee of Fifty on the study of alcoholic beverages, contain from 14 to 85 per cent. of alcohol. These latter, it is alleged, are largely sold in the "dry" districts of the United States, where the observations were made. It looks much as if there were medicine topers quite as bad as any beer or wine bibber.

SCARCITY OF AMERICAN SHIPS.

(New York Herald.)

Out of 4,217 arrivals of all classes of vessels from foreign ports at New York last year the American flag flew over only 760 ships. According to figures given out at the barge office recently 478 of the 760 vessels were steam powered, and there were five ships, twenty-five barques, six brigs and 246 schooners among the sailing vessels. In this time there were 2,844 steamships under foreign flags entered at the custom house, of which 1,355 were British and 521 German.

Walter Wellman, the Chicago Record-Herald's Washington correspondent, has put his whole life into a project to reach the North Pole in the airship in which Santos-Dumont will be the skipper. As an explorer Walter Wellman has done great things. As an aeronaut Santos-Dumont has done the greatest things. Both say they CAN reach the North Pole. That means they will make probably the stubbornest and most scientific fight over made for the accomplishment of their purpose. Very unlikely it is that two such men, to both of whom the greatest in life is still to come, would be actuated by mere recklessness. A newspaper backs the project. A newspaper is the voice of the people. It is that voice that moves these two men to what their professions make their duty.

PRINTERS STRIKE IN LONDON.

Three Firms Affected by the 8-Hour Day Demand.

London Jan. 10.—The printers' battle in behalf of an 8-hour day, which is in progress all over the United States, affected London yesterday. The management of The Advertiser job printing office announced that they could not accept the demands of the union. All other job printing establishments where union men are employed gave a similar answer. Accordingly, the men walked out.

The strike involves in all some twenty-five men; eight are out of The Advertiser office and a similar number did not return to work this morning at Lawson & Jones'. A. Talbot & Co, are also affected.

An endeavor was made to reach a settlement by means of an advance in wages, amounting to 90 cents per week, but the men could not accept it, being bound by the order of the International body.

The printers in The Advertiser news room may also walk out.

BARON RITCHIE DEAD.

Former Chancellor of the Exchequer in Balfour Cabinet.

London, Jan. 10.—Charles T. Ritchie, first Baron Ritchie, the former Chancellor of the Exchequer, who was stricken Monday night with paralysis, died yesterday at Biarritz, France. He was born Nov. 19, 1838. He represented Tower Hamlets from 1874-85, St. Georges-in-the-East 1885-92, was Secretary of the Admiralty 1885-86, President Local Government Board 1886-92. President of Board of Trade 1895-1900, Secretary Home Department 1900-02, Lord Rector of Aberdeen 1902, Chancellor of the Exchequer 1902-03. He was created a Baronet Dec. 8 last, following the resignation of the Balfour Cabinet.

25 Years For Burglary.

New York, Jan. 10.—John Madison, Buffalo, was sentenced to 25 years in the state prison yesterday for attempted burglary. He claims that this is his first offence. He is 27 years old. The police say that he has served time in the penitentiary before.

FALLING TO RUIN.

England's Historic Edifice at Winchester, 400 Years Old, Near Decay—Another One in Peril.

Two famous old English churches, Winchester cathedral and Cripplegate, the burial place of John Milton, are in danger of becoming ruins. They are suffering from old age. The dean and chapter of Winchester recently engaged a trio of architectural and engineering experts to examine the edifice and their report discloses "the danger which threatens one of the grandest and most historical cathedrals in the country."

The decay is most serious in the south wall of the presbytery and is of long standing. For at least 400 years there has been from time to time a settling of the east portion of the building and the movement has been of late more marked. This is attributed partly to the untrustworthy foundation, which rests upon a bed of soft marl, only ten feet below the surface and which permanently is washed by water.

Other walls show signs of subsidence, while the spires and pinnacles of the west front are in a dilapidated if not dangerous condition.

To effect requisite repairs at least $30,000, and probably more, will be required, but, as the dean and chapter possess no fabric fund, they appeal to the nation for help in securing the safety of what is a national possession —a church which contains the bones of Saxon kings, and in wealth of historical association and architectural beauty is almost without a rival.

The bells in Cripplegate Church can't be rung now without causing such vibration as to loosen stones and shake them out on the roadway, to the danger of the passersby. The tower is nearly 800 years old, but the damage is not considered anything like so serious as at Winchester. Still, a great deal of money will be required to save from ruin what is considered the historical city monument in Jewry street, Aldgate.

The demolition of some old buildings has brought to light a splendid specimen of the old Roman wall of London in a good state of preservation. It was found about eight feet below the street level and is about eight feet high and nine feet thick. There are three tiers of tiles, the other part being built in cubes, and the wall is a perfect specimen of Roman masonry. Great care has been taken to preserve the wall as a memorial of early London.

The Princess Royal.

While the Duchess of Fife, who is one of the most shy and unassuming of women, probably cares little about the title of "princess royal" conferred upon her by her father, King Edward, she cannot but be gratified by the grant of the title and rank of princess to her two daughters, who, although they come immediately after the children of the Prince of Wales in the line of succession to the Crown, have hitherto had to be content with the mere courtesy prefix of "lady" to their Christian names, and with the status of commoners, says the Marquise de Fontenoy. The elder, Lady Alexandra, now Princess Alexandra, is near 15 years of age, and is the heir to her father's dukedom of Fife, which her son will in turn inherit if she marries and has male issue. The young daughter, Lady Maud, now Princess Maud, is 12. The title of Princess Royal was last borne by Empress Frederick and is usually held by the eldest daughter of an English Sovereign.

British Premier in a Breakdown.

An interesting story of the English Premier and Sir Thomas Lipton comes from Garstang, near Preston. Mr. Balfour was automobiling with Sir Thomas, from Scotland, in the latter's car when it broke down while passing through the village and an old woman who had witnessed the accident asked them to come into the house and warm themselves by the fire while the car was being repaired, an invitation which the two gentlemen accepted.

They listened to some little children recite and sing songs and partook of tea. The old woman did not know who her visitors were until the chauffeur revealed the identity of one of them by calling out:

"The car is repaired, Sir Thomas."

The gentlemen thanked the old lady warmly for her hospitality, gave the children half a sovereign ($2.50) each, and Mr. Balfour promised to show his hostess around the House of Commons whenever she came to London.

Unpleasant Practical Joke.

A practical joke of a peculiarly unpleasant nature was perpetrated at Portsmouth, England:

A large quantity of phosphide of calcium, a chemical which when brought into contact with water diffuses exceedingly noxious fumes, was dropped into a drain.

In a moment the whole thoroughfare reeked to such a degree as to be uninhabitable. They was a general stampede of pedestrians. Many diners in a large restaurant quitted their seats, and the place had to be temporarily closed. Other shops near by put up their shutters for at least half an hour.

As the chemical is largely used in the navy in connection with night torpedo practice, it is believed that the "joke" was the work of some one in the navy.

The Word "Cad."

When did the word "cad" come to have its present odious meaning? In 1837 it was applied to a London omnibus conductor without the slightest disrespect. In a letter from Carlyle to Abraham Hayward in that year occurs this passage: "When you have time to write answer, pray pack up the quarterlies along with it; send your famulus into Fleet street, and he will see a Chelsea omnibus; the cad will bring it me for sixpence within an hour."

No Sanctity in Garments.

There is no sanctity in garments. A rose in a man's hat does not enlarge his piety. Grace is not conveyed by a piece of lawn or chastity by the wearing of a girdle. A black gown has neither more sense nor better manners than a black coat, nor is a black coat more edifying than a fustian frock, no more than a cambric bib is an antidote against lewdness or an atonement for it.—Independent Whig, 1719.

FORESTRY PROGRESS.

Two Extensive Additions Made to Permanent Forest Reserves.

The annual report of the Bureau of Forestry is being circulated by the clerks of the Attorney-General's Department.

The report, in reference to forestry progress in Ontario, say the fire ranging system on public lands under license continues to be an increasingly useful institution in the protection of standing timber, in which both the lumbermen and the province have a direct and large financial interests.

The number of rangers applied for by lumbermen has been greater than ever before. This is taken to indicate an appreciation of the value of the service to the lumbering interests.

During the past season the department has organized a fire protection service for the protection of lands along the Temiskaming Railway, the building of which through a practically unbroken forest presented unusual dangers. The expense of the service, which proved to be most efficient, was borne jointly by the department and the Railway Commission. A feature of this service was the use of railway velocipedes by the rangers, enabling them during dry seasons to follow up trains and extinguish at once any incipient fires.

Two extensive additions have been made to the permanent forest reserves, amounting in all to 6,700 square miles, or 4,288,000 acres, and known respectively as the Western Temagami reserve and the Mississaga reserve.

A number of pictures of timber lots in Norfolk, Huron and Brant counties accompany the report, showing the possibilities of reforestration.

Fig Trees Grow on Vancouver.

It will be news to many horticulturists to learn that fig trees are to be found growing wild on Vancouver Island.

Some little time ago Mr. Parker Williams, M. P. P., sent some leaves to Mr. J. R. Anderson, Deputy Minister of Agriculture, for identification, says The Vancouver World. The trees from which they were obtained, Mr. Williams said, were about two miles apart and seemed to be seedlings of figs. The trees were described as being about six feet in height and making a vigorous growth. After examining the leaves the Deputy Minister replied to Mr. Williams giving his opinion that the specimens certainly resembled the Smyrna fig, and believed it to be of that variety. The fig, whilst it does well and produces good fruit in this province, is not indigenous.

Mr. Anderson referred the specimens to Dr. Fletcher of Ottawa, who coincided with the Deputy Minister as to the variety, and said:

"It is remarkable that these fig trees should have established themselves in British Columbia, but I suppose if the tree would stand the winter, there is no reason why they should not be introduced, because figs, as put up for market, are not treated with heat, so I believe the seeds would grow."

A Canadian Turk.

R. H. Buckham, who is now the commanding admiral of the Turkish navy, a Canadian by birth, is well known in Windsor. He ran away from home when a boy, and sailed the lakes, says The Amherstburg Echo. Later he was adopted and educated by Capt. Elliott, now residing in Romeo, Mich. Later he became one of the most trusted employes of the big Cramp shipyard, Philadelphia. When the Turkish Government bought a man-of-war from the Cramps, Buckham was selected to sail it. On arriving at Constantinople he was offered a commission in the Turkish navy, and quickly rose to his present position.

Plenty of Rabbits.

The big white rabbit commonly called "Jack Rabbit" are quite plentiful in the swamps a few miles north of Oshawa, says The Reformer. Several of the local nimrods have already bagged quite a number.

A Bitter Taunt.

The other day at cards two London ladies quarreled long and arduously over a payment of the gigantic sum of 15 shillings. At last the loser flung the money down on the table, saying, with concentrated venom, "There, that will pay for your next dinner party."

Spawn In Georgian Bay.

The spawn gatherers have finished their labors at Wiarton, and at once hied them away to their respective homes. The supply of spawn this year was as good as ever, though the fish were a little late in reaching the spawning grounds.

VISITORS FROM THE NORTH.

Characteristics of Several Varieties of the Owl Described.

The owl is a ghostly bird, always suggesting some vague association with weird and uncertain visitors of the night. The long, tremulous call of the great horned owl, the mirthless, questioning laugh of the barrel owl, and the timid, wailing whistle of the smallest member of the family are alike replete with the spirit of shadowy mystery, coming out of the night as voices of the unknown. The lightness of their silent flight among the close branches or across the open sky is in itself suggestive of the unearthly, and in the dimness of intellectual twilight they have helped the active fancy to people the air with weird and threatening phantoms. The snowy owl, ghostly in its arctic plumage, is diurnal in its habits, and this may have saved the timid from many disordered imaginings. The most dreaded enemies are those we create ourselves, and the terror of a white owl moving silently among the dark evergreens would make the woods at night a place abhorred. Nature in her eternal adjustments has made the snowy owl diurnal, the white that would warn the crouching sparrows and skurrying rodents in the night being an easy concealment among the hummocks of snow in the open northern day.

The Island sand bar and marshes have been visited by a small party of snowy owls this winter, and they have not shown the innocent confidence in man peculiar to other strangers from the far north, says a writer in The Globe. The herring gulls are scarcely more alert in discerning the proximity of guns or more accurate in estimating their range. They have moved about uneasily, with steady flight, freely traversing the Island and marshes. Mice, rats, sparrows, and other pests, have learned of the new danger, and are ready to seek cover on the first appearance of expanding white wings in the upper air. The snowy owl likes a commanding perch, where he can sit erect and turn his round white head thoughtfully from side to side, searching the ground with his wonderfully discerning vision. From such a perch he can drop down with startling suddenness on any mouse or squirrel that ventures out of cover. On the Island the buildings that are associated with the noisy hilarity of summer are selected by the snowy owls as points of observation. One bird fell a victim through the easy concealment afforded by adjacent buildings, but the others are far more cautious than their occasional diminutive victims.

The snowy owl breeds in the far north, but generally makes a winter visit to the lake country. He has not the stay-at-home habits of his nocturnal relatives. Though quite wary, he is so large and conspicuous that death continually threatens. A discouraging proportion of these visitors are generally destroyed. When the ice forms in large, irregular cones and barriers along the shore, a snowy owl can easily find a perch that will give his telescopic eyes a wide range. Though beautifully conspicuous he cannot be approached, and the advances of an observer are construed as an unfriendly act. A long excursion over the ragged edge of the ice-bordered lake shows the futility of all such overtures. This grandest member of the owl family has a good reputation as a destroyer of vermin, but that would not save him if exposed to the destructive weapons of what his enemies call civilization. He owes his survival to a fondness for the great, unpeopled north, where, protected by the color of the long winter, he lives and moves in peaceful harmony with the great arctic silence.

SOME VALUABLE CLAIMS.

Big Holdings in the Cobalt District by War Veterans.

The time for the application of veterans for land grants for military services expired on December 31, 1905, and it is understood that the time is to "expire" for good, and that the Government will not on any account make an extension.

Less than half of the men who have been given claims have located them. A number of the veterans have located in the townships of Dyment, Buck and Hudson, and these townships have been withdrawn by the Government from settlement, so far as the veterans are concerned, as they form part of the Cobalt district. Previous to the order withdrawing these townships, a large number of veterans made locations because they were understood to be rich in mineral, and under the Veterans' Land Grant Act the mineral belongs to the locater, and this is one of the advantages over the ordinary settler. The claims of veterans located before the withdrawal order passed will hold good. In ordinary cases of settlement the minerals are reserved by the Crown. All the claims that have been assigned by veterans to other parties will be cancelled unless settlement duties are performed as in the case of the ordinary settler. Prospects are fairly good for a number of law suits over claims in this district.

Early and provident fear is the mother of safety.—Burke.

The Story of a Brook.

To lovers of outdoors there are few things in the wide world which are more enchanting, more altogether delighting, than just such a brook, whose course—whose life, so to speak—I have been trying to bring to the mind of those who know all its turns and whims and caprices in summer and in winter, in spring and in autumn, when much rain had maddened it and when none had caused it to shrink into a warped thing of nature without form and void. We may be hundreds of miles from the brook which we know best, but we know it is flowing just as it used to do, and there is ever the thought that if we cannot see it in its daily moods there are others who may do so. And, no matter the name of the peaceful valley through which it flowed or where that valley may be, it was the brook of our childhood, and there is a brook, or ought to be, away back somewhere in the mind of every one whose heart and memory take him back to the scenes where at least some younger days were spent.—Outdoors.

Wants and Needs.

The moment the monthly salary crosses the bare necessity line, that moment the horizon of wants begins to widen, says Harper's Bazar. For every dollar the salary increases the imagination finds a place for $2, $3, $4 or $5. A great part of the demands existing in the world today are romantic. How shall the imagination be schooled, where shall the line be drawn?

It should be considered a part of morality to live within the income, but on every side there seems to be an attempt to stretch the $1,000 income to a $2,000 scale, the $2,000 income to a $3,000 scale, $3,000 is made to do duty for $5,000 and $5,000 is thinly stretched to the breaking point to stimulate a $10,000 income. With every added dollar the horizon of wants will widen unless the imagination is wisely schooled. Sadly do we need training to draw the line between wants and needs.

Tall Wives, Short Men.

Big men are usually shy and diffident and lacking in self assurance. The woman who appeals to them is usually some sparkling, vivacious, fairylike creature with kittenish ways and roguish glances. The little man, on the contrary, is seldom burdened with humility. He is a being of great aspirations and stupendous ambitions. He believes in himself, which is the reason why he generally can get the woman of his choice to smile upon him. The dainty, Titania-like woman has no charms for him, says Woman's Life. The five foot six or seven man likes a woman to be one or two inches his superior and thoroughly mature. He dreads any trace of the bread and butter schoolgirl. His ideal resembles the strong, heroic women Shakespeare has pictured, full of character and spirit, with a fair spice of temper.

The Penang Patrol Wagon.

Writing of the local patrol wagon the Penang correspondent of the Straits Times, Singapore, says: "It forcibly calls to mind at first sight a four wheeled baker's cart, bar the fact that it is drawn by about the slowest pair of bullocks in the settlement. There is nothing grim at all about it, for it is commanded by a sleepy Malay constable perched on the box; its roof and sides are formed of white canvas, and it has no door to close at the back, but merely an opening in which another Malay constable half slumbers. Two or three other constables ride inside sitting on the benches with the prisoners, who seem to be too struck with novelty of the ride to make any attempt at escape. I should say that an escape from this prison van would be as easy as falling off a log."

A Dinner.

The bosom of a mallard duck stewed down until there are no juices going to waste, a baked potato about the size of a goose egg, two slices of Boston brown bread right out of the oven and spread with butter that has no athletic reputation, a spoonful of raspberry jelly, a cupful of Young Hyson of moderate strength, a piece of pumpkin pie, man's size, and you have a dinner that ought to keep you in a good humor until curfew rings.

The Black Watch.

The title of "Black Watch" conferred on the Forty-second regiment, now the Royal highlanders, originated in the time of the Jacobite risings in Scotland in 1730, when companies of the loyal clans were set to watch the highlands, forming a corps of military police under the title of the Royal Highland Black Watch, the color having reference to the dark tartan worn by the men.—London Standard.

WOMAN'S WORLD

MISS GRACE BARSTOW.

Only Woman Violin Maker In This Country if Not In World.

Miss Grace Barstow of San Jose, Cal., the granddaughter of Judge A. L. Rhodes, a pioneer jurist of Santa Clara county, is winning fame as the maker of fine violins. The house in which this bright young genius lives and makes her violins was brought around the Horn in 1850 by Commodore Stockton and later was owned by Baron Bendeleben. It has always been a rendezvous for musicians.

MISS GRACE BARSTOW.

To play the violin is the accomplishment of hundreds of young women, but few have constructed the beloved instrument from which such wonderful melody can be obtained. Miss Barstow has the unique distinction of being the only woman violin maker in America, if not in the world, and, moreover, she is a noted performer on the instrument of her own making. She has not only accomplished wonders in her workshop, but has found time to perfect a repertory in which Paganini, Sarasate, Mendelssohn, Bruck and Beethoven are conspicuous.

Possessing a fitting environment and intelligent sympathy, when her desire to make a violin became known Miss Barstow's family gave her every encouragement and sent to Germany for the necessary woods. Altogether six violins have been completed by her, each one a noted improvement on preceding effort until the last instrument is said by experts to possess a delightfully rich and brilliant tone. Miss Barstow has shown considerable inventive genius in constructing her violins, successfully experimenting with the native redwood as a base bar, and will use more of that wood in her next violin. From present indications Miss Barstow is destined to become world famous.

An Ideal Boudoir.

An ideal boudoir is treated to one of the fabric effects in wall papers. One of the most fascinating selections to be had is in a pale shade of blue and represents a dimity pattern. A border of blue background sprayed with clusters of delicate pink roses accompanies it. Each wall is paneled separately. The border is started along the baseboard to corner, across the room right below ceiling, down the next corner, and the other walls are managed the same. Have the ceiling clear white, the woodwork white, and the furniture should consist of simple and small pieces of mahogany. A designer who is noted for his original and sensible as well as artistic ideas declares that metal and brass beds are too showy, gaudy and cold for the boudoir and places his seal of approval on a small four poster bed of mahogany. The dresser and dressing table of simple lines are the most adorning, he says.

Where the room is adaptable a window seat is inviting and offers many possibilities. A rocker and two other chairs complete and so satisfy the plan.

For window hangings choose ruffled net for street curtains, ruffled grenadines tied back over this and an overhanging in plain blue linen or cretonne. Having chosen this, try to find cretonne of striped pattern. Cut out one of these stripes and applique it on the overhanging, forming a little border down the center and across the bottom. Hang straight to the window sill. If the window is wide add a fresh plaited flounce across the top, extending to the extreme edges of both curtains. Have a little border carried across the border of that. The furniture may hold the same design. Brass or metal fixtures correspond with white round glass globes, which preferably are plain.—Washington Star.

The Long Mirror.

"I hadn't the faintest idea my dress hung like that!" said a woman in amazement the other day.

She caught a glimpse of herself in the long pier glass of a drug store. That glimpse showed a snag in her skirt that worried her.

"Haven't you a long mirror at home?" asked her friend.

"No; they're so expensive."

"My dear, they are the cheapest article of furniture a woman can buy," was the reply. "Take my word for it. They seem expensive, but they aren't. You can do without a thousand things, but a cheval glass or mirror of some kind that shows your full length is a necessity."

"My husband calls it vanity," put in the friend as a sort of defense.

"It's exactly the opposite," was the reply. "A mirror that enables us to see ourselves as others see us takes us down a peg or two just when we are most puffed up. It shows the rip in the seam, the petticoat protruding beyond the skirt, the bulging of a collar or the necktie badly fixed in the back, the buttons in the shirt waist that are unfastened, the hair that is rumpled and astray, the curve in the shoulders that won't come off, the unbecoming way of holding oneself—in a word, it holds up to one's vision the defects of one's appearance as a whole.

"A smaller mirror is of course just as necessary as a large one, and the two should supplement each other. Then you have a frank critic that never deceives you."

"I'll get one," murmured the listener.

"Get a plain, solid one. Put it in a well lighted part of the room, and you'll be astonished how attached you'll get to it."

The other smiled.

"No; not from vanity, but necessity."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Gilt and Glass.

For a luncheon table a most dainty and effective idea may be carried out in gilt. The charm of it all is—everything gold and glittering crystal. The ware to be used—Austrian glass, gilt decorated; no color in the designs. Let the candelabra be cut glass, with gilt trimmings, or all glass or all gilt. Let the tiny shades be of gilt metal scroll work, with yellow linings. Yellow bead fringes cast the candle light in twinkling yellow beams. The candles, too, should be as near gold color as possible. Set the table with a lunch cloth and dollies embroidered in some yellow silk design, flowers or conventional, and decorate with graceful festoons of yellow flowers in season. Then come yellow ribbons and yellow this and that, with crystal everywhere. The idea is charming.

Benefits of Standing Up.

Women are supposed to grow more masculine as time changes, and our manners change with the times, so it may not have attracted much notice how lately they have taken to stand talking, male fashion, in front of the fireplace after luncheon or dinner instead of sinking gracefully into the nearest comfortable chairs. This is, however, no attempt at mannishness, but simply the following out of the latest medical fad, which advises us to stand for at least half an hour after each meal to avoid the pains of indigestion. Food is better assimilated, so it seems, than if we adopt a semi-recumbent position.—London Onlooker.

Double Chin Cure.

To get rid of double chins practice the following exercises: Drop the chin to the chest and, keeping the face to the front, roll the head slowly and in a relaxed condition, describing a circle first to the left and then to the right. From the erect position twist the head to the right as far as possible and then to the left. From the erect position try to touch the right ear to the shoulder, holding the shoulder in a normal position. Returning to position, repeat on the left side. Drop the head as far back as possible and return slowly to position.

Escaloped Cheese.

Escaloped cheese is a great favorite in one family. Cut slices of bread from a stale loaf, trim the crusts and, if desired, halve the slices; butter a baking dish and lay the slices in, alternating them with layers of grated cheese mixed with salt and paprika; pour a cupful of milk over all, dot with bits of butter and bake for twenty minutes or half an hour in a moderate oven. A richer dish is secured by beating one or two eggs and adding to the milk before pouring it over the slices.

Perfuming a Room.

One of the most delicate ways of perfuming a room is to fill a wide mouthed bowl or other dish with boiling water and then pour over it a few drops of perfumed oil. Half a teaspoonful of oil of lavender so used will make a room delightfully fresh at the cost of a fraction of a cent. Any other oil may be treated in the same way, rose or violet giving the effect of a conservatory. It is the oil and not essence which should be used.

Clear Complexion.

The woman who strives after a clear complexion will not eat pastry, fried or greasy food of any description or nuts. When the face lacks color, eat plenty of underdone beef and take a small dose of iron after each meal. When the face is too highly colored these things should of course be specially avoided.

Color Schemes in Dress.

"Color schemes" are always popular and in good taste. They are for all seasons, and particularly suitable for a girl in school. If her hat and dress and gloves not only harmonize, but match in color, with, perhaps, different shades, her appearance is neat and girlish.

The Eyes.

Going to bed early will make the eyes deeper in hue. The woman who wants her light brown eyes to appear black will go to bed an hour sooner. She will sleep facing a dark curtain and will waken gradually in the morning.

Happy at Last

Her Husband no longer gets Intoxicated—Samaria Tasteless Remedy Cured Him.

This lady says: "For the first time since I have been married I can be happy and content—my husband is cured of his bad habit of drinking. Several months ago you sent me a free sample of your remedy at my request, and without my husband's knowledge I gave it to him in his tea and food. I then got a full treatment and gave it regularly. It is wonderful, and I cannot sufficiently thank you for the blessed change it has brought to my home."

HEALTH AND BEAUTY

COME FROM THE RICH, RED BLOOD MADE BY DR. WILLIAMS PINK PILLS.

Beauty is more than skin deep—it is blood deep. There is no real beauty, no good health without rich, red blood. Every graceful curve, every sparkle of the eye, every rosy blush, comes from rich, red blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the greatest blood builder and beauty maker in the world. Every dose actually makes new, pure, rich blood. By making new blood Dr. Williams' Pink Pills sharpen the appetite, soothe the worried nerves, regulate the health. They banish paleness, clear the complexion, bring rosy cheeks and sparkling eyes. They give plenty of strong blood for all the delicate functions of womanhood. Miss Mary Jackson, Normandale, Ont., says: "For upwards of three years I suffered from anaemia. I grew so weak I could scarcely walk about the house. I had no color in my face, my lips and gums were bloodless, I suffered from headaches and dizziness and fell away in weight until I weighed only 94 pounds. No treatment gave me the least benefit until I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Inside of a few weeks after beginning the pills I began to grow better, and they soon restored my health, and while using them I gained fourteen pounds in weight. I can strongly recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to all pale and feeble girls."

There are thousands of pale anaemic girls and women throughout Canada who should follow the example of Miss Jackson and give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial. Bright eyes, rosy cheeks and perfect health would soon follow. When you buy the pills see that the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," is printed on the wrapper around each box. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SEATS OF THE MIGHTY.

Of all the chairs of church or state—
Bench, woolsack, throne, or what you will—
'Tis written in the book of fate
The high chair is the highest still.

Lolled in his office chair there sits
The master of a thousand mills;
Men toil or rest as he permits;
Men fall or prosper as he wills.

Perched on the polished bench, where strife
Cries to condemn or pleads to save,
Sits one, and blots the light from life,
Or nods another to the grave.

Squat in his place of power behold
The monarch of a mighty land!
And destinies are lightly told,
Toyed in the hollow of his hand.

But over all and over each
Another sits, who must be reckoned;
The eternal woman comes to teach
The first of men he is but second.

Yet, hardly is her realm begun
Till she must learn as she has schooled;
For lo! there comes the helpless one
And rules the ruler of the ruled.

For chairs of church or seats of state—
Bench, woolsack, throne or what you will—
Are only relatively great;
The high chair is the highest still.
—St. Nicholas.

ANKLETS WORN AGAIN.

Modern Women In London Return to Ancient Ornament.

The anklet, after hundreds of years, has returned to favor, and is to grace the slender ankle of the belle of to-day.

The modern anklet resembles the plain gold band first worn as a sign of bondage.

Being a slave no more, women, as is her habit, is only too glad to play with the symbol of slavery, provided the symbol is becoming. Therefore, the anklet graces the foot of the girl who wants to be just a little more than merely up-to-date.

Oriental anklets are much in demand, and in many instances these are supplied with a hinge and clasp, and slip round the foot easily.

Some of the new anklets are the tiniest gold bands inscribed with ancient charms, said to defend the wearer from all diseases and from evil of every kind.

Other anklets are made of precious stones strung together. These are worn under the stocking, and scarcely show through, so fine and small are they.

Phenician glass or beaten gold anklets carved in hieroglyphics are very popular, and will probably be worn at winter dances in London this year.

Electric Lighting Pioneer.

Sir Joseph A. Swan, F. R. S., who has just entered on his 78th year, says The London Star, was one of the pioneers of the science of electric lighting, and was, in his house at Gateshead-on-Tyne, patiently and silently perfecting the incandescent lamp which bears his name when systems which are now forgotten were being loudly exploited as the only practical methods. He was born in Sunderland, and was for many years associated with a well-known firm of chemists in Newcastle-on-Tyne, and in that position perfected several valuable inventions in photography. After the invention of the incandescent lamp he left Tyneside, and took up his residence in London, his house in Holland Park being a perfect repository of curiosities and novelties in electricity. He is a fellow of the Royal Society, as well as of other learned bodies. When his daughter was married to Mr. Keble Morcom last year the wedding party was conveyed to St. Mary Abbot's Church in electric broughams.

Three gas companies in London consume between them 4,000,000 tons of coal per annum.

A Lunatic's Delusions.

Carberry, Man., Jan. 10.—Christian Peterson, working on a farm just north of the town, was committed to the Brandon jail for examination as to sanity. Yesterday morning, armed with an axe and knife, he proceeded to make things interesting around the farm. Peterson said that he was under an hypnotic influence exercised by the Free Masons, and that a voice told him to arm himself with knife and axe and go to town to knock in the door of the church and cut down the altar.

May Be French President.

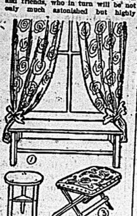
Paris, Jan. 10.—M. Doumer yesterday was re-elected president of the Chamber of Deputies by a small majority over M. Sarrien. The result ensures M. Doumer's candidacy for the presidency of the republic, Jan. 16, and also indicates M. Sarrien's growing strength as a presidential candidate.

THE BOY'S DEN.

Suggestions That May Help Its Owner In Making It Attractive.

Often boys display much ingenuity and artistic taste in fitting up their "dens" with furniture and decorations from their own hands.

With the necessary carpentering tools, a few pots of paint and furniture stain, a few brushes, etc., the boy will show his room proudly to his parents and friends, who in turn will be not only much astonished but highly pleased with what he has accomplished there. And often the furniture he builds is more serviceable, as well as more artistic, than the cheaply put together stuff that now floods the market and fills the homes. Besides this, his "den" is characteristic of himself, and he will feel a pride in its originality. A few rough drawn designs for odd pieces to help furnish a boy's "den" are given here. In following them the young cabinetmaker will begin to discover points for improvement, and gradually he will become his own designer, as well as being skilled in the use of tools.



HELPS FOR THE BOY'S ROOM.

No. 1 shows a convenient and artistic window bench with shelf for newspapers, etc. It is made of any kind of wood the boy finds at hand and may be simply painted to match the color of the woodwork in the room or stained some pretty contrasting color.

No. 2 is an odd bit of a table made with broomstick legs, a barrel end for the top and a three cornered shelf.

No. 3 is a "cross legged stool," a necessary acquisition in a boy's den. It is of cherry colored wood, with padded seat covered with burlap.

The Carrier Bee.

You often have heard of carrier pigeons and the part they play in war, but how many boys and girls ever heard of carrier bees?

These little honey gatherers have such a sense of direction that they can always fly straight to their hives, even from places they have never visited before.

We are told that a few years ago a beekeeper trained some of his insects as message carriers. Knowing they will always fly home from any point in a range of four or five miles, he tied tiny notes for his little daughters on the bees and set them loose in a totally unfamiliar place. In a very short time they were back at their own hives, messages and all.

Some people think bees might be made very useful in war times, and even now experiments are being made to see just how far and how directly they will fly.

Some Dolls.

Most dolls are born in Thuringia, a province of Germany. Thuringia is sometimes called puppet land on this account. Almost the entire population is employed making some parts of the dolls which are sent to every country in the world except India. The little Hindoos are said to be the only dolless children in the world, all countries having something which the little girl can rock to sleep and love. That the American girls love dolls, one has only to read that last year over $8,000,000 worth of dollies came into this country, and nearly all of them from Thuringia.

Conundrums.

Why should a housekeeper never put the letter M into her refrigerator? Because it will change ice into mice.

Why is bread like the sun? Because it rises from the yeast.

What is the cheapest feature of the face? Nostrils, two for a scent (cent).

What is the smallest room in the world? Mushroom.

A Little Problem.

Two men find in a cellar an eight gallon cask full of wine; also an empty five gallon and an empty three gallon cask. They wish to measure out two lots of four gallons each. How can they do it? Figure it out. It is not so hard.

Suppose.

If your fingers grew out at your elbow
And your toes sprouted out at your knee,
If your mouth was on top of your topknot,
How funny, indeed, that would be!
And suppose that your nose went on crosswise,
That your ears dangled down from your chin
And your eyes looked out backward, not forward,
A fine pickle you would be in!

—Washington Star.

THE FOUR ELEMENTS.

Marcus Reed Discusses the Second and Gives Some Data.

II.—EARTH.

Being of such a compound nature, this can only be called an element in a representative sense as standing for the earth on which we live. Not, be it understood, for the whole globe, which is in reality a ball of fire. The habitable earth, with its soil and rocks, forms no more than a thin outer crust, not as thick in proportion as the skin of an orange.

This skin, formed in the course of countless ages by the gradual cooling of the surface, is so thin that it quivers with earthquakes, and is yet so solid that no accumulation of mountains on any given spot makes the slightest impression on it. In fact, like all Cosmic theories, we must accept this slightly uncomfortable knowledge as purely academical, and may consider the earth's crust as quite solid enough in England, though in other countries, Japan for instance, it is still too shaky to be altogether comfortable or trustworthy. So frequently is it shaken in that otherwise delightful country that cards are affixed in some of the hotel bedrooms, advising travelers how to behave when they feel an earthquake coming on!

There was a time when such seismic disturbances were attributed to the Earth Spirits, the Gnomes mentioned in a previous article; misshapen dwarfs guarding the untold treasures of jewels and gold buried deep down in the bowels of the earth—spirits malignant for the most, male and female, for our ancestors were particularly well-informed of such details. It is true these Gnomes never showed themselves, but a man who only believed what he saw would have been completely out of his element in the Middle ages.

We ourselves have still to take very much upon trust. Science tells us much concerning this earth which we cannot expect to verify for ourselves, such as the incomprehensible rapidity of its flight through space, spinning round meanwhile like a gigantic top; but we have ocular proof of the existence of the internal liquid fire upon which we live, from which we are only separated by the thin earth's crust, and which is the indirect cause of earthquakes. Now and again this immense sea of liquid fire, everywhere some seven thousand miles deep, forces itself to the surface through volcanoes, and even permanently boils the water in the geysers of Iceland and the hot lakes of New Zealand, where the Maories, instead of putting a kettle on the fire, just cook their dinner in the thermal village pond.

The friable, brownish substance more specially called earth is of a most peculiar nature. Originally formed by the action of heat and moisture disintegrating the surface of the rocks, it was then no doubt sufficient for plants which required little additional organic substance, but later on its composition has been altogether changed, as Darwin has shown in his masterly theory, by the agency of earthworms, who, by eating the fallen leaves and ejecting the digested matter, have gradually enriched the silicious earth and made it into the rich and fruitful soil, or earth, as we know it now. This slowly produced substance is comparatively scarce; it is spread in many places very thinly over sandy or stony subsoil; we must deduct deserts, forests and mountain ranges, and remember that the sea moreover covers quite three-fourths of the whole globe. Yet it is on this rich, but scarce, substances that our race must dwell and from it draw its substance. Small wonder, therefore, that the immense globe bears its name, though in bulk it be but as a little dust on an apple or the bloom on a peach. From this substance or element our bodies are produced; to it they return. Its quantity is not increased thereby; every succeeding generation reappears, in a manner of speaking, in the bodies of preceding generations. It has been calculated by Hershell that, were it otherwise, the earth would now be surrounded by a layer miles deep of dead generations.

Though forming part of this element we do not live in it; we live in the elastic fluid known as air or the third element. There is little life in the earth itself, except in subterranean lakes or rivers; we should be ignorant of this fact but for a most astonishing phenomenon. The Cotopaxi and other volcanoes of America sometimes eject, with quantities of water and mud, enormous quantities of fish! Humboldt mentions that such masses of fish have been thrown by the Cotopaxi on the estate of the Marquis Salvalegre that they poisoned the air all round.

It is not always easy to bear in mind that the appearance of the earth as we know it now is transitory. We can with difficulty imagine the gloom and wretchedness of our earth during the first Geological Periods, when the heat came from below rather than from above, when thick, impenetrable clouds and vapor surrounded the globe for ages, and never permitted the sun's rays to penetrate; when trees and ferns some hundreds of feet high covered the whole surface of the land in a deep, green, mysterious twilight, and when no animal life existed. The time when the climate of England was tropical, and the hairy elephant, the sabre-toothed tiger roamed where now London stands, must have been quite cheerful by comparison. Grumble as we may about the climate, we are privileged to live in perhaps the happiest period of the existence of our globe; during the glacial period only the icebear and seal could live in England, and this uncomfortable period is surely coming back! The time of its return is known to within a fraction to our astronomers, who foretell that the glaciers of Greenland shall one day stretch again as far south as the Rhone, in France, leaving England as a frozen Nova Zembla in the midst of a sea of Arctic ice and snow, uninhabitable for ages and ages.

The extremes of cold and heat, eternal ice and liquid fire, are united on one single spot in the world, and nowhere else could such a dramatic juxtaposition be witnessed. Mount Erebus in the Antarctic Sea, near the South Pole, is enveloped in snow and ice from the base to the summit, resembling an immense block or cone of frozen snow, and yet this is a fiery volcano in perpetual activity! Very appropriate is its name, Erebus, the son of Chaos, and the name of that dark and gloomy cavern through which the shades pass into Hades.

DAY OF RECORD-SMASHER.

Immense Traffic the Past Season of Navigation on the Great Lakes—Vesselmen Made Money.

The last grain cargo has left Fort William and the season of navigation for 1905 is at an end. That the final incident of the closing chapter was the clearing of a record-breaking cargo is not so notable as it would have been a few years ago. Canadians have reached the record-smashing era, and the big things of yesterday have become the incidents of to-day. The story of Canadian commerce on the great lakes for 1905 is one of expansion. It is only a step from the days when wooden barges broke records with cargoes of wheat that ranged around 30,000 bushels, to the sailing of last clearance of the Rogers with 351,000. Of the stupendous crop of grain garnered in the Canadian Northwest at the close of the summer 15,000,000 bushels have crossed the great lakes to be moved on for export via Canadian traffic routes. In the general crush 5,000,000 bushels approximately found its way to the seaboard via Buffalo. In addition to this 5,000,000 bushels of last year's crop were shipped from Fort William in Canadian hulls earlier in the season, making a total eastern and export movement in Canadian grain of approximately twenty-five million bushels. It will be readily understood that these figures at this early date cannot be official.

Railway Equipment Inadequate.

Large as these figures are, they do not represent the best efforts of the Canadian lake marine. The Grand Trunk fell far short of the requirements of the grain traffic at its newly-acquired port, Depot Harbor. The system could not furnish sufficient cars to handle the business with despatch, and the elevators at Midland, Meaford and Collingwood were found to be under lease by United States corporations and not in such position that Canadian business could profit to the fullest by the facilities which they might have afforded. At Owen Sound the Canadian Pacific candidly declined to cater extensively to the grain business. Their hands were full there with the movement of package freight and mill stuff, and while this offered it did not pay to handle wheat. The result of all this was to unduly crowd Depot Harbor and to further add to the Grand Trunk's embarrassment at that point.

Had the fleet of grain-carriers met with reasonable despatch they could have moved 3,000,000 bushels more before the close of navigation. At prevailing rates the loss to vessel interests alone was not far short of $100,000. Added to this, however, is the loss consequent on the inability of the shipper to forward quickly, and the unsettling effect on the far western markets, which, it is said, was primarily the cause of 56-cent wheat at Saskatoon and other points.

Vessel-Owners' Profits.

While it is recognized that the capital invested in the Canadian grain fleet represents some millions of dollars, the profits on the season were correspondingly good. The season opened on a two and one-quarter cent basis and closed at four cents per bushel. The average was easily three cents. Last year's wheat was moved at about two and one-quarter. It is probable that 5,000,000 bushels was moved in United States hulls, so that the remaining Canadian wheat business has produced for the Canadian vessel-owners a revenue of $662,500.

Wheat is the material evidence of the nation's wealth; the west-bound package freight business is its reciprocating feature. It is the latter that tells of the purchasing power of the people who have the wheat to sell. Just as the carloads of pianos that are unloaded into the vessel's hold tell of the increasing wealth and appreciation of luxury among the western people, so also do the thousand-and-one manufactured articles contribute to that certainty and bear evidence that eastern Canada is pulsating with the commercial circulation that is the life of trade.

Package Freight Business.

Three lake routes have been extensively identified with the package freight business to western Canada. Naturally the Canadian Pacific Railway participates in this business to the greatest extent. A semi-official statement places the package freight business via Owen Sound and C. P. R. at 154,000 tons during the thirty-two weeks of navigation. Second in importance is the route via Sarnia and the Northern Navigation Co., which has moved westward this season about 80,000 tons of package freight. The other is the all-water route from Montreal to Fort William via Toronto and Hamilton. This is a comparatively new enterprise in which several vessel interests are participating and the steamers on the route include the Ames, Pellatt, Plummer, Neepewah, Wahcondah, Arabian, Haddington and Advance. Their west-bound package freight traffic was between 60,000 and 70,000 tons. Taking the lower figure the total business in this classification was 294,000 tons of manufactured products.

Great Highways of Traffic.

To review Canadian business on the great lakes for the season of 1905 in its entirety would require considerable space. Take the coal business for example. From Lake Erie ports during the season just closed coal was delivered by water as follows: To Georgian Bay ports, 200,000 tons; Fort William and Jackfish, 500,000 tons; West Fort William, 300,000 tons. Half of this was carried in Canadian bottoms, during the slack months of the season, at thirty to thirty-five cents a ton, giving a reasonable margin of profit and a north-bound cargo. About 9,000,000 bushels of United States grain passed into the elevators at Depot Harbor and Midland and 40,000 tons of United States manufactured goods passed through Depot Harbor over Canadian lines in bond from New England to the western States. Half a million bushels of American oats from Chicago came to a Georgian Bay elevator for a large Canadian cereal works. Then 10,000 tons of pig iron were carried from Midland to the steel mills at Sault Ste. Marie, and thousands of tons of iron ore moved down from Michipicoten to the smelters. All this is practically new business and Canadian vessels are taking care of it.

THE ART OF TEA MAKING.

There Are Other Things Besides the Quality of the Beverage.

To make good tea is one thing; to make tea gracefully is a wholly different thing. The Frenchwoman makes tea gracefully, whether the cup is good or not.

The cardinal principal in tea making is to be at your ease. Seem to enjoy yourself. If you do not enjoy yourself you may be sure that there will be little enjoyment for your guests. The spectacle of a tired hostess is a familiar one and a never pleasant one. Think over the hostesses you know. The pleasantest places to visit are the places where the hostess has a good time herself. She smiles and is glad to see you, and you feel that you are making her happy.

It is said that a woman who has kept her figure is sweetest at forty. Anyway she can make the best cup of tea. Her pleased, half amused manner as she makes it is delightful; so also is the pretty way she holds the cup toward you; so also is the manner in which she makes and sips her own cup while you are taking yours. Almost imperceptibly she refills your cup. There is a sentiment in keeping the same cup while she pours some fresh tea into it. And so the tea hour passes. It is a delightful thing.

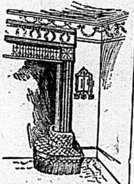
The hostess who does not acquire the art of making a cup of afternoon tea calmly and well is the hostess who knows little or nothing about finesse.

Practice the art of tea making when you are all alone. Take a cup of tea and pass it across the table. See if you can do it without forgetting anything and without upsetting it; then try to do it and to listen at the same time. Pretend you are holding a conversation. Don't look at the cup too steadily. Practice tea making until you can do it without more than glancing at the cup. It is easy. And when you have learned it—be you rich or poor, a great hostess or a small one—you will have acquired a pretty art which will serve you in good stead all your life.—Brooklyn Eagle.

FOLDING DOOR SETTEE.

It Is Artistic and Adds to the Room's Appearance.

Folding doors between communicating rooms are seldom closed. An ordinary chair within a few feet of the space never looks well. It shows its back to one room or the other and is in the way. The settee illustrated here is an addition to any decorative arrangement of either room. It does not interfere with any graceful drapery that may be arranged at the door. It is decidedly useful, convenient and gives a certain touch of the unusual and elegant to the room. Of course it is readily rolled to some other position when it is desired to close the sliding doors. A settee of this kind is not difficult to fashion, and a very pretty one could easily be made and upholstered at home.



A CONVENIENT SEAT.

Work Soiled Hands.

If a girl works around a typewriter during the day or handles dusty goods the hands are thoroughly begrimed by night, the dirt soaking in as the perspiration opens the pores. If there is no running water at her office she should leave them uncovered until she reaches home. Putting on gloves soils the latter for any further use and dries the hands. Wash the hands in tepid water holding a teaspoonful of ammonia. Scrub well with castile soap and a stiff brush. Borax soap dries the skin too much after excessive perspiration. Always keep half a lemon on the washstand with which to rub the hands and nails after the first dirt has been removed. The hands should be scrubbed again well before retiring or while bathing in the morning. This is the only means of getting the grime and discoloration entirely out of the flesh each day. A sulphur match dipped in water and rubbed on the spot will remove ink stains.

The Children's Scrapbook.

The scrapbook is a pleasant and educative fad to indulge the children. The future years are likely to be the outcome of the child's life in his scrapbook. There should be some definite means of expression for the child's train of thought.

One enjoys the pictures of locomotives. The future may find him a railway magnate. One finds the pictures of buildings a matter of constant pleasure, and no doubt time will register him as an architect. Birds interest another child, and it may quicken within him the spirit of ornithology.

Give your child a scrapbook and see what his tastes are, and if he does not have natural interest in one perhaps a little of your attention will help to awaken latent powers. Foster the originalities of your child as much as you can.

HOME DECORATIONS.

Consult Specialists if You Have No Sense of the Artistic.

It requires an eye for color, great intuition and a general artistic sense of the fitness of things to engineer the interior decorating of a home. Comparatively speaking, there are few homes that display good taste in the general scheme. It is far more desirable to have all the rooms in harmony than to have one elaborately decorated at the expense of another. The average woman, declares a professional, has no idea of artistic decorating. Let her go, for instance, to pick out wall paper, and she can comprehend no further than the little piece that is hung up for suggestion. She cannot with her eye get a correct picture of the room as it will appear completed. The beauty of simplicity does not appeal to her, and, nine cases out of ten, she chooses an overdone scheme; she has no eye for color, and so combines the wrong tones. The woman who is about to furnish a home and is not sure of her own judgment should value the opinion of the salespeople if she is assured that they understand their business. Unless one has enjoyed superior advantages, together with the benefit of applied knowledge, she cannot fail to do better than accept the suggestions of specialists in that line, whose minds are concentrated on evolving designs and schemes which shall conform to the rules of science and art. The true and conscientious decorator will study the personality of his customer, and around that he will work. Colors so affect the powers of endurance that they should be chosen with great care.—Chicago Tribune.

A DAINTY TOILET.

It Is a More Potent Factor in Looks Than Fine Clothes.

The value of the toilet must not be underestimated by the woman who would charm.

The ordinary, everyday good looking girl, who finds life a serious thing and cannot command the lovely garments that make pretty women wondrously beautiful, often wistfully wonders why she, too, should not at least look fresh, well groomed and fair. So she may, but she must be persuaded to give a little more thought and time to her daily toilet, and then, in spite of plain attire, the woman of ordinary good looks may be quite transformed and the plain girl really pretty.

The girl who puts on her clothes "anyhow," who brushes her hair but perfunctorily and who is careless as to the little details of attire will never look anything else but dowdy and unattractive. She should remember that the woman who looks "so beautifully" dressed does not owe all her daintiness to picturesque clothes—she bestows time and care on her daily toilet. The busiest girl should try and find time to be neat and fresh.

He was surprised at how the sores healed—"I took your New Method Treatment for a serious blood disease with which I had been afflicted for twelve years. I had consulted a score of physicians, taken all kinds of blood medicine, visited Hot Springs and other mineral water resorts, but only got temporary relief. They would help me for a time, but after discontinuing the medicines the symptoms would break out again—running sores, blotches, rheumatic pains, looseness of the hair, swellings of the glands, palms of the hands scaling, itchiness of the skin, dyspeptic stomach, etc. I had given up in despair when a friend advised me to consult you, as you had cured him of a similar disease 8 years ago. I had no hope, but took his advice. In three weeks' time the sores commenced to heal up and I became encouraged. I continued the New Method Treatment for four months and at the end of that time every symptom had disappeared. I was cured 7 years ago and no signs of any disease since. Salvation Army Funeral.

The funeral of the late Sergeant Mary A. Thompson, of the Salvation Army, was held yesterday afternoon. At 2.30 services were held at the Barracks, conducted by Adjutant Cameron, of Kingston, assisted by Staff Capt. Perry, of this city. The Barracks were filled with friends. The band in connection with the Army preceded the hearse and played the Dead March in "Saul." The bearers were members of the Army, namely, M. Smith, D. Smith, R. Corneil, J. Young, W. Edge and J. Turner.

Twenty-five cents buys a large bottle of Nerviline; try it.

MR. PHILLIPS IN COURT

At Request of Counsel Case is Remanded For a Week.

Defendant Did Not Elect or Plead—Case Hinges on Two Technical Points Says Defendant's Counsel—Court Names a Liquidator of the Southern Light & Power Co.—Winding-Up Order Granted.

Toronto, Jan. 10.—Joseph Phillips, manager of the York County Loan Co., who was placed under arrest Monday night on a charge of fraud and conspiracy, appeared before Magistrate Denison yesterday morning, but did not elect or plead, and was remanded for a week.

"I would like an adjournment for that time," said Mr. B. H. Ardagh, who represented the defendant.

"That is satisfactory to me," answered Crown Attorney Curry, who intimated, however, that he was ready to proceed with the preliminary investigation.

Mr. W. H. Hunter, bondsman for Mr. Phillips, who was released from custody on $5,000, was also in court, and the bail was renewed.

Two Technical Points.

Mr. Ardagh said nothing could be disclosed to show wrongdoing on the part of Mr. Phillips. "The case," he said, "hinges on two technical points, first, as to the portion of the transfer of property to the Toronto Realty Co., with regard to the returns made to the Government; second, as to the meaning of the loan companies' act with regard to the application of loan funds to terminating shares. Mr. Ardagh stated that they wanted to show they had better security in hand than the land so transferred the Toronto Realty Co., accepting the mortgages on it, and these mortgages figured in the returns to the Government.

Winding-Up Order Granted.

Yesterday at Osgoode Hall, Judge Mabee in chambers granted a winding-up order in connection with the Southern Light & Power Co., a subsidiary company to the York Loan, with John Mackay as interim liquidator, and Neil McLean as official referee. Petition was made on behalf of the Portland Cement Co. and Edward Gegg. C. D. Scott was present for the National Trust, liquidators of the York Loan, who were interested to the extent of $212,000. W. H. Blake, K. C., acted for the Portland Cement Co., who have judgment for $1,700 against the company.

The assets of the company are placed at or about $200,000. Liabilities are $232,000, leaving a deficit of $35,000.

AFTER ALLEGED USURERS.

Toronto Police Raid Money Lenders Offices and Seize Books.

Toronto, Jan. 10.—Crown Attorney Curry is after another bunch of the "get rich quick" fellows. This time it is the alleged usurers he is paying his attention to.

Armed with search warrants Detectives Kennedy and Anderson visited the offices of D. R. McNaught & Co., 6 King street west, and Detectives Tiplin and Guthrie did the same to S. A. Anderson & Co. in the Confederation Life Building. The officers seized the books and papers in both offices and carted them to police headquarters, where they were turned over to Mr. Curry.

Summonses have been served on Herman C. Kiehr, manager of the McNaught Co., and Robert McHarrie, manager of the Anderson Co. They will be asked in the Police Court to plead to the same charges as Phillips of the York Loan Company, "that they did conspire, by deceit, fraud and other means to defraud the public contrary to section 394 of the criminal code."

A number of those who have been victims, or customers of these firms will be asked to give evidence.

True Bills Against Plumbers.

On the charges of conspiracy to limit the facilities for supplying and dealing in plumbers' supplies and by deceit and other fraudulent means to defraud Warwick Bros. & Rutter out of $1,200, true bills have been brought in by the grand jury against George F. McGuire, W. J. McGuire, Alexander Purdy, J. B. Fitzsimmons, K. J. Allison, W. Mashinter, H. B. Hogarth, Charles Robertson, F. R. Maxwell, H. Johnson George Wallis, James Fiddes, George Clapperton and Joseph Wright.

On the charge of conspiracy and defrauding the Toronto Bedding Co. of $400, true bills were also returned against W. J. McGuire, George F. McGuire, George Clapperton, Joseph Wright, Henry Hogarth, Alex. Purdy, W. Mashinter, and David Menzies.

It is expected the trials will commence to-day.

Account Lennox Didn't Pay.

A decided conflict of testimony developed at the civic investigation yesterday morning. Mr. W. B. Rogers testified that not only was it at Mr. Lennox's solicitation he paid Dr. Lynd $100, but that Mr. Lennox approached him twice upon the subject at some six months' interval. Mr. Rogers' books also disclosed that in 1901 the firm had written off as a bad debt an account of $547.70 against Mr. E. J. Lennox for goods supplied to his residence in 1899. Mr. Rogers said the entry was misleading, as the account was written off because Mr. Lennox claimed that the goods had been destroyed, also his house on the Island as a result of defective work, for which the firm was responsible in connecting the mantle grate in one of the rooms. Mr. Rogers admitted that his enquiries had not convinced him that the contention was correct, but partly for that reason and partly because of old friendship and the amount of work Mr. Lennox had thrown his way, he wiped out the account.

TACK COMBINE'S LETTERS.

Some Light Thrown Upon Association's Methods in Various Ways.

Toronto, Jan. 10.—The reading of the minutes of the Tack Manufacturers' Association has occupied practically the whole of the time in connection with the tack combine investigation at the Police Court. Yesterday morning Crown Attorney Curry completed this task, and at once produced the association letter-book and commenced the reading of letters bearing on the case. This is a task which bids fair to occupy a great deal of time.

Mr. S. Frame, clerk in the employ of Jenkins & Hardy, was in the witness-box to verify the signatures, etc.

An attempt was being made in 1894 to induce W. T. Woodall, a tack manufacturer of Montreal, to join the combine. Woodall desired to know the nature of the combine into which he was asked to enter.

R. and T. Jenkins, in reply, sketched an outline, and embodied it in a letter dated July 9, 1894. It began: "As promised by the writer, we herewith give you shortly the rules of this association," which were along the lines employed in the other "combine" agreements, and concluded: "We think the above is (shortly) all the information it is necessary for you to have in connection with the above association."

Woodall refused to join the association.

One letter read by Mr. Curry referred to a cancellation of a quotation given by Pock and Benning after it was found out that the prices were ruled by the combine. The prices quoted were 30 per cent. reduction.

"It proves that goods could be sold for less when they were not covered by the association," remarked Mr. Curry.

The case will be continued to-day.

BROCKVILLE SUGGESTS A POLICE CIRCUIT.

OUTCOME OF THE INTELLIGENCER'S RECENT REMARKS ON POLICE FORCE REORGANIZATION.

(Brockville Times.)

If there is one thing more than another that Belleville needs, it is police force reorganization. Not next year, or next month, but now; men who are efficient officers and civil to the public are required, not men who have grown insolent, fat and writ and execution proof.—Belleville Intelligencer.

Judging from this expression of opinion, Belleville's police force has become run down, and requires a little wholesome change. It seems to us that if some sort of itinerant system could be devised whereby chiefs and sergeants of police could be periodically shifted from one town to another it would be a good thing both for the officers and the public. New brooms sweep clean, and a new police officer, unencumbered by local influences such as inevitably grow up about him in course of time, is likely to make evil-doers toe the mark more strictly than the man who has got to know too many people. It is impossible to avoid this increase in acquaintances and it is not fair that a police officer should suffer for it. It would be far better for all concerned, if instead of being discharged in order to accomplish a reorganization of the force, police officers could be simply transferred to some other town. Exchanges made on some such system as this would probably prove satisfactory all round.

PROFESSOR OSLER HAS NOT RESIGNED.

MR E. B. OSLER, M. P., GIVES DENIAL TO A BALTIMORE REPORT

Toronto, Jan. 9. — The attention of Mr. E. B. Osler, M.P., was this morning called to a despatch from Baltimore, published in The Montreal Star, giving currency to a report that Professor William Osler was contemplating the resignation of his position as Regius Professor at Oxford University, and returning to his old chair at Johns Hopkins University.

"The rumor that Dr. William Osler is negotiating with a view to returning to Johns Hopkins University is absolutely false," said Mr. Osler to a representative of The News. "Dr. Osler is merely giving a course of lectures at Baltimore."

Entrance was effected through the rear door by prying it open and the purse containing the money laid in a drawer in the sideboard. The police have a clue to the guilty parties and are working on it.

City Wins on Appeal In Famous Lot Case

BUT MR. PHILLIPS SAYS HE WILL APPEAL AGAINST THE JUDGMENT.

Osgoode Hall, Jan. 9.
DIVISIONAL COURT.
Before Falconbridge, C.J., Street, J., Britton, J.

Phillips vs. City of Belleville. — Judgment (L) on appeal by defendants, the corporation of the City of Belleville, from the judgment of Magee, J., 6 O.W.R. 1, in favor of plaintiff, in an action brought by him in behalf of himself and the other ratepayers of the city for an injunction restraining the corporation from conveying certain lands acquired at a tax sale to defendant Caldwell, and to compel a conveyance to plaintiff as the highest bidder. The action was first tried before Street, J., who dismissed it. A Divisional Court (9 O.L. R. 732) held that the corporation was in the position of a trustee, and directed a further trial to allow the corporation to show any good reasons for selling to defendant Caldwell instead of to plaintiff. At the trial so directed, further evidence was given, and Magee, J. found in favor of plaintiff, after considering the reasons given by members of the Council for acting as they did. The court held that it was sufficient for the decision of the question if it were found that the Council acted in good faith, and that they had reasons before them which they may reasonably have considered good and sufficient to justify their action, and the desire to avoid threatened litigation was an excellent and sufficient one for the action taken; and this was not held insufficient by the Divisional Court which heard the first appeal. Other reasons actuating the Council were also of weight. Appeal allowed with costs, and action dismissed with costs of both trials and of both appeals to be paid by plaintiff to defendants, the corporation of Belleville. Defendant Caldwell was brought in as a defendant upon an objection taken by defendant corporation that he was a necessary party; but for this he would not have been made a party. The evidence shows that he was not a necessary party, and he should have his costs against the corporation of appearing at both trials, and upon the first appeal, but no costs, of any attempt to prove a contract with the corporation. W. C. Mikel (Belleville) for defendant corporation. E. D. Armour, K.C., for plaintiff. E. G. Porter for defendant Caldwell.

MR. PHILLIPS WILL APPEAL.

Mr. Phillips this afternoon informed The Intelligencer that he would not be content with the Divisional Court's judgment, and would take immediate steps to take the case to the Court of Appeals.

SPORTING NOTES.

The Port Hope Guide says it was owing to the hardest kind of luck that their juniors did not win here on Monday night. It was not hard luck, but the aggressiveness and good condition of the home team that beat them.

Playing at Picton last night, the Cobourg juniors beat the Pea Canners by 7 to 3. There should be a good game when the Cobourgs come down here.

The local juniors go to Port Hope next Monday night, and are practising hard for the event. They will go the distance in good style.

The exhibit of "fast play" shown in the Houghton-Pittsburg game on Monday night included two ribs broken for Art Sixsmith, Winchester laid out by Hall, and Hod Stuart slashed across the jaw by Hall's stick.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"DORA THORNE" LAST NIGHT.

The dramatization of the well-known novel, "Dora Thorne," was seen in the opera house here last evening, and the play appeared to give general satisfaction. There was a good audience and at times liberal applause greeted the performers. Miss Marie Dale, in the title role, was good, having an excellent conception of the part she is taking. The other characters were also fairly well taken. Four acts constituted the play, and the stage settings in the various acts were in every respect in keeping.

PRETTY HOME WEDDING.

NUPTIALS OF MR. WM. BALFOUR, OF INDIAN HEAD, AND MISS LUELLA M. BOSELLY, OF THIS CITY.

A pretty home wedding took place at 1.30 this afternoon at the residence of Mrs. Wm. Boselly, North Front street, when her daughter, Miss Luella M., was married to Mr. Wm. Balfour, of Indian Head, Province of Saskatchewan. Rev. Geo. Brown, pastor of the Tabernacle, performed the ceremony. The bride was given away by her uncle, Mr. Francis Scantlebury. The bridesmaid was Miss Lazelle Brown, of this city, and the best man Mr. H. E. Clewinson, of Toronto. After the ceremony the guests were handsomely entertained. The bride is a popular young lady of this city, who was for some time engaged as a teacher at the Grier St. school. The scholars of the school presented her on Monday evening with an address, accompanying which was a handsome silver fruit spoon and two beautiful pieces of china. Mr. Balfour was at one time a student of Albert College, and was held in high esteem by all who knew him. Mr. and Mrs. Balfour leave on the evening train, and will, after visiting several places, proceed to their future home at Indian Head. The congratulations of many friends in the city will be extended to them.

Wedding Bells.

SAUNDERS — KNAPP.

At the hour of 9.30 this morning a pretty home wedding took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. B. Knapp, Moira street. The bride was Miss Sadie E. Knapp and the groom Mr Raymond L. Saunders, a tailor of this city. Rev. R. H. Leitch, Pastor of Holloway St. Church, officiated. The parlor, where the ceremony was performed, was tastefully decorated for the occasion, and the young couple stood beneath a flower bell. The bride wore a dress of cream nun's veiling, with lace and silk trimming; the traditional bridal veil and orange blossoms, and carried a bouquet of white carnations and smilax. The bridesmaid was Miss May Smith, of this city, who was attired in a dress of cream serge, and carried a bouquet of pink carnations. Mr. Arthur Reynolds, of Walkerville, assisted the groom. A dainty spread was partaken of after the nuptial knot had been tied. The bride received many beautiful and useful gifts. Mr. and Mrs. Saunders left this afternoon for the west. In Toronto this evening a reception in their honor will be held at the residence of her brother, Mr. Marshall Knapp. The bride's travelling suit was of brown ladies' cloth, with hat to match. Mr. and Mrs. Saunders will reside in this city.

Result of the Accident.

Brockville Times: When No. 4 express pulled into Brockville depot yesterday afternoon the casing on one side of the combination coach and the first-class coach was badly disfigured, the railing bent and window panes broken as the result of a collision with a team of horses on Tweed crossing west of Belleville. Both animals were killed. The engineer in charge of the locomotive returned from Belleville westward with No. 1 express, which passed here at 11.30 yesterday. It was his unlucky day, for at Bowmanville he killed another horse on a public crossing. The drivers are said to have escaped.

NELSON'S FIGHTING MEN.

Had Few Pleasures and Faced Death With a Jest.

Of the "wooden walls of England," the great sailing ships in which Admiral Nelson won his victories, and of the men who worked them, a critic writes: "Though beautiful to behold and terrible to fight with, those old men-of-war were more often than not abodes of tyranny and wretchedness. The violence of the press gangs, which seized men of all ages and occupations, was but a prelude to the oppression that followed. Decent men were herded indiscriminately with ruffians, the rights of free born Englishmen were rudely snatched from them—for them thenceforward there was no law save the will of the captain and the dread articles of war. Shore going leave was nonexistent, the food was atrocious and scanty, punishments were barbarous, and the only thing served out with any liberality was rum, on which the men got drunk and then were flogged for that offense at the gratings next morning.

"In Nelson's time the seaman had few pleasures save the prospect of a hot fight and his daily pint of rum. But to these must be added the vainglorious satisfaction he took in his clothes. When rigged out in his best be frequently wore rings in his ears and silver buckles on his low shoes, his short blue jacket would be decorated with gold buttons and colored ribbons sewed down the seams to give an additional gayety, his waistcoat might be red or canary, and a black silk handkerchief would be knotted loosely round his throat. As the finishing touch his hair would be hanging in a cue down his back. The broad collars were first worn as a protection against the grease and pomatum used in dressing the pigtail.

"But all these fripperies were discarded when the guns were cast loose from their lashings and the linstocks were lighted. It was the custom of the men when going into action to strip to the waist. They took their black silk handkerchiefs and bound them very tightly round their heads over their ears, so that the roar of the guns might not deafen them for life. It was remarked that men going into action always wore a sullen frown, however merry they were in their talk.

"Methods followed in that day were curiously primitive and toilsome, but the results were undoubtedly satisfactory save to the nameless and numberless sailors who met grim death on the black and blood stained decks or in the dark horror of the cockpit. That those hardy and careless men often faced death or disablement with a jest or a cheer only renders their unconscious heroism the more impressive."

He Passed.

Mr. Gladstone was traveling some years ago from the northern part of France to Belgium. He had purchased a beautiful bunch of grapes, which arrived in the train with him. When he arrived at the custom house the officer refused to let the grapes pass, saying that they were liable. Gladstone refused pay the duty, whereupon the custom house officer said he would not be allowed to pass with the grapes. Gladstone humorously said he would pass with the grapes, and, taking them out of the basket, ate every one of them. "Now stop me," said the "Grand Old Man" triumphantly, as he took his seat in the train for Brussels.

Of Course.

McINTOSH BROS.

FIRST ELECTION JAN. 12

Four Ipswich Candidates Agree Not to Raise Legal Question.

Twenty-Five Elections Will Take Place In Britain on Jan. 13, and by the 15th January It Will Be Possible to Know the Drift of the Popular Vote —Women Ejected for Badgering Premier at Liverpool.

London, Jan. 10.—Some changes are involved in the latest arrangement for the beginning of the elections. The first election will take plae at Ipswich, Jan. 12. There appears to be some difference of opinion regarding the legality of such an early date, but all four candidates for Ipswich have agreed not to raise this question of legality.

Some twenty-five elections in various districts will take place Jan. 13, including all the districts of Manchester, in which city former Premier Balfour and Winston Spencer Churchill are running. Capt. Cecil William Norton, Junior Lord of the Treasury, and George Wyndham, former chief secretary for Ireland, also are among the candidates for election Jan. 13. The polling at Greenwich, where Lord Hugh Cecil, leader of the Conservative free traders, is running against a Liberal and Chamberlainite, will take place Jan. 15. On the latter date, also, elections will be held in many outlying divisions of London and throughout the country, the results of which will show the drift of the popular vote.

Among the contestants on Jan. 15 will be H. O. Arnold-Foster, former Secretary of War; Herbert John Gladstone, Secretary for Home Affairs; Gerald Balfour, former President of the Board of Trade; James Bryce, Chief Secretary for Ireland, and Sir Henry Hartley Fowler, chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Badger the Premier.

Prominent leaders on both sides addressed large meetings last night. Among these were Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, the Premier, who spoke at Liverpool, where he was hectored by the women suffragists. The Premier said that personally he was in favor of suffrage for women, but that he declined to pledge his party in the matter. Several of the women were ejected.

There appears to be a likelihood that the Nationalist candidate, Joseph Devlin, will capture the seat for West Belfast, owing to the fact that a third candidate, Mr. Carlisle, manager of the shipbuilding firm of Harland & Wolfe, has entered the field as a Liberal free trader. Mr. Carlisle opposes the granting of home rule for Ireland.

Courts of Pennsylvania Say No Damages Are Due.

Buffalo, N.Y., Jan. 10.—Justice White, supreme court, yesterday granted a non-suit in the case of David M. Gurofsky against the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. for $20,000. In granting the motion the justice said: "The Pennsylvania statutes creating a cause of action in favor of the family of one killed by negligence have been construed by the courts of that state as not conferring such a cause of action on anyone to recover damages for the death of a non-resident alien."

Railway's Big Death Roll.

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 10.—The total number of persons killed on steam surface railroads in this state was 903 and the total number injured was 1,951 during the year ending June 30, 1905, as compared with 952 killed and 2,399 injured the year before, a decrease of 49 in the number killed and of 438 in the number injured. These figures are given in the annual report of the state railroad commission, made public yesterday. These totals include persons not passengers or employes as well as passengers and employes.

Joke of the Deep Sea.

"The sea's pressure is almost incredible," said the clubman. "If you descended deep enough it would crush you, bones and all, to a mass of reddish mud. Off Sicily we ran out of ice, and some one suggested that to cool the champagne for dinner we lower it a half mile or so into the sea's depths.

"This was done, and at dinner time the three bottles came up delightfully cold. But when we opened them we found that they contained nothing but salt water. The sea's pressure had forced the water in through the pores in the corks, displacing the lighter liquid."

Take a Felon In Time.

If you have the appearance of a felon coming put some hardwood ashes in an old tin cup, pour over them warm water, immerse the end of the sore finger in the ashes, set the dish on some live coals or on top of the stove, keeping the finger in as long as you can, and soak it several times a day. If taken in time it generally cures a felon from coming if the finger is wet with it often.

INTERESTING FACTS

FOR NEARLY EVERY MAN, WOMAN AND CHILD.

A short time ago we published an article recommending to our readers the new discovery for the cure of dyspepsia, called Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and the claims then made regarding the wonderful curative properties of the remedy have been abundantly sustained by the facts. People who were cautious about trying new remedies advertised in the newspapers and were finally induced to give Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets a trial were surprised and delighted at the results. In many cases a single package costing but 50 cents at any drug store made a complete cure and in every instance the most beneficial results were reported. From a hundred or more received we have space to publish only a few of the latest, but assure our readers we receive so many commendatory letters that we shall publish each week a fresh list of genuine, unsolicited testimonials and never publish the same one twice.

From James Yommelsler, LaCrosse, Wis.: Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are doing me more good than anything I ever tried and I was so pleased at results that I gave away several boxes to my friends, who have also had the same benefits.

From Jacob Anthony, Portmurray, New Jersey: I have taken Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets with the best results. I had dyspepsia for 6 years, and had taken a great deal of medicine, but the Tablets seem to take right a hold and I feel good. I am a farmer and lime burner, and I heartily recommend to everyone who has any trouble with his stomach to use these Tablets.

From Mrs. M. K. West, Preston, Minn.: I have received surprisingly good effects from using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I gave one-half of my last box to a friend who also suffered from indigestion and she had the same good results.

From Mrs. Agnes K. Ralston, Cadillac, Mich.: I have been taking Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and I am very much better, and feel very grateful for the great benefit I have received in so short a time.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are a certain cure for all forms of indigestion. They are not claimed to be a cure-all, but are prepared for stomach troubles only, and physicians and druggists everywhere recommend them to all persons suffering from nervous dyspepsia, sour or acid stomach, heartburn, bloating or wind on stomach and similar disorders.

17 DIE IN LANDSLIDE.

13 Houses Toppled Into 60 Foot Deep Pit Cut Out By Brickmakers—Five Rescuers Die.

Haverstraw, N.Y., Jan. 10.—Last night seventeen persons were missing and are believed to have gone to their death when thirteen houses along Rocklond street, here, toppled over Monday night into a pit 60 feet deep, which had been cut by clay diggers in connection with the brick-making industry here. Twelve of the persons missing were occupants of the fallen houses; five were among the rescuers who went to the aid of neighbors after the first house fell and were carried down when the twelve other houses went crashing over the precipice. The wreckage quickly caught fire, and those who were in the mass were either crushed or burned to death.

There is grave fear of another cave-in along Rockland street, and the occupants of seven or eight houses have moved away.

Others are keeping an all night vigil, ready to flee themselves, and to alarm their neighbors in case of impending danger.

The landslide was caused by the falling in of the bank under which the brick excavators had been working for years.

THREE KILLED AT CROSSING.

A Tragedy Mars the Conclusion of a Wedding Ceremony.

Upton, Que., Jan. 10.—An accident, which cost three lives Monday, marred the rejoicings over the wedding of Aime Pinsonneault and Miss Donalda Lavalee, which took place at Roxton.

After the wedding the party decided to have supper at the house of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Caliste Lavalee, here, and set out to drive in six rigs. Arriving at a railway crossing, the first five carriages passed safely, but the last, conveying Mr. and Mrs. Lavalee and their son, was struck by the Portland Montreal express, which was traveling at full speed.

The three victims were thrown 100 feet away, and instantly killed, as was the horse, while the rig was smashed to splinters.

Dynamite Cartridge Exploded.

Toronto, Jan. 10.—The body of Finion Rohalum is lying in the morgue. He had been working on the C.P.R. extension from Bolton to Sudbury. While blasting yesterday at Coldwater, a dynamite cartridge did not explode. He went to investigate. When he reached the spot the explosion occurred. He was badly injured and was put on a train for Toronto. He died before reaching home. He was 30 years old and arrived in this country about a year ago from Roumania, where he left a wife and four children.

Boy Goes Through Ice.

Crew Land In Safety.

Halifax, N.S., Jan. 10.—The steamer Richard, Captain Hickie, coal-laden from Sydney to Yarmouth, struck Eastern Breaker, off Cape Blanche, Shelburne County, at 2 o'clock Monday afternoon, during a thick snow squall. The crew landed safely. The steamer lies on a rocky bottom, with only the bow out of the water, and will be a total loss. She was built at Sorel, Que., in 1890; gross tonnage, 466; and was owned by C. & W. Hackett, North Sydney, and insured in Strachan's Marine Insurance Agency.

Ex-Mayor Bond Buried.

Toronto Junction, Jan. 10.—All that was mortal of the late James Bond was laid at rest in St. George's Cemetery yesterday afternoon. The cortege extended about a mile, and 300 men, representing lodges to which he belonged, walked. The mayor, council and members of the school board were in hacks. The floral tributes were numerous, and included a "Gates Ajar and Pillow" from the Town of Toronto Junction. All of the ex-mayors of the Junction, with the exception of D. W. Clendenan, were in attendance, namely, G. T. St. Ledger, Wm. Peers, R. Armstrong, Dr. Clendenan, J. R. Chisholm, and P. Laughton. At the inquest last night the jury decided that death was accidental, and that no blame could be attached to the motorman.

May Be Saved From Gallows.

Ottawa, Jan. 10.—At a meeting of the Cabinet yesterday the case of Hjalmar Lahtinen, a Finlander under sentence of death at St. Johns, Quebec, was considered. It is said that the Governor-General will be recommended to commute the sentence to life imprisonment, as there is some doubt as to the reliability of some of the evidence. He is alleged to have murdered a fellow countryman while in bathing on Aug. 5 last.

Friends OF The Forest.

Three or Four Hundred of Them Gather at the Capital.

Distinguished Men in Convention Impress Upon Canada the Need of Preserving Her Timber Resources For Years to Come —Earl Grey Delivered Opening Address—Expert Warning from the States.

Ottawa, Jan. 11.—The Canadian forestry convention, which had been called by Sir Wilfrid Laurier to consider the forests of Canada, their importance to the nation, and to discuss means by which the beneficial influences of the forest may best be preserved and perpetuated, opened yesterday in the Railway Committee room of the Parliament Buildings, which had been most tastily decorated for the occasion. Some three or four hundred delegates were in attendance from different parts of the Dominion. Among those at the opening session yesterday were: His Excellency, Earl Grey, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Mr. R. L. Borden, Hon. Messrs. Fisher and Oliver, E. Stewart, Dominion Superintendent of Forestry, and Gifford Pinchot, Chief of the Forest Service of the United States.

To Avoid Barrenness.

In opening the convention, Earl Grey observed that although his experience in Canada had been comparatively short, it had been sufficient to impress him with the urgent desirability of focussing the best brains of the Dominion on the immediate consideration of what shall be done with regard to our forests, to protect the soil on which the maintenance of our agricultural prosperity depends. He had himself seen extensive tracts of country in India, Asia-Minor, Greece, and Italy, once inhabited by a strenuous and numerous population, but now reduced to the misery of a barren desolation by the unregulated deforestration of their lands by a blind and selfish generation which had no regard for fostering, and no eyes for anything but their own immediate requirements. The object of this convention was to fix in the minds of the people of Canada the warning that these countries hold out to us.

In opening the convention he hoped it might be the means of averting the sad fate of the countries to which he had referred.

His Excellency referred with pleasure to the presence of distinguished American authorities on forest questions.

Sir Wilfrid's Remarks.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, as president of the Canadian Forestry Association, then addressed the convention, pointing out some of the questions to which it could with profit devote a share of its attention. Great loss had already resulted from wasteful methods of lumbering, but even yet it was not too late to take remedial measures. One of the first steps should be the establishment and preservation of large forest reserves. On no consideration should the Government allow the watersheds of the country to be denuded. Where these have in any instances been already alienated, the Crown should effect their re-purchase without delay. The success of reforestration had alrady been fully demonstrated. Pine forests can be renewed by judicious tree-planting. If some such steps are not taken the day will certainly come when there will not be a tree left of economic value for Canadian lumbermen to cut. Aside, however, from the havoc that the human hands have wrought in our forests, care must be taken to safeguard them against the inroads of insect pests and fire. He was informed that the lumber cut by the mills of the Ottawa valley did not represent one per cent. of what was destroyed by fire. The patrol service maintained by the lumbermen to keep down forest fires should be made much more thorough and efficient. Every class of the community should be taught that it is a crime to ignite forest fires by careless handling of matches or camp fires. Indeed, he would go so far as to make it an offence punishable by law to throw about lighted matches in the woods, or to court loss by neglecting to extinguish camp fires.

Railways to Blame.

The railway locomotive, observed Sir Wilfrid, had been one of the greatest blessings of modern times, yet what more depressing spectacle could one imagine than to travel for hours through a region once covered by magnificent trees, but now marked only by the charred remains of magnificent forest giants. No doubt the railway companies have made attempts to minimize the danger of igniting fires from their locomotive sparks. It is a question, though, whether they should not be compelled to go further and patrol the portions of their lines that traverse forest areas.

The French-Canadian was a good man with his axe, but unfortunately he has not been careful enough to preserve the trees on his property. The Canadian Forestry Association was doing good work, but should not rest content till the people come to realize the necessity of covering with trees every rock hill and the banks of every running stream. Scatter the seed, and nature will do the rest.

Conservatives Will Help.

Mr. R. L. Borden promised that he and those who sat with him in Parliament would assist the Government to bring in any regulations for the accomplishment of the objects mentioned by the Premier. Canada was specially interested because of her great forest areas, and because of her inland waterways, the efficiency of which depended on regulation of the forests. After denouncing the indiscriminate destruction of trees Mr. Borden gave a European example of the value of forestry. Saxony has 420,000 acres of forests in rough, mountainous country. In 50 years she has received $200,000,000, and the forests are better than they were 50 years ago. Canada has 400,000,000 acres of forest. State aid could be rendered in two ways, by education and by direct control by state regulation. There should be continuity in any such policy. The timber should not be regarded as a crop to be destroyed, and one which would be renewed in 100 or 150 years, but as capital of the state, on which private enterprises should not be allowed unduly to trench.

Hon. Mr. Oliver outlined the results that the Interior Department has already attained toward the preservation of our tree wealth.

Planted Five Million Trees.

The next address was by Henri Joly Lotbiniere, president of the Canadian Forestry Association, who reviewed what that organization had accomplished in its five years of existence. He testified also to the practical work done by the Federal Government in the way of forest tree planting on the plains of the west, protection of forest lands from fire, and creation of forest reserves. Since 1891 the Government had distributed 5,102,750 young trees to settlers, of which 85 per cent. have thrived. After dwelling at considerable length on the forestry work in the several provinces, the speaker concluded by referring to the prospect that before long steps may be taken to organize a Canadian forestry school, where our young men may re-

No Imperial Preference Under Campbell-Bannerman.

Mr. Winston Churchill, Under-Secretary for the Colonies, has made an authoritative statement which settles the question of an Imperial Preference during the lifetime of the Campbell-Bannerman ministry. On behalf of the Colonial Office which he has been called to represent in the popular chamber, Mr. Churchill speaking at Manchester, laid down the policy of the Government in regard to the trade relations of the empire. The next Colonial Conference is not to be held until 1907. Mr. Churchill said that representatives of the colonies would go to that meeting with precise instructions. Exact instructions will be also given to the Imperial Government delegates. "If the results of the general elections would provide Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman with an adequate majority for the conduct of public affairs it would be the duty of the representatives of the British Government to inform their Colonial confreres that he would not enter into any arrangement for preferential union with the colonies involving the taxation of food."

If this is the ultimate word of the Campbell-Bannerman administration, says a contemporary, the subject of trade arrangements may as well be struck out of the Colonial conference programme. It is impossible to arrange a system of preference between Great Britain and Colonies which does not include custom duties on food products. Of the Canadian exports to Great Britain more than seventy-five per cent. are food commodities. Nearly all the remainder are articles which in Great Britain would be regarded as raw material for manufactures. From Australasia and South Africa the British Empire import besides the precious metals and diamonds, considerable and increasing quantities of food, with a larger value in wool and hides. From the West Indies the imports are chiefly articles for use as food. The largest single item of British imports from India is tea and the second is sometimes wheat, both articles of food, the former already paying a tax of nearly a hundred per cent., imposed by statesmen who condemn a food tax. Tea is the principle article imported by Britain from Ceylon.

In these circumstances it seems to be absolutely essential that duties on food should be included in any scheme of Imperial preference which is worth adopting. Nor can an outside observer see how public men who regularly and systematically impose a tax on tea, which next to bread is the most indispensable article of food to the average British family, should solemnly protest against food taxes generally. There are other food taxes in the present British tariff schedule. They are imposed on articles which may be regarded as luxuries, but certain foods produced in the colonies, which are now free, might be included in the same category. It is also open to Canadians to set forth a fact as well known in England as in Canada, that the embargo on Canadian cattle is a measure of economic protection, continued under the pretense of a sanitary purpose. This obsolete regulation is open to greater objections than a preferential tariff on cattle, for it is a contemptible and obvious hypocrisy, and it is prohibitive, which a reasonable tax would not be. The regulation has the effect of increasing the price of beef to the British consumer, whether a duty would or not, and it shuts colonial cattle out of competition, which may be more satisfactory to the British cattle monopolist than a preferential tariff would be. So long, therefore, as the tax duty, and the cattle embargo are maintained, we cannot see that the Campbell-Bannerman government can take logical ground against a food tax as part of a system of Colonial preference.

Yet the position has been taken whether it is consistent or not, and the declaration puts an end to the hope of a trade preference within the Empire until another change of government occurs in Great Britain. It may also put an end to the British preference given by Canada. Mr. Fielding in his recent tariff statements gave a strong intimation that the Canadian preference could not be regarded as a permanent system. The last chance in the Canadian textile tariff broke up the preference to the extent of raising the minimum above the regular preference rate. It was announced last year that the next tariff revision would proceed on the lines of a maximum and minimum or most favored nation system. This probably means that other countries will obtain the same terms as Great Britain and that the regular scale of one-third off as a British preference will practically disappear. Should Mr. Fielding make these or other changes removing the preference to Great Britain he will find it a little difficult to defend his course in the light of his budget speech of 1897, and of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Cobden Club medal speeches. But so far as this change is concerned he will not find it hard to reconcile his revised tariff with the clearest and most definite public opinion in this country. Those Canadians who have thought out the preference question for themselves are becoming more and more strongly convinced that an Imperial tariff preference must be mutual. Tariff concessions are not the proper currency with which to pay for the services of the British navy. That bill should be settled in another way and tariff preference should pay for tariff preference. Mr. Fielding, who is a man of understanding, is himself supposed to be coming round to the point of view which he once unhappily and improperly described as that of the huckster.

Rumor says we may soon have another election for the Board of Education. What's the matter? Have any of the members blown away?

Up in Brantford the Grits in the Council have collared the principal chairmanships. Let us be thankful that we live in a place where a Tory is as good as a Grit if he behaves himself.

Just our luck. If that water main had not been sunk, at great expense, there would have been low water in the river and a smashing old ice jam next spring. As it looks now, there will be plenty of water and hardly enough ice to break an egg.

The man on the next block rises to remark that it is small consequence to many York Loan sufferers that somebody is in jail while they are out of pocket.

Here it is the 11th of January and not one of the Mayor's inaugural suggestions has been acted on yet. The Council had better get busy if they want to carry 'em all out this year.

And the long and the short of the matter appears to be that the Divisional Court at Toronto decides thus: The Council, after calling for tenders for those lots, has the right to refuse to accept a tender of $326.50 and accept one of $265. It may be good law, of course, but it is hard to see in it much protection for the best interests of the ratepayers. Let us hope that no City Council in Belleville may ever again have to go to law to justify themselves in carrying out such a principle.

The arrest and prosecution of Joseph Phillips, the president of the York County Loan & Savings Company, will cause no surprise, says the Montreal Gazette. The investigation indicated that there was worse than incompetence connected with the direction of the company's affairs, though incompetence was very evident. The trial will bring out the facts and on the facts the accused will be condemned or acquitted. Recent events in Toronto indicate that it is a city where in such a cause justice will be done.

Guelph Herald: "The members of the new Council are living up to the expectations of the ratepayers in proceeding to treat the business of the city as a set of business men would treat their own affairs."

Mark how great minds run in the same groove! It is not so very long ago that this paper made practically the same remark as that quoted above. The Street Surveyor's horse, you know, was an unknown quantity in those halcyon days.

President Dan Derbyshire told the Peterboro newspaper men that the E. O. D. A. convention now being held in that city was the greatest ever held, from any point of view. Let's see, didn't Uncle Daniel say that about the Belleville convention? And doesn't he say that about all conventions. The genial president of the E.O.D.A. is about the warmest "jollier" that ever came down the pike. But it's a good failing.

Peterboro will try a new experiment in municipal work by cutting its civic committees down from seven to four. Commenting on the matter, the Review says: "The grouping of the different branches of the civic service has been well done, and with the members of the various committees pulling together and useless discussion cut out, civic duties should not be such a burden in the future as in the past. The motto this year should be more work and less talk." Our esteemed contemporary's remarks might well be applied in more places than Peterboro.

The cigarette has been dealt a hard blow in what would at first sight be considered the house of its friends. The Cigarmakers' Union of Worcester, Mass., voted last week that any member of the organization found guilty of smoking a cigarette should be fined $5 for each offence. This rule, it is said, is to protect the sick benefit fund, the sick committee having found that of the members who drew sick benefits the cigarette smokers were in the majority. It is said also that more death claims have been paid to the families of those who had been addicted to the habit. It would be hard to see how the enemies of the cigarette could get better ammunition for their fight than this action of the cigarmakers gives. Cigarmakers would be expected to be the last to place a ban on the cigarette. The members of the union are permitted to smoke pipes or cigars, but the paper cigarette is considered too harmful for even cigarmakers.

Rev. Canon Davidson, a Peterboro divine who has many admirers in this city, in a recent address urged his congregation to start the new year aright by meeting their financial obligations promptly. Better advice could hardly be given. Too often people are careless or neglectful in this matter and merchants are put to no end of trouble and annoyance, having to send out bills frequently and often waiting several months for their settlement. It is important that customers, whom storekeepers have obliged by giving credit, should not abuse the privilege and kindness extended to them, but should "square up" this month, if at all possible. Business men, during January, have several heavy payments to meet and the prompt discharge of all financial obligations on the part of the citizens would make life much pleasanter and increase the cordial relations which should exist between every seller and buyer.

CONSUME YOUR OWN SMOKE.

(Dr. William Osler.)

The atmosphere is darkened with the whimpering of men and women over the non-essentials, the trifles that are inevitably incident to the hurly-burly of the day's routine. Things cannot always go your way. Learn to accept in silence the minor aggravations, cultivate the gift of taciturnity, and consume your own smoke with an extra draft of hard work, so that those about you may not be annoyed with the dust and soot of your complaints.

Bishop Vincent, of Indianapolis, who has been lecturing to the students of Victoria University gave the young theologians some excellent advice as to the preparation and delivery of their sermons, one of the most effective admonitions being: "Know when to close your service—usually about an hour after you begin it. Remember, I mean the service, not your sermon. It is better to leave your congregation wishing you had preached 15 minutes longer than to make them regret you had not finished five minutes sooner." There is sound sense in that. Many a worthy preacher is spoiled by his "lack of terminal facilities."

For Family Colds

A reliable cough and cold cure should be always in the house ready for use the moment the first symptoms appear.

It is always easier, cheaper and better to check a cold in the very beginning.

It is safer, too.

Shiloh's Consumption Cure, the Lung Tonic, has been tested for thirty-three years, and tens of thousands of homes in Canada and the United States to-day are never without it.

A dealer writes: "Shiloh's Consumption Cure is without doubt the best remedy for Coughs and Colds on the market. Once used, my customers will buy no other."—L. Ebley, Nanugeweya, Ont."

If it were anything but the best would this be so? Try it in your own family. If it does not cure, you get back all it cost you. We take all the chances. Neither you nor your dealer can lose. Isn't that fair? 25c. is the price. All dealers in medicine sell 503

CURES CATARRAL DEAFNESS

ONE WEEK'S USE OF HYOMEI DID MORE THAN SIX MONTHS TREATMENT BY SPECIALISTS.

In the treatment of deafness which is often a result of catarrh, Hyomei acts almost immediately upon the inflamed membrane and the hearing begins to return at once.

Miss Meeks, of Mattewan, N. Y., says: "Hyomei is truly wonderful. I have used it but a short time and see a great change in my condition. My hearing is improving rapidly and I had no idea I would improve so rapidly in so short a time. My breath which was very offensive to myself and others, has lost its bad odor entirely. I have spent a great deal of money with catarrh specialists, and can truly say that six months of their treatment is not equal to one month of Hyomei."

A complete outfit costs but $1.00, and consists of an inhaler that can be carried in the vest pocket, a medicine dropper, and a bottle of Hyomei. The inhaler will last a lifetime and there is enough Hyomei for several weeks' treatment. Additional bottles of Hyomei can be procured for 50 cents. Compare this small expense with the fee charged by specialists.

If you cannot obtain Hyomei of your dealer, it will be forwarded by mail, postage paid, on receipt of price. Write to-day for consultation blank that will entitle you to services of our medical department without charge. The R. T. Booth Company, Hyomei Building, Ithaca, N. Y.

How English Pervades Paris.

(English Exchange.)

"I will go to Paris," I said, "to practice my French." What, after all, was the good of having paid $12 for a course of twelve lessons—on the correspondence system, and dirt cheap at the money—if I were never to have the chance of airing my knowledge? Certainly I would go to Paris."

The first Frenchman I saw was at Dieppe. He said, "Want a porter, sir?" That was natural enough, as he made his living out of us. So it was at the buffet where the young lady behind the counter, whom I endeavored to pay in the French language, remarked: "One franc twenty-five. You can change your English money at the other counter." "It will be very different in Paris," I said to myself.

When I got to the Gare Saint Lazare a porter took me in hand. "Customs examinations this way," he said. And the customs officer asked me if I had anything to declare—in English. I took it very quietly. After all, one must adapt oneself to the customs of foreign countries without demur. It was disappointing when I, with great presence of mind, had addressed a hack driver as "Fiacre," which word I learned in my third lesson, that he should take no notice whatever, and reply: "Cab, sir?" But I let him drive me to my hotel.

Of course, they all spoke English there. The guests were all English, so were the waiters—as I happen to know, for I spoke to several of them in French, and not one of them appeared to understand, and they all replied in English. I believe the chambermaid was French, or had at any rate lived for some time in Paris, for when I mentioned to her that I should like some hot water—speaking in French and pronouncing the word with the proper accent as "o sho"—she certainly did reply, "'ot warter," but she added "m'sieu" and "oui," both of which are unmistakably French.

With the exception of those two easy words, I did not find one person in Paris who was capable of addressing me in comprehensible French. I doubt if I saw more than five French words written over shop fronts or on the advertisement kiosks. I am ready to forfeit any reasonable sum to any person who can show me such a simple phrase as "Ici on parle Francais" written over any shop throughout Paris, while all the world knows it is one of the commonest sights of the streets of London.

After I had a wash and a rest, being somewhat fatigued through having travelled by the night boat, I went out for a stroll before lunch. I had not been walking five minutes before I came to a picture gallery. In front of it was a huge poster; "Exhibition of the London Sketch Club." I walked on. Not ten yards from it was a kiosk, with an advertisement of a music hall. I give my solemn word of honor that there was only one non-English name among the list of performers. That was Machrow, a Russian giant. I determined to keep an eye on the advertisement posters. The next one I came to read as follows—in English, of course "Have you seen Max Dearly as Tom Pitt, the King of Pickpockets?" The next I came to was a large picture. Above it was the word "Bratock." It represented a white ox, and below it was a statement, in English, to the effect that it was imported from Burma, where it was held sacred by the Burmese, and had been captured by British troops, who had performed prodigies of valor—which I well believe—though the incident was news to me. The next poster bore a portrait of Colonel Cody and the words, "Buffalo Bill's Wild West." I gave up looking at them after that.

I was anxious to see the Louvre, and not knowing my way thither, addressed myself to a passer-by of amiable appearance, taking off my hat politely, as is the custom of the country, and speaking in the French language. He listened attentively, but did not appear to understand. I repeated my words. He considered, then replied, in English, "Do you want the Louvre? Keep straight on down that broad street in front of you, and you will come to it." I did so.

Immediately on passing into the great quadrangle I was addressed in rapid succession by four men. Each of them said the same thing, "Want a guide, sir?" I told them in French that I did not; but as they seemed not to understand, and continued to follow me in a body, I cursed them in good Anglo-Saxon and fled out of the quadrangle and over a footbridge, which led across the River Seine.

Keeping round the outside of the Louvre building, I came into the Rue de Rivoli. The first thing that I came upon under the colonnade was a jeweller's shop, with the words, "Diamonds, Jewellery. Imitation English spoken," in the window. The next was a tea shop, with "Afternoon Teas" in a similar position. I was by this time so exhausted that I willingly crept inside and had a cup of English tea, served by English girls, afterwards paying my bill at a cash desk presided over by an English young man.

But why continue the story of my disillusionment? I left Paris the same night, tired though I was. I do not say it has not several good points. If I wanted to learn to speak with a Lancashire, Cockney or Glesca' accent or with an Irish brogue, I know no better place than Paris in which to learn them. If I wanted to look at English pictures — the two salons are full of them—to buy English boots or American magazines, or Scotch whiskey, or plum puddings, and could not get them in my native land, Paris would be an ideal city in which to buy them. But I want to do none of these things, but only to learn to speak French with what is for some reason described as a Paris accent. I have determined to remain quietly at home.

SCIENCE PREVENTS BALDNESS.

It is the rarest thing in the world for a man to be necessarily bald. No man whose hair is not dead at the roots, need be bald if he will use Newbro's Herpicide, the new scalp antiseptic. Herpicide destroys the germ that cuts the hair off at the root- and cleans the scalp of dandruff and leaves it in a perfectly healthy condition. Mr. Mannett, in the Maryland Block, Butte, Mont., was entirely bald. In less than a month Herpicide had removed the enemies of hair growth, and nature did its work by covering his head with thick hair an inch long, and in six weeks he had a normal suit of hair. DIAMONDS IN CANADA.

A RICH FIELD SOMEWHERE IN THE NORTH COUNTRY.

New York, Jan. 10. — The Tribune this morning says: "That there may be a rich diamond field somewhere in Canada, probably in the Province of Ontario, was the opinion expressed last night by Dr. George F. Kunz, the mineralogist of Tiffany & Company, before the New York Academy of Sciences at the American Museum of Natural History. Since 1830 about 200 small diamonds, ranging from one half the size of a pea to that of a small hazelnut, have been found in various parts of the United States, where they were presumably deposited by glaciers.

Dr. Kunz explained that in an early period in the history of the world two glaciers descended over the continent of North America. One came directly south from James Bay over Lake Superior upon what is now the State of Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Ohio. A second glacier came down upon the same territory from the northeast. Dr. Kunz believes that the first of these glaciers carried into the United States diamonds from a northern source yet undiscovered. Diamonds are also found in California and in the southern Apalachian region, North Carolina, Georgia and Alabama.

Dr. Kunz, in his speech, said in part: "The new national transcontinental railway from Quebec to Winnipeg and the great wheat region of Manitoba will traverse much of the country whence the diamonds have probably come. Dr. Ami declares that the Government is sending out numerous surveying parties for exploration along the route. Some of these may make interesting and even important discoveries.

Literary Notes.

The Methodist Magazine and Review for January is decidedly a high-class number. It opens with a stirring article on "Japan in War Time," with over a score of handsome engravings. "With the Caucasian Revolutionists" is another article of intense interest, showing the fearful disorganization of the country. "The Torrey-Alexander Mission" is a well illustrated article, as is also one by Rev. J. T. Pitcher on "The Flying of Birds," showing the extraordinary adaptation of means to end for that purpose. Illustrated reviews of the two brilliant books of Canadian verse—the poems of Miss Isabella Valancy Crawford and William Wilfred Campbell, are of special interest. Now is a good time to subscribe. November and December numbers free to new subscribers. Toronto, William Briggs. Montreal, C. W. Coates. Halifax, S. F. Huestis. $2.00 a year, $1.00 for six months.

AN INNOVATION ON THE GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.

In order to facilitate the prompt delivery of baggage at Toronto, Montreal and Hamilton, and to avoid delay and annoyance often occasioned at these points, the General Baggage Department of the Grand Trunk Railway System are arranging for the checking of baggage from all stations in Canada direct to residences, hotels, railway stations and steamboat wharves in the above cities.

Under this arrangement a passenger from any station on the Grand Trunk Railway System, upon payment of 25c for each piece, will be able to check their baggage direct to any residence, hotel, etc., thus avoiding the necessity of making arrangements for delivery on arrival and insuring the prompt receipt of baggage at destination.

Under this system baggage when received from trains at destination will be immediately delivered direct to the Transfer Co. for PROMPT DELIVERY, thus avoiding delays previously occasioned by placing same in baggageroom, recording, re-assorting, etc., thus saving time and unnecessary handling.

Further announcement will be made of date this service will be put into effect. 11-3t

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

FOOTBALL.

How The New Zealanders Met Their Only Defeat.

The following account of the New Zealand defeat by Wales was written at Cardiff.

The Napoleons of the football world have met their Waterloo at last. Wales have defeated them. New Zealand went to Cardiff full of hope and confidence, and the Welsh team, playing the game of their lives, defeated them by three points to nothing. This is the first defeat the Colonials have suffered during their tour, and as a mathematical corollary as well as a simple statement of fact, it is the first game in which they have been unable to score.

One subtle point is worth recording. English football reporters of long standing who came to the match, expecting New Zealand to win, consoled themselves with the thought that at last they would see the Cardiff crowd in a subdued mood. Their national pride has received so many rebuffs, when the Welsh folk declared that England had no chance against Wales, and the Welsh folk were right, that they anticipated a secret satisfaction in observing the spectators under the cloud of defeat. They have missed that expected gratification. But it must be confessed that they show no obvious disappointment. They joy of seeing a British victory has overshadowed the small consolation of seeing Welsh pride chastened by a defeat.

The odds certainly seemed to favor New Zealand when the teams went on the field. They had played 27 matches, and won them all; they had scored 801 points against a microscopic 22; and they had made special preparations for the match, realizing that it was the most dangerous in which they had engaged. Wales also had a few things in her favor; an unbeaten record on her own ground for many years past; a dauntless belief in her own powers; and a steadfast refusal to admit herself defeated until the final whistle blew. Percy Bush, the Cardiff captain, made the sounding boast that not only Wales, but Glamorganshire and Cardiff, as well, would beat the proud Colonials. But there were drawbacks. Wales, said the experts, was not the team she was, and the argument was supported by the plain fact that she had summoned to her aid veterans who had sworn oaths, in emphatic Welsh, that their football days were over.

A GREAT CROWD.

So far as South Wales at least was concerned, the match was the event of the week. No work was done in Cardiff yesterday — or next to none. Even the Assizes were adjourned after a short morning sitting, in honor of the national struggle. By nine o'clock in the morning formidable lines of enthusiasts gathered outside the pay-boxes in Westgate St. By eleven the waiting crowds were enormous, and excursion trains brought in their thousands every few minutes. At half past eleven the gates were opened, and at half past one they were closed. Except in the reserved seats there was not room for another man on the ground. The avowed accommodation of the field was 42,000; it is reported that over 50,000 were present.

A few favored visitors were allowed to come late. Mr. Justice A. T. Lawrence was conducted to his seat by the Mayor of Neath, who is also secretary of the Welsh Rugby Union. The Lord Mayor of Cardiff appeared, accompanied by the Lady Mayoress. The Hon. Pember Reeves, Agent-General for New Zealand; Dr. Macnamara, M.P., and Sir J. T. D. Llewellyn, Bart., were also present. But to give a complete list of names is impossible, for the aristocracy of South Wales was represented almost as well as the democracy. A band of old internationals and county men arrived by a late train. No seats were left for them, but they did not mind that. They threw their overcoats and travelling rugs on the turf, and sat on those.

Gallaher led his Colonials on the field—a lithe, sinewy team of men in sombre black, and they received a hearty cheer. They ran to the middle of the field, gathered in a clump, and chanted their famous song of victory, of which a free rendering runs as follows;

Leader: It is death! It is death!
Chorus: It is life! It is life!
This is the strong one, the man of the brawny tribe
Who has come to us to cause the sun to shine.
Hurrah! Hurrah!
He has caused the sun to shine!

Then, lifting their arms in the air, the New Zealanders uttered an inspiring Maori yell. But, for once in a way, they did not have the music all to themselves. Gwyn Nicholls led his Welshmen on to the field to sing another song—the historic "Land of our Fathers." As the refrain was dying away, it was taken up by thousands of the spectators. The idea was good, but the execution somewhat lagging. A little stage management and a rehearsal or two would have improved it.

TENSE EXCITEMENT.

It is not my business to give a detailed criticism of the play. But a reflection of the emotions it inspired may not be out of place. As football it was indifferent, but as a contest it was immense. When the Welshmen settled into their stride the fear that they would be defeated gave place to a growing hope that perhaps they would not.

The Welshmen, of course, did not show their traditional dash and brilliance. Nobody expected that they would. But the New Zealanders showed no particular brilliance either. Could it be true that the Colonials had met their match and that Taffy was as good as his master? It seemed a wild, impossible hope; but a hope it remained, especially, when Morgan scored a try, after a piece of dashing combination, which would have done credit to the New Zealanders themselves, and when attempt after attempt by the visitors was broken up by the indomitable defence of the home team.

Half-time arrived, and Wales were leading by three points to nothing. That was good, but would it last? Those who remembered the Scottish match when the New Zealanders turned defeat into victory in the last five minutes of the game, shivered with apprehension. Hope strengthened. The Welshmen were playing better, instead of worse. The boasted combination of the New Zealand backs was tumbling like a house of cards, smashed up by the desperate daring of the Welsh "spoilers." A New Zealander crossed the line; there was a gasp of relief when it was seen that the referee ordered him back, because he had been pushed into touch on the way.

VICTORY AT LAST.

There still remained that fateful five minutes at the end of the game, and both sides were struggling like men possessed. Scrimmage, line-out, rush; long kicks and wild dashes; and the blood of the tribesmen up. And then, when nobody expected it, in his excitement, a long, long shriek by the referee's whistle, and the game was over. And Wales had won! It took a few moments for the realization of the mighty news, but when it came the noise of the cheering made up for the delay. Wales went mad. Hats were smashed and sticks thrown away. The Welsh team ran back to the pavilion amidst a frantic, long-sustained roar of joy. They were entitled to regard it as the moment of their lives. To describe Cardiff as a quiet abode of rest that night would be an exaggeration.

The conquering Welshmen were naturally elated. The New Zealanders were not; but they took their reverse like the sportsmen they are. "It was a rattling good game, played out to the bitter end, and the better team won," was Gallaher's verdict at the finish.

Another New Zealand footballer with whom I discussed the match accepted this verdict, but added some critical qualifications. "Through winning so often," he said, "our game has degenerated into a kid-glove performance. We have fallen off. The passing of the backs was dead, and the forwards were inclined to sling the ball about promiscuously. Wales played the blind side for all they were worth, and beat us at our own game. The tackling was absolutely perfect on both sides — in fact, it was harder than it should have been."

HOCKEY.

Smith's Falls Can Go Some.

Smith's Falls, Jan. 10.—With comparative ease the home team trimmed Brockville in the Federal League game to-night. The score stood 9 to 3 when Referee Meldrum sounded his whistle for quits. Contrary to general expectations, the game was far from being of the rough-house variety, and for this great credit must be given the Montreal officials, Bob Meldrum and Frank Patrick. At all times they were masters of the situation, penalizing in a wholesale manner. Twenty-three in all walked to the fence, but these were nearly all for minor infractions. The first half of the game was somewhat slow at times. This was due to the closeness of the checking. Only at times was combination work indulged in, and that was of the two man variety. Taking the two teams man for man, the visitors were outclassed, and they did not have the staying powers of the home septette. Marks was perhaps their best all-round man, but Serviss had him going all the time. The latter, along with Fraser, carried off the honors on the home line. They worked well together, and gave the opposing defence all kinds of trouble. Armstrong, at cover, had the goods throughout, while LeSeuer in goal was simply invulnerable. The half-time score stood 3 to 1. About 300 accompanied the visiting team by special train and considerable money changed hands. The home team is now in splendid condition, and should land pretty near the top of the heap when the race is over.

SPORTING NOTES.

Croft, who played with Picton's fast intermediate team two winters ago, is playing rover for Port Hope this season. The latter town appears to have a fast bunch of players, who should be a factor in the race if they would practice properly. Peterboro has a team which has been greatly touted, but a study of the names shows a lot of them are playing on their reputations. Whitcroft is about the only genuine star they have, and Boney, of Port Hope, if in condition, should easily hold him down. In fact, in Brown, McMillan, Boney and Mercer, Port Hope has a quartette of players good enough to perform anywhere. The only trouble with those chaps is, they are generally suffering with that tired feeling, so 'tis said.

By the way, cannot a game be arranged with Port Hope in this city? Surely a team could be got together here which would give them a good run in an exhibition game. Hockey-lovers of Belleville are suffering for a chance to see a really good match. Why not get Burrows, Wallace, Williamson and four other good ones and play home and home with Port Hope? There would be lots of fun and excitement in it, and money for the rink.

The Kenora Thistles defeated the Brandon Seniors in a league game by a score of 6 to 2. Tom Phillips was in the game for Kenora and contributed considerably to the success of the Thistles.

Preston has a colored hockey player named Maloney, who is said to be a wizard on skates. Bowers, of the junior Brantfords, another colored player, is also said to be a dandy.

Penalties to the extent of ninety minutes were dealt out by Referee Fraser in the Berlin-Stratford senior O.H.A. game. Cover-point Cross was off for 20 minutes out of the 60 played.

Superior weight and strength gave Frank Gotch the victory over Charles Hackenschmidt, of Sweden, in their Graeco-Roman wrestling match at Des Moines, Iowa, last night. Gotch won both falls. Both are reputed to be fakirs.

In one of the most exciting hockey games ever played in Nova Scotia, the champion Ramblers, of Amherst, were defeated by Truro last night, the score standing 4 to 3. The Ramblers swept everything before them in the Nova Scotia League last winter, and were ambitious to try for the Stanley Cup, having challenged last year, as well as this year. Their defeat last night was a great surprise.

"Sandy" Burrows will to-morrow night referee the hockey match between the Picton and Cobourg teams, which takes place at Cobourg.

The Cruel Plant.

A Canadian climber, the Physianthus albens, has received the name of "cruel plant" from its ill treatment of butterflies. It flowers in the month of August, and the butterflies, attracted by the perfume, hover around it in large numbers and push their trunks into the corollas to sip the honey. A pair of sensitive vegetable pinchers in the heart of the flower grips the delicate proboscis, and in spite of struggles to get free the butterfly hangs suspended until it dies. Apparently the plant has nothing to gain by the death of the insect, as it is not carnivorous, like the Venus fly trap. In fact, if the butterfly were allowed to come and go it would tend to foster the species by assisting cross fertilization. It appears, however, that the "cruel plant" came originally from Brazil, where the butterflies are much stronger and extricate their suckers from the trap. We may add that another Canadian plant, the Cnicus discolor, is charged with cruelty. The flower has a gland which secretes a viscous liquid capable of liming insects which are fond of it. Moreover, they seem to be stupefied and poisoned by it, and no reason can as yet be assigned for the deadly consequence.

A Colossal Harp.

The largest harp ever made, so far as is known, was that invented and constructed by M. Veritan, provost of Burkli, near Basel. It was known as the gigantic meteorological Æolian harp. It was 320 feet in length and was erected in the garden of its inventor in 1787. This harp consisted of fifteen iron wires, 320 feet in length, stretched between two poles. The wires were from two to three inches apart, the largest being one-sixth of an inch in thickness and the smallest one-twelfth of an inch. They were placed in the direction of north and south and inclined in such a manner as to form an angle of from twenty to thirty degrees with the horizon, being stretched by means of rollers properly disposed for the purpose. Whenever the weather changed the wires sounded with such loudness that it was impossible to go on with a concert in the house. The sound sometimes represented the hissing noise of water in rapid ebullition, sometimes that of a harmonicon and sometimes that of distant chimes or an organ.

The First Hats.

Discoursing on the subject of hats an antiquary expressed the opinion that the hat was first used quite as much for decoration as for protection. The ancestor of all hats he considers to have been the fillet, or band, around the hair worn by the ancient Greeks, among others. Probably the first hint gained by men regarding head ornaments was through observing the crests, plumes and antlers of various birds and beasts. The eastern races, with their fondness for ceremony and display, afford the most notable instances of the use of hats as signs of rank and authority. Thus in Buddhist countries the gods are represented as wearing elaborate forms of headgear. In Korea the fashion attains its height, no fewer than fifty kinds of hats being worn by the natives as indications of their social position.

The Horse's Hoof.

In its present elaborate form the hoof of a horse is the most perfect instrument of support which has been devised in the animal kingdom to uphold a large and swiftly moving animal in its passage over the ground. The original toe nail and the neighboring soft parts connected with it have been modified into a structure which in an extraordinary manner combines solidity with elasticity, so that it may strike violent blows upon the hard surface of the earth without harm. The result is that the horse can carry a greater weight at a swifter speed than any other animal approaching it in size.

A Hatter's Trick.

"There are tricks in every trade, you know," said a New York clubman. "Even in retail hat selling many dodges are employed.

"I said to a hatter one day:

"'I don't see how you can afford to iron for nothing all the silk hats you sell.'

"The man nodded at me gravely.

"'We have to do it, sir,' he said. 'The hats would last too long if we didn't.'"

The Last Word.

"Does your wife insist on having the last word?" asked the person who indulges in impertinent questions.

"Not at all," answered Mr. Meekton. "It is quite customary for me to close the conversation with 'very well,' or some such remark, to indicate that I understand what Henrietta intends to convey."

Took the Hint.

"This seems like a sweet dream," he rapturously remarked as he lingered with her at the doorstep.

"It doesn't seem like a dream to me," she replied, "for a dream soon vanishes, you know."

He vanished.

Study the Boys.

When you get a really bad boy, study him and find why he is bad. Sometimes heredity is the cause, or it may be nervous trouble, or his liver, or bad digestion, or catarrh, or the result of awful training at home or at school.—From lecture by School Inspector Hughes of Toronto.

TIMELY TOPICS.

THE TOYS OF YESTERYEAR.

(Maurice Smiley in Collier's.)

Pray, where are the toys of Yesteryear;
The jumpingjack with its flaring red,
The funny dog and the antlered deer,
The drum with its sticks and tuneful head.
The Noah's ark with its wooden crew,
The building blocks with the letters on?
The child has toys that are bright and new,
But where, pray where, have the old friends gone?

Somewhere in the attic in corner dark,
The jumping-jack and the split drum lie,
The wooden crew of the Noah's ark,
And the tin of the battered infantry.
There, half by the rubbish and dust concealed,
The fuzzy dog and the wooden deer
The building blocks with their colors peeled
Half off; and the stringless top is here.

Pray where are the toys of Yesteryear;
The gaudy dreams with their colors gay,
The castled hopes that were passing dear,
The joys of our boyhood's merry play?
The man has toys that are bright and new,
On the wreck of dreams new dreams uprear
But where are the hopes of the flaring hue
That were our toys of the Yesteryear?

Somewhere in the darkness the dead dreams fade,
The broken idol and shattered vase,
The castled hopes in their ruins laid
Come here to a common trysting place,
Half hid by the rubbish and dust of days,
The wrecks of unnumbered dreams are here
That made us glad in a hundred ways,
And there are the toys of the Yesteryear.

It is told that down in Hawkesbury there was an old lady who used to get about 100 pounds of wood fibre, from which paper was made, each week, and take it home. She kept a boarding house, and it was known that she had been feeding the boarders codfish balls regularly. The mill men became curious and once asked her what she used it for. She told them how the supply of cod-fish in the grocery had run out, and she had got the fibre, and the boarders had been having "codfish balls" just the same.

To Cure Catarrh the Germs must be Killed

Japanese Catarrh Cure does it.

Catarrh is a germ disease, like typhoid fever and smallpox. It is a minute germ that weakens the membranes lining the nostrils, starts up inflammation and ulceration, takes away taste and hearing, and in the advanced stages affects the lungs, kidneys and liver.

Japanese Catarrh Cure kills the germs, and cures. It is the only remedy that reaches every part of the affected surfaces. Hundreds of testimonials prove that Japanese Catarrh Cure is the never-failing cure for Catarrh.

Mr. Frank Downs, Port Hope, writes:—"I have been subject to Catarrh for over three years, and could get nothing to help me. A friend advised the use of Japanese Catarrh Cure. I purchased a package from my druggist and got relief after three applications. I followed up the treatment, and am thankful to say, was soon completely cured."

A WEDDING SURPRISE.

(Philadelphia Record.)

It is a well-known rule among clergymen not to take a fee from a fellow dominie for marrying him. The general custom is, however, for the best man to go through the usual form and present the officiating clergyman with an envelope containing the fee. The minister then pays a graceful compliment to the bride and presents the envelope to her. A young clergyman in one of the suburbs got married the other day. He decided to give his bride a nice surprise. He handed to his best man an envelope to be given to the officiating minister—and, of course, to be transferred, with due professional etiquette, to the bride. The envelope contained a $100 bill. The officiating minister had heard glowing reports of the rich bride his young friend was getting and decided that the fee would do him more good than the newly-married couple, and therefore for once departed from the usual rule. He put the envelope in his pocket.

ONTARIO'S DAIRY WEALTH.

Aggregate Manufacture of Cheese, Butter and Bacon Reached the Enormous Total of $95,000,000.

Peterboro, Jan. 11.—The constant arrival of delegates swelled the attendance at the 29th Eastern Ontario Dairymen's convention to nearly the 400 mark at yesterday afternoon's session. The speakers were: J. H. Grisdale of the Experimental Farm, Ottawa, Henry Glendenning of Manilla, President Creelman, O. A. C., Hon. Nelson Monteith and others. Numerous questions were asked the different speakers. Addresses of welcome to the city were extended by Mayor Best, R. R. Hall, M. P., and T. E. Bradburn, M. P. P., and a suitable reply made by J. R. Dargavel, M. P. P., of Elgin.

The president, D. Derbyshire, M. P., in his opening address, said this had been the banner year in Ontario, both as to aggregate output of dairy products and the amount received. We made about the same quantity of cheese and our butter production had beaten all records. Our cheese exports from Montreal for the season just closed were 2,121,101 boxes. The cheese on hand in Canada at the close of navigation was 450,000 boxes, which would make 2,600,000 boxes, valued at $22,000,000. Our butter exports from Montreal were 575,449 packages, and the estimated stock in Canada is 125,000 packages, so we made in the season 700,000 packages, valued at $9,000,000. The bacon trade so closely allied with the dairy industry amounted to about $15,000,000. Home consumption in 1905 was about 3,500,000 packages. We received about $10,000,000 more in 1905 than in 1904, for cheese, butter and bacon. Our dairy men produced, excluding condensed milk, milk for our cities, towns, etc., cheese valued at $22,000,000, butter $8,000,000, bacon $50,000,000, or a grand total of $95,000,000. We are sending our goods not only to the mother country, but to the west and Japan as well, in increasing quantities each year.

AUXILIARY DERAILED.

Brakeman Dennis O'Brien Killed and Three Trainmen Seriously Injured.

Stratford, Jan. 11.—While on the way to Waterloo to replace an engine which was off the track, the Stratford auxiliary was derailed at Baden Station, about 9 o'clock Tuesday night. One man is dead and three others were more or less injured.

The car containing the crew left the track and rolled down an embankment, imprisoning the men. Before they could be released, Hugh Bateman, car inspector, was badly burned by fire from the overturned stove, which fell on him, and Herbert Farr, brakeman, was also burned, but not seriously.

Dennis O'Brien, brakeman, received such serious injuries that he died in the afternoon at the Stratford hospital. It is supposed he was on the steps of the car when it left the track, and he was caught under the wheels, both legs being almost severed. O'Brien was 27 years of age, and unmarried, and lived in Stratford with his mother.

The train was going at a good rate of speed on a down grade when the accident occurred, and it is supposed to have been caused by a broken car wheel.

Falls 80 Feet to Death.

Midland, Jan. 11.—A shocking accident occurred at the new elevator on Tuesday by which Robert John Leitch, a young man, aged 24 years, was instantly killed. The roof was being placed on the tower, and the young man was walking on a scaffolding upon which props had been placed to support a portion of the roof. With the extra weight the scaffolding gave way, and the young man fell to his death eighty feet below. His head was badly smashed.

Killed in Soo Works.

Sault Ste. Marie, Jan. 11.—An explosion at the blast furnace of the Algoma Steel Co. plant yesterday killed Wm. Ault and seriously injured two others, who will probably recover. Ault's death was caused by flying bricks, which killed him instantly.

Gas Generator Burst.

Delhi, Jan. 11.—Yesterday morning quite a serious accident happened to Richard Lynes, caretaker of the Methodist Church. He was cleaning out the acetylene gas generator, which is situated in a small brick building about fifty yards in the rear of the church yard. After he had drawn off the slush he struck a match to see if it was all clean at the bottom, and instantly there was an explosion. There was a hole blown through the roof, and a twenty-five pound weight, which was on top of the gasometer to give more pressure, was found about a hundred yards from the gas building. Mr. Lynes' face and top of his head were severely burned.

Eight Lives Lost in Hotel Fire.

Minneapolis, Minn., Jan. 11.—Eight persons dead of suffocation or of injuries sustained in leaping from a fire proof hotel building, a score of persons injured and a building damaged $25,000 by fire, smoke and water is an epitome of the ravages caused by a disaster which befell the West Hotel, Hennepin avenue and Fifth street yesterday, throwing 700 guests and employes into a panic. Fire Captain John Berwin fell from the fourth floor to the sidewalk while attempting to save a woman's life.

Teething Powders Poison Baby.

Victoria, B. C., Jan. 11.—Coroner Dr. E. C. Hart is making inquiry into a second case within a fortnight of fatal poisoning of an infant by the administration of patent medicines, the victim being the young son of Mr. and Mrs. Duvall, whose death is laid to the use of teething powders manufactured in England, and which are alleged to violate the Poisons Act of that country in the proportion of opium contained. In consequence of a similar poisoning case, the Government has already arranged to present stringent anti-patent medicine legislation during the session opening to-day.

Canadian Drops Dead.

Buffalo, Jan. 11.—John D. Forsyth, a Canadian, dropped dead in the office of the Victoria Hotel on Main street yesterday afternoon. WHERE IS OLD-TIME WINTER.

Where is the grand old winter,
The winter of long ago,
When round the loud and leaping fire
We heaped the hissing hickory higher,
While up the stormy northern way
There gleamed by night and shone by day
A wilderness of snow?

Those were the good old winters
That men can ne'er forget,
When all day long the sawmills hummed,
When all night long the fiddles strummed,
When 'neath the moon the men and maids
Went tumbling down the snowy glades,
Whene'er the sleighs upset.

Those were the good old winters
Whose sawlog days enthral;
The happy days of flannel frocks,
Of spinning-wheels and home-made socks,
Of "forty-fives" and heel-and-toe,
Paternella, "Around you go!"
And "Swing your pardners, all!"

Where is the grand old winter,
With its noisy chopping bee,
Its kissin' games an' happy greetings,
An' a hull six weeks of protracted meetings,
Its playing shinney on the pool,
An' taking the girls to singin' school?
It's gone away from me!

Where is the old-time Christmas?
It's said a long adieu,
When after a sleigh ride they gave a body
A streaming bowl of good hot toddy;
When whiskey was fifteen cents a quart,
An' your head was on good terms with your heart,
And you had a stomach, too.

Where are those good old winters?
In history they rest.
"Behold," He said, "I make all things new."
I'm glad He kept His word, ain't you?
For, after everything's said and done,
We wouldn't go back to the old—not one!
For everything's for the best.
—The Khan.

The Right of Way.

In the early days of western railway building, days not so long gone by as to be out of memory, there were many exciting races between rival roads for the possession of important mountain passes. Such a race, says the World's Work, was that between the Santa Fe and the Rio Grande roads for the right of way through Raton pass to New Mexico and the southwest.

Engineers and construction gangs worked in mad haste to get to it ahead of their rivals. The victory fell to the chief of the Santa Fe. When the Rio Grande cohorts arrived they found him alone in one of the big gorges, shovel in hand, slicing earth from an 8,000 foot hill.

"What are you doing here?" they asked.

"Constructing a railroad," he replied. He turned another shovelful of dirt, dropped the tool and hitched up his heavy cartridge belt.

"Any one who interferes with the Santa Fe does it at his own risk," he said quietly.

First the Rio Grande men laughed, and then they raged, and then they turned and went away. Their road was cut off from the south forever.

Niagara Falls in 100 Years.

Mgr. Laflamme, who was appointed by the Canadian section of the International Waterways Commission to report upon Niagara Falls, states in his report that Canada's share of that great waterfall will not be diminished by nature. That is what he has discovered after a careful examination of the waterfall and the stratification of the river. He estimates that erosion has caused the brink of the Horse Shoe fall to recede some 80 feet in the past century. The wearing-away process is still going on. He says that changes in the flow of water on the Canadian side for the next fifty or sixty years will not be very materially interferred with. In that time the flow will become greater. This is a good reason for the Canadian section declining to agree to the proposition that both countries have equal rights in the water powers of the St. Lawrence.

HUMAN DISSECTION.

Surgery and the Anatomists in the Olden Days.

For a long time Alexandria was the only medical center of the world, and the physician Galen, born about 130 A. D., had to journey from Rome to the African city even to see a skeleton. He sent his students to the German battlefields to dissect the bodies of the national enemies, while he himself used apes as most resembling human beings. Human dissection was revived in Bologna in the fourteenth century, where Madonna Manzolina later was professor of anatomy, undoubtedly one of the first women doctors, if not the very first. Leonardo da Vinci, painter of "The Last Supper," was a great anatomist, but dissection had fallen into disuse when Vesalius finally revived it about the middle of the sixteenth century.

Even in comparatively modern times anatomists have been the object of attacks by the populace. In 1765 Dr. John Shippen of Philadelphia was mobbed as a grave robber. Doctors' riots in New York occurred twenty-three years later and were due to the belief that the medical students robbed graves continually. It was the lack of opportunity to obtain subjects regularly that led to the practice of grave robbing and originated what Dr. Keene calls "a set of the lowest possible villains—the resurrectionists."

THE WATER SPIRIT.

Origin of Odd Beliefs About Rescuing Drowning Persons.

In Great Britain the belief that you must not rescue a drowning person is most prevalent in Cornwall and various parts of Scotland. The French sailor and the boatman of the Danube bow to the decree, together with the Russians, and let the people drown.

Dr. Taylor in his "Primitive Culture" declares this lingering fondness for this old creed is because the water spirit is angry at being despoiled of its victim, and should the unlucky person who has dared to frustrate him trust himself to the water's power he will drown as sure as fate.

The Bohemian fisherman shrinks from snatching a drowning man from the waters, fearing the water demon will take away his luck in fishing and drown him before he gets to shore with the would be victim. In Germany when some one is drowned they say, "The river spirit claims its yearly sacrifice," or, "The nix has taken him."

The belief is current not alone in those countries above mentioned, but the Kamchatkans rather than help a man out of the water would force him under, and if he should escape to the shore no one would dare receive him into his house or dare to give him food. He is supposed to be dead after once falling into the water.

A Mighty Desert Wind.

The samiel is a hot, noxious electrical wind which passes over the sandy deserts of Arabia and Africa. It moves with the quickness of lightning and passes in narrow currents for a few minutes at a time. It deals instant death to every man or beast happening to face it, and it is said that it so decomposes them that their limbs fall asunder. The approach of it is indicated by thick haze in the horizon, and travelers, if they have time, throw themselves on their faces, with their feet toward it, till it has passed. The sirocco is another blighting wind, which prevails in Italy and adjoining districts about April. The West Indian hurricanes are of a totally different description, being simply vortexes of great force, and they have been known to blow heavy cannon out of a battery and carry a man over a ten foot wall.

HOTEL EMPLOYEES.

Wages of Women Workers in the Big New York Establishments.

Employees in the linen room receive $20 a month, with room and board, and their hours are well regulated, in most of the large hotels. The parlor maid or maids come next on the salary list with $18, room and board, and the tips often bring this sum up to $30 or even $50. The maid's duties are to keep the parlor swept and dusted and herself tidy and ready to attend the women guests who desire her services. The chambermaids, bathroom girls, paint cleaners and scrub women, of whom every hotel employs a small army, receive $12 each. The work of the last two named is distinctly different. A scrub woman would not think of cleaning paint, and a paint cleaner would feel that she was demeaning herself in scrubbing the floor. Throughout the house the question of social distinction is argued, the maids feeling above the bathroom girls, the parlor maid above the other maids and the linen room girls above the parlor maid, and so on. Human nature is much the same the world over. In the parlance of hotel employees, scrub women are known as "soubrettes," the chambermaids as "the chorus," while the parlor maids are called "show girls." The "soubrettes" begin their work at 1 o'clock in the morning and do not finish until about 5. They scrub the floors and go throughout the house with soap and hot water. In one big New York hotel the employees are permitted to enter the help's dining hall at any time of the morning or afternoon between regular meals and have a cup of tea and a light lunch—a system which has much to do with the contentment reigning among the employees of this establishment. The cost is only a trifle, and, although the plan has been in operation for some time, those who enjoy its advantages do not abuse it.

FATE OF NIAGARA FALLS

THE AMERICAN CHANNEL WILL DISAPPEAR IN TIME.

Power Intakes Dry Up—All Prophecies As to the Rate of Retrocession Are Largely Guesswork—Depth of the Channel on the Canadian Side Diverts the Water In That Direction—Extracts From Report.

"The time will come when the American channel at Niagara Falls will disappear, and the intakes of the Canadian works will be dry." Such is the opinion which Monsignor Laflamme, the Quebec geologist, puts on record in his report to the Government, after a careful inquiry into the process of erosion and retrocession at Niagara Falls. Monsignor Laflamme says: "Niagara Falls is receding every year. The process of this retrocession is such that it is impossible to formulate any precise forecast as to its future rate and direction. Outside of generalities all is more or less problematic. This phenomenon is liable to many variations owing to impossible changes in the physical consistency of the geological beds over which the water descends. What will be the character of the channel which is now being formed, according to Mr. Grabau, can only be a matter of conjecture.

Canadian Water Safe.

At all events I do not think that the Canadian waters are, for long to come, apt to suffer greatly from the retrocession of the falls, whatever be its direction, during the recedence of the Horseshoe towards the upper sill of the rapids, everything leads me to believe that the Canadian side will always have its large share of the hydraulic force of the river. Once the falls have reached the upper ledge of the rapids, in many hundred years (2,000 years, according to Grabau, assuming that the mean rate of retrocession remains constant, which is far from certain), the retrocession of the cataract will enter into a phase of relative rest and the erosion will henceforth hardly take any other form than the wearing out of the lips of the new gorge, particularly that of the Canadian side. The American channel will have then long disappeared, and the intakes of the Canadian works, after having gradually become impoverished as the line of the fall is rectified and identified with the sill of the upper rapids, will end by being dry.

Higher by Fifty Feet.

"The fall will then be at the first sill of the rapids. It will be higher than the present cataract by some fifty feet, and will noticeably resemble the drawing which Father Hennepin left us of that which he saw in 1678, when the horseshoe did not exist, and the American and the Canadian falls were on one plane. The only difference will be that the fall will then be single, Goat Island having joined the American shore. Anyone desirous of knowing in how many years the falls will reach that point should study the figures of Mr. Grabau. Perhaps it is more prudent to simply say, with Dr. Clarke, that all these estimates of geological chronology express interesting possibilities, but hardly rise to the dignity of probabilities. Mr. Grabau himself, after having reproduced the figures which, according to C. H. Hitchcock, G. F. Wright, Spencer, Taylor, Pohlman, and Lyell, give the geological age of Niagara, very wisely concludes by the statement that such figures are hardly more than the expression of personal opinions, and that they exclusively reflect the ideas which the writers have formed as to the rapidity of the erosion caused by the river. And he adds that there may be a reserve of cause still unknown, which may have contributed, in a large measure, to lengthen or shorten this period. These causes, once known, will probably entail the revising of all the calculations, and will, no doubt, lead to different results.

"In the same order of ideas, this may be said of the factors yet to be discovered, which will, perhaps, considerably modify all that has already been thought and written on the retrocession of the falls in particular. I believe there are few scientific problems in which the personal equation plays so great a part. This is why the present report, while being little more than a summary of the principal works on Niagara, contains such a small proportion of the figures and calculations so abundant in the numerous monographs written on the subject."

Much Is Guesswork.

Monsignor Laflamme declares that geologists are not sufficiently acquainted with the intimate physical structure of the banks of limestone and shale that occasion the cataract to state positively either what is the regular rate of retreat or that it will continue indefinitely at the same rate in the direction it has followed during, say, the last fifty years. At present it seems to follow the outline of Goat Island; whether it will always do so is unknown. In the opinion of Mr. J. W. Spencer, whose geological studies of the locality have been carried on with untiring devotion, the erosion will continue for a time towards Goat Island, after which the western side will be affected.

Dr. Laflamme refers to the theory that as the result of a crustal movement the time will come when Lakes Superior, Michigan, Huron and Erie, instead of draining through Lake Erie, will send their waters towards the Mississippi through the southern extremity of lake Michigan, but regards it as impossible upon such uncertain data to rest very positive assertions. He then takes up the question as to the possible diminution of the flow of the water on the Canadian side. "It may be asked," he observes, "whether the recession of the falls will lessen the quantity of water which now flows along the Canadian shore in the upper rapids. On that score I do not believe that we have much to fear. No matter what direction the retrocession may take, we shall always have more water than the Americans. The level of the river bed is lower on our side. The first sill of the upper rapids crosses the whole of the river, dipping towards the Canadian shore; at this latter point it is considerably lower than on the American side. The Canadian fall is about ten feet lower than the American, and the water naturally bears towards our side. If the hollowing out of the Horseshoe should result in a modification of the general level of the river, there is reason to believe that we would not be sufferers.

American Channel Will Dry Up.

"The same thing cannot be said of the American channel. It will be dry before the new horseshoe gorge has reached the line which joins the upper end of Goat Island to Dufferin Islands. Already, owing to the tappings made at different points of the river above the falls, the general level has been so modified that nearly every spring, according to the citizens of Niagara Falls, the ice from Lake Erie, not finding water enough to float it, runs aground at the entrance to the American channel and blocks it completely, so that the American fall for a few days ceases to exist. This phenomenon, which was exceptional before the establishment of the electric works, seems to have become an almost annual one. In this respect I think I should add, although this matter is not directly relevant to my instructions, that the danger which really threatens Niagara Falls is not so much from the wearing of its bed as from the abstraction of a large proportion of its waters by the electrical companies now or likely to be established.

Abstraction by Power Companies.

"Already, according to Dr. Clarke, when the five electric companies now in operation at Niagara produce to their charter limits, and abstract a total of 48,000 cubic feet of water per second, the water level will almost reach the bottom of the river at the American shore. And if these abstractions are multiplied, always above the falls, the American fall will disappear finally, even the Horseshoe will lose a part of its majestic splendor. Though, as before observed, this question, an extremely delicate one, whether considered from the standpoint of public or private interest, does not strictly enter into the scope of the present notes, I have deemed it well to put my views on it before the International Commissioners, in view of their high competency and the great influence it is in their power to exercise with the constituted authorities. I may add that the preservation of the falls become the object of an international understanding. So great a natural phenomenon, which every year attracts, it is said, more than 800,000 visitors is surely worth our considering the insurance of its perpetuity."

PLAYED TAG WITH A MOOSE.

Big Fellow Chased Him and Things Looked Serious.

John Waddingham of Rolling Dam, N. B., had an experience recently with a moose, and is thankful that the animal did not linger longer in his vicinity, as things were looking a trifle blue for him just as the monarch of the forest entertained a new thought, says The St. John Sun.

Mr. Waddingham was working in his wood lot, when, following a crashing in the bushes, a big moose suddenly appeard before him. Mr. Waddingham decided that a retreat was right in his line about that time, as his only weapon was an axe, but evidently the moose had a grudge against some person and was determined to vent it upon the first one he met, for no sooner did Mr. Waddingham start to get out of the way than the moose made a rush at him. A blow with the axe for an instant made the big bull halt and shake his head, but he didn't stop to consider this indignity very long, and in another instant was upon the man again.

Tag, "you're it," said the farmer as he swatted the moose once again with the axe, and the pair began a game of chase around a convenient tree in which the chaser seemed to have more fun than the chased, as things were beginning to look serious for the latter, who was not in the best form for sprinting.

Finally Mr. Waddingham threw his axe at the moose, which viewed his fleeing playmate for a second or two, then turned in disgust towards the place from whence he came. Mr. Waddingham was pretty well winded when he broke from the circle and struck for home, and, had the moose chosen to follow him, would have overtaken him with ease. The animal was a monster, judging from the big hoof prints made in the soft earth while playing tag around the tree.

A Feminine Failing.

I was being rowed across a Canadian lake by a party of Indians and was told I must not break the stillness or the spirits of the place would be offended, says a woman writer in the Indiana Farmer. It was a calm, cloudless day, and the canoe sped like an arrow across the smooth waters. Suddenly, when in the middle of the lake, I determined to prove to these simple folk the folly of their belief. So I lifted up my voice in a wild cry that woke every echo of the hills. The Indians were filled with consternation. They uttered no word, but, straining every nerve, rowed on in frowning silence. They reached the shore in safety, and I had triumphed. But the leader of the Indians looked on me in concern.

"The great spirit is merciful," he said. "He knows that the white woman cannot hold her peace."

No Dissection In Jersey.

In many states the law assumes if a dead man has no friends to bury him there will be no objection made if the body is dissected. For this reason all unclaimed bodies are given to medical colleges. Although there are more than 150 medical colleges in the United States, not one is in operation in New Jersey because dissection of the human body is prohibited by law in that state.

Nothing New.

"No; there's no such thing. They've all been used hundreds of times."

VALUABLE DOCUMENT.

Evidence in the United Empire Loyalist Claims For Losses and Services—Ontario Archives.

The most important event in the early history of Upper Canada is the coming of the U. E. Loyalists. It forms the foundations and basis of our provincial life and institutions. Much has been written about the U. E. Loyalists, much of historical value still remains to be given to the public, and as their descendants are numerous, powerful, characteristically tenacious of the patriotic principles, and sensitive to the good name of their fathers no doubt documents bearing on their services and sufferings will continue to appear in print for years to come.

In his researches through the papers and literature of the later part of the 18th century respecting Ontario, Mr. Alexander Fraser, the Provincial Archivist, got on the trail of a valuable and voluminous manuscript concerning the services and losses of the U. E. Loyalists, a copy of which, having come into the possession of the Bureau of Archives has been issued in the form of his Second Report.

The origin of the manuscript and its preservation are a story in themselves. The British Parliament passed an act in 1783 appointing a commission to classify the claims of U. E. Loyalists. The chairman was John Wilmot and no time was lost in grappling with the work assigned to it. But it soon became clear that certain claims must be presented and evidence heard on the spot. Two commissioners, Mr. Jeremy Pemberton, and Col. Thomas Dundas, therefore came to Canada on this duty. Mr. Pemberton was a barrister of Lincoln's Inn, and had been appointed to fill a vacancy on the commission. Col. Dundas belonged to the ancient Scottish family of Arngask, branches of which had given leading men to bar, bench, and Parliament. He owned the picturesque estate of Carron, Stirlingshire, and there his family resided during his absence in Canada. These commissioners held sittings in Canada from 1785, until 1789, and obtained much interesting evidence from the claimants who appeared in person or by agent. They told where they had been located before the outbreak of the Revolutionary War, the value of their holdings, stock, chattels, or business, as the case might be, which they had lost on account of their loyalty; also what services they had rendered to the British cause, and in what capacity, and where they had settled in Canada, making altogether valuable sworn evidence as to their circumstances in life, and the quality of the people who first, in large numbers, settled down to hew out homes for themselves from the Ontario forests. As the evidence proceeded the commissioners wrote it down and made notes and observations as to its genuineness. The manuscript containing this evidence, and part of that pertaining to Canada received in London, by Chairman Wilmot, was taken to Carron Hall, by Col. Dundas and left there by him. How it was discovered and rescued from obscurity is thus told:

In 1844 Gen. Sir Henry Lefroy was in Canada organizing a magnetic survey by order of the British Government. In 1846 he married the daughter of Chief Justice Sir John Beverley Robinson, Bart., and through this relationship became interested in the early history of the country and in the Smithsonian Institute, Washington, which had then issued a letter pointing out the advantages of accumulating all manuscript material relating to the history of America. In 1860 Sir Henry Lefroy married, as his second wife, a grand-daughter of Col. Dundas, the U. E. Loyalist commissioner, and while staying at Carron Hall, in 1864, he saw the original manuscript for the first time. His old interest in early Canada revived and he suggested that the MS. would find a fitting home on this side of the Atlantic, but there being no public Archives Office in Canada, at that time, and remembering the appeal made by the Smithsonian Institute for such material, Sir Henry advised his wife's family to send the MS. there. This was accordingly done, but it remained there, apparently neglected, till an Act of Congress was passed transferring all manuscripts in possession of the institute to the Archives of Congress, where they have since remained. During the lapse of years the 35 volumes forming the manuscript had received little or no attention and had become through damp and decay very frail and difficult to read. The officials of Congress have more recently employed a special workman, for more than a year, in repairing the tattered leaves and it is from the MS. so restored that the copy now in Mr. Fraser's custody was made. The manuscript differs from the transcript in the Public Records Office, London, in that it contains notes and references made by the commissioners during the proceedings, indicating their opinion of the evidence, sometimes caustically expressed. Considering the faded condition of the original, the copy taken has been, apparently, very successfully accomplished and in the printing for publication the Archivist has reproduced the spelling, abbreviations, and phraseology of the manuscript literally, as is customary in such cases. The original pages of the MS. are given for facility of reference, and a very full index—a huge labor in itself—is furnished as is also an instructive introduction. The whole comprises two parts, of some 1,400 pages, and is a monument to the industry of the Archivist, for a great deal of other work in the way of copying, collecting, and classifying, was being carried on during the preparation and progress of the volumes through the press.

Among the familiar names of Loyalists to be found in the report the following are a few: Ault, Baby, Baldwin, Ball, Barton, Beaman, Beardmore, Beckwith, Beverley, Botsford, Brant, Bulyea, Burnham, Butler, Cartwright, Crysler, Embree, Gage, Hathaway, Hazen, Holland, Hough, Hoyt, James, Jarvais, Jessup, Johnson, Jones, MacDonell, McKee, Macaulay, Mabee, Meredith, Nelles, Page, Robinson, Rogers, Ryckman, Ryerson, Lippincott, St. Leger, Servos, Shaw, Sherwood, Small, Snell, Stockton, Strange, Street, Stringer, Sudbury, Tisdale, Urquhart, Vanalstine, Vanduren, Vanhorne, Vanevery, Vanderbrugh, Vanderlip, Valentine, Van Camp, Waite, Warner, Washburn, Waterous, Wellbanks, Wentworth, Westerfelt, Whitney, Whiting, Wildman, Wilcox, Wilkins, Wilmot, Wiltsey, Wintermute, Wood, Woodbridge, Woodstock, Wright, Yeomans.

DRESSING COQUETTISHLY.

Its Effect as Seen Through One Pair of Feminine Eyes.

"After all, I don't believe the point for women to consider in dressing to please men is so much to dress well as to dress coquettishly," exclaimed a pretty young woman. "Men are such romantic creatures deep down in their hearts that they will take a girl in a ripping tailor made for granted—at least they'll take her clothes for granted, I mean—while you'll hear them rave over somebody in a seven cent print frock, with a blue sash, maybe, or a rose in her hair. It's the little touch that catches their fancy, the little absurdity or extravagance or coquetry—I don't know just what to call it, but I know it when I see it.

"I know a man who actually wants his wife to rig herself up in a ridiculous little apron for Sunday night tea. Just fancy! His choice—he's given her several—is a thing made out of an exquisite cobwebby handkerchief, with insertions and frills of imitation val. He loves to see her wear that apron with a pearl necklace he gave her the first year they were married and a pink or rose—any old flower—over her left ear.

"He's so romantic, you see. Those little touches that look silly to his wife—to any woman, in fact—touch his heart the way expensive finery doesn't. When she wears that ridiculous apron she somehow seems like the girl he courted three years ago. She stops being his wife. She becomes poetry and romance incarnate, and the spirit of love comes down to dwell on earth.

"My youngest brother will go out calling some evening, and the next day we get an account of it for breakfast. 'By Jove, you should have seen Miss Smith!' he will exclaim fervently. 'She was a picture. What did she have on? Oh, bother! How should I know? Well, she had on a long coral necklace, if you want to know. She was a picture. And white—something white. She does her hair the way no other girl does it—all wopsy, you know—ripping.'

"And that's the way he'll run on. Always if a girl was 'a picture' it turns out she wore white with a blue sash or she carried a rose or something like that.

"If we women only understood the secret of looking coquettish as well as being coquettish, there wouldn't be so many bachelors; that's all I've got to say."—New York Tribune.

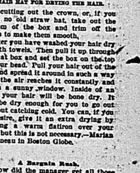
THE HAIR HAT.

A Method of Quickly Drying the Hair After Washing It.

"I would wash my hair oftener," said a girl whose natural hair is very oily, "if it were not for the trouble I have in drying it. It takes hours and hours."

For women who have the same trouble here are a few suggestions. Do not try to shake the hair dry nor to fan it. This method takes far too long. On the contrary, try to dry the hair by easier methods.

Make for yourself a hair hat. You can do this by taking an old straw hat and cutting out the crown, or, if you have no old straw hat, take out the bottom of the box and trim off the edges to make them smooth.



HAIR HAT FOR DRYING THE HAIR.

After you have washed your hair dry it with towels. Then pull it up through the hat box and set the box on the top of your head. Pull your hair out of the top and spread it around in such a way that the air reaches it constantly and sit in a sunny window. Inside of an hour your hair will be bone dry. It will be dry enough for you to go out without catching cold. You can, if you so desire, give it an extra drying by running a warm flatiron over your head, but this is not necessary.—Marian Martineau in Boston Globe.

A Bargain Rush.

"How did the manager get all those women out of that burning theater so quickly?"

"He went on the stage and announced that a man down at the entrance was giving away samples of baking powder."

He Rested.

"Good morning, Uncle Charles. Did you sleep well? I'm afraid your bed was rather hard and uneven, but"—

"Oh, it was all right, thank you. I got up now and then during the night and rested a bit, you know."

He Knew Her.

"I can't decide," she said, "whether to take the hat or not, but it is just the dearest thing I've seen this season."

"The dearest?" asked the husband, with a sardonic laugh. "Then it's certain that you'll take it."

DIPHTHERIA.

Watch Children Carefully After an Attack of This Disease.

The sequelae, or the after results of diphtheria, are, I think, more severe and last longer than the after affects of most other diseases. Sometimes a year or more may pass before a patient completely recovers. There are often great paleness and anaemia or lack of blood coloring matter, owing to the severe poisoning.

Diphtheritic paralysis is very common. That of the palate, which is perhaps the most frequent of any, causes difficulty in swallowing, so that fluids instead of going down the throat are regurgitated and returned through the nose. The child should not be scolded for this, as it is not due to carelessness, but to paralysis of the soft palate. This generally passes away in time when the general physical condition becomes better.

The muscles of the eye may also become paralyzed, causing strabismus or squint; the muscles of one side of the body, called hemiplegia; of the legs, called paraplegia, and of the bladder, resulting in retention of urine or difficulty in voiding it.

Sensation of the nerve ends is also frequently changed.

Uniform inflammation of the nerve endings, called multiple neuritis, occurs sometimes.

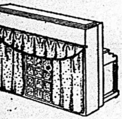
Paralysis of the heart is not at all infrequent and, as one might suppose, is very dangerous. The normal pulse rate is seventy-two, but in diphtheria it often drops to sixty, fifty or forty or even less, so that heart failure is very apt to occur. The heart remains weak not only throughout the disease, but also for a long while after convalescence is established. Children should therefore be guarded from taking too violent exercise, running, skipping or playing football for a considerable period. The heart should be carefully examined by a physician from time to time.—Ladies' Home Journal.

THE PIANO BACK.

Drape It and Make It a Musical Picture Gallery.

Strictly speaking, a piano should never masquerade as anything but a musical instrument if it is possible to maintain its individuality. If the top is used for bric-a-brac, when the piano is played the vibrations of the vases or pottery will be in another key, and the result will be discordant.

The only time when it is permissible for the upright piano to masquerade is when the arrangement of a room or a suit makes it necessary to have the instrument placed with its back to the larger part of the room. In this case the treatment of the piano back may be made as artistic as the ingenuity of the owner can devise.



A MUSICAL PICTURE GALLERY.

An artistic idea is shown in the illustration. Drape the back gracefully, and in the center under the flowing folds set pictures of musical subjects framed in Gothic style. Fra Angelico's angels are always appropriate. Some of these pictures come in colors with a gilt background and are exquisite framed with a gilt mat and a narrow gilt molding. When the curtains are gracefully draped about the pictures the effect is very artistic.—Good Housekeeping.

SACRED ANIMALS.

The Way the Brute World Is Regarded by Natives of India.

India's pets, are not royal, but celestial. To write of animals in the land which keeps its Vedic prayers and forgets the names of its emperors, one must leave solid ground and ascend to heaven, must speak in poetry, not prose, in hyperbole rather than in plain speech. The question of animals cannot, indeed, be soberly treated. Everywhere one sees acts toward them that can be explained only by their sacred and legendary importance. One can scarcely believe one's senses. This attitude is not the fantasy of a moment nor the bete blanche, so to speak, of a single author. It is the accumulated national delirium of thousands of years. To detach such animal worship from Indian life is to tear the rug to pieces, and we can weave nothing more beautiful.

The place held by these creatures in India is different from that accorded them in any other country. Every animal is looked upon as but the covering of a spirit. Is not its mind with God? Are not its auras and vibrations far purer than ours? May not even the soul of our grandmother look from its eyes? May not we ourselves return to lower than its state if we give it not reverence? Such conceptions are not called from obsolete thought, but from the vibrant tip and life of India today. Once is always in the orient. "It is your misfortune that you have to talk so much of progress," said a sage to me—"we have progressed."—Edmund Russell in Everybody's.

The Mantelpiece Bottle Experiment.

You find yourself on a picnic perhaps without a corkscrew and with a lot of bottles, all of them with corks in them. Hardly anybody knows what to do. The solution of the difficulty is, however, it seems, perfectly simple: "Place the bottle, cork downward, upon the edge of an ordinary mantelpiece, steadying it, of course, with the hand. Then with a slight impulse turn it so that it falls upon the ground on its base. Pick it up, and you will find that the cork has started. It is sometimes necessary to repeat the operation before the cork can be withdrawn with the fingers. A first experiment with a full bottle of water tightly corked is advisable. A fall direct from that height will have no desirable result."

The present writer can testify to the efficacy of this "minor art." He had, it is true, to arrange his picnic in an ordinary room so as to have the mantelpiece handy. But there was no difficulty after turning the bottle on its base, "with a slight impulse," in extracting the cork from the ruins. There was no need to repeat the operation.—London Spectator.

May Weddings.

May weddings are supposed by many persons to be unlucky. It is a heritage from the ancient Romans. A May bride, says Ovid, is short lived, his explanation being that the month included the celebration of the Lemuria in honor of the dead. Apart from any evil omen, such a time of mourning would interfere with the bathing and toilet arrangements that were proper preliminaries to weddings. Plutarch suggests that, as April was the month of Venus and June that of Juno, to select May was to slight those nuptial goddesses and that June, as the month of the young (juniores), was preferable to May, the month of the old (majores). Ovid's "Mense malas maio nubere vulgus ait" (there is a popular saying that wicked women wed in May) was inscribed on the gate of Holyrood when Mary, queen of Scots, married Bothwell in May, 1567. What followed strengthened Scottish belief in May's unluckiness.

The Term "Crony."

Every one uses the term "crony" in the sense of "chum" or "pal," and the phrase "old cronies" has become specially familiar, but it is doubtful whether the original word bore any reference to friendship. The new English dictionary puts down its origin to academic slang and quotes the immortal Pepys for the earliest instances of its use. Quite recently, however, an old letter of a still earlier date has come to light, in which a scholar is described as "content to destroy his body with night labors and everlasting study to overtake his chronyes and contemporaries." From this it would seem clear that the word was a bit of university jargon, used to denote students of the same date and coined from the Greek word that appears in the terms "chronology," "chronometer," "chronograph," that are connected with time.

Sheridan's Trap.

Any interruption while he was making a speech always caused Richard Brinsley Sheridan considerable annoyance. On one occasion the dramatist showed his displeasure of a fellow member of the house of commons who kept crying out "Hear, hear" every few minutes. During a certain debate Sheridan took occasion to describe a political contemporary who wished to play rogue, but had only sense enough to act fool. "Where," exclaimed he, with great emphasis—"where shall we find a more foolish knave or a more knavish fool than he?"

"Hear, hear," was shouted by the troublesome member.

Sheridan turned and, thanking the honorable member for the prompt information, sat down amid a general roar of laughter.

Tactful.

Mrs. John Sherwood was as famous for her exquisite nature as for her fine style. At a dinner one night at the time when her novel "The Transplanted Rose" was having a wide circulation her neighbor turned and asked in perfect good faith the almost incredible question, "Mrs. Sherwood, do you know who wrote 'The Transplanted Rose?'"

"It sounds as though it might be Hardy," laughed the gifted woman without a trace of ill nature.—Woman's Home Companion.

Love on Earth and In Heaven.

The difference between love on earth and love in heaven is not to be conveyed in words, but in tranquil and pure moods it may even on earth be apprehended by the sight of the spirit. Love in heaven has realized all that earthly love aspires to, and from that goal its progress begins, never to cease. The sky toward which it yearned in the world has become the ground on which it stands here, but now another sky is above it. We forecast heaven as repose and peace, the fulfilling of the heart's desire, the immortal presence with us of beauty and happiness. But man is not so poorly content. We leave behind us on earth the obstacles of the body, and in heaven we labor not for bread, raiment and shelter; hearts are not parted by space and time; we deceive not, strive not one against the other, scheme not to outdo others for the gain of our own name and fame. Yet in heaven are labor, emulation, ambition, love's holy fear and humility deeper than hell is deep below the heavens. Tears we have also and awe of that want which only the divine fullness can supply.—Julian Hawthorne in Century.

"Facts are stubborn things" is an aphorism first used by La Sage in "Gil Blas." It has since become proverbial.

JOYS OF THE CHILDREN.

Do Not Rob Your Little Ones of Their Penny Pleasures.

The amount of pleasure that a single penny will purchase for the boy of ten today cannot be bought for many hundred times that amount when he is ten years older. The delight of the proud possession of a "whole cent" is turned into woe when he is called back from his trip to the candy shop with the sharp reminder that he must "save his pennies." It is not wasteful to let the child have today what he cannot enjoy in the future, even if, by spending them, he is out a few dollars in later years. Allow him to have his penny's worth of pleasure today, for the time will come when he will have outgrown the playtime of life, and the pennies he has saved will not give him the value they would have been to his childish mind.

The whole situation has been summed up by Thackeray, who said that at twelve he wanted taffy, but didn't have the ha'penny, and at twenty he had the ha'penny, but didn't want the taffy. It is ever so. Once gone, the taffy is not the same as at that moment when it seemed our only joy on earth and when we dreamed of the time when we would have all the money we wanted to buy the sticky stuff for which we were then willing to give our two eyes.

See that your children are not robbed of their penny pleasures. You are depriving them of their birthright. To the child there is no future. The moment that he wants taffy is his past, future and present—his all. Don't make him save his penny and do without his taffy.—Exchange.

ONE WIFE'S VIEWS.

Her Conception of Her Duty to Her Home and Husband.

Wifehood and motherhood is as truly my profession as keeping a shop is my husband's business, writes a correspondent of the Woman's Home Companion. He is strenuously interested in his work. I devote my best energies to mine. However, without co-operation both would fail. We find it to our interest to help each other. Mutual consideration results in a happy home.

First, my husband spares me anxiety by telling me his exact financial condition. I reward his confidence by living within his income; consequently exorbitant bills never harass him.

I early cultivated my culinary talent. I take pride in cooking wholesome food in a wholesome way. A well fed man seldom worries over trifles. This helps to insure domestic felicity.

I refrain from deluging my husband with a recital of my woes. I never "nag." Such self restraint is heroic. I often feel that to indulge myself in both would be joy. However, self control invariably pays large dividends in home comfort.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

Pure wheat starch is the best of all cheap powders for the skin.

The cut surface of cucumber peeling is a harmless cosmetic, and may be rubbed over the face.

Drinking milk twice a day will give the complexion a creamy tint. If the milk is warmed it will increase the flesh rapidly.

Tall women look bad with a high coiffure, while a mignon beauty will gain dignity and inches by having her hair dressed on the top of her head.

The salt rub is prepared by allowing a large bath towel to lie all night in a strong salt solution. One should stand on a rug or in the tub while taking it to save trouble in cleaning up afterward.

A tired woman will find it very refreshing after a day of nervous strain or overexertion to take a very hot bath with some aromatic mixture added to it just before dinner. It will take all the worn look away.

Simple Neuralgia Cure.

The physician was talking of a simple neuralgia cure, one that would, he said, tone up the nerves and enrich the blood. "The remedy is 5 cents' worth of carbonate of iron," said he, "and the dose is a pinch in a teaspoonful of molasses taken at night, just when the patient is ready for bed. Take it till the pain ceases, and that will generally be after the third night. There is no disagreeable taste and no danger to the teeth, since carbonate of iron is not of the acid family. It happens to be a soluble form and that is more than can be said of some iron medicines where the ingredient intended to enrich the blood passes through the body without entering the circulation."

Starch Economy.

Economize starch in the following way: Instead of throwing away the starch which is used for making cold starch, let it stand, after using, and settle in the bottom of a clean bowl. When the water is clear above it, drain the water off, let the starch dry, cover the bowl to keep the dust away, and this starch is ready for use the next time it is required. Of course it is sometimes necessary to add a little more to it.

A Traveling Tip.

In traveling on a sleeping car it is unnecessary for a woman to provide a large paper bag for her hat. The porter will furnish a pillowcase for it. A good way to keep your dress skirt from wrinkling is to pin it securely to one of the curtains of your berth. A strong safety pin is the best to use.

Spots on the Nails.

To remove white spots from the nails make a paste of equal parts of turpentine and myrrh. Spread on the nails at night, binding on a cloth to prevent its soiling the clothes. Remove in the morning by applying olive oil.

FEARFUL STORY OF RUSSIAN OUTRAGES.

SEVEN HUNDRED REFUGEES REACH NEW YORK WITH PITIFUL TALES OF CRUELTIES SUFFERED.

New York, Jan. 10.—Reports of how the dead were mutilated to terrify the living in Russia, were brought here yesterday by Russian refugees, 700 of whom arrived on the steamer Pennsylvania. One woman told of having seen a young woman kill her child sooner than let the Cossacks murder the infant.

Another refugee related how in the town of Neva Moscou five drunken soldiers marched through the streets carrying arms, a dead baby with a bayonet run through its body, displayed at the end of each gun.

Leiver Landomins said that it was a common thing to see men strung up feet first and lying dead along the route of the railroad. He left his wife and their child in Russia and came here to establish a home for them.

Hirsch Luszomiski, with his wife and two children, is another refugee. He is a lumber merchant at Lenkowlsk. He said:

"I saw a Russian town attacked on Dec. 18, and 300 Jews were put to death. The women were thrown out of the windows and the men were beaten over the head by rifle butts and bayonets were run through the bodies of the children."

Wolf Sobak, from Crinshoff, near Odessa, said; "I saw the body of a Russian boy of about eleven years of age lying dead in the road, and on his breast was a label which read, 'This is the way to kill them off young.' In the streets I saw two and three-year-old children torn limb from limb by the insane Russians, who were inspired to the deed by the police themselves, who thus hoped to take the minds of the Russian populace from the real revolution that is spreading throughout the empire. I saw one young woman slashed open from her throat to her abdomen, and then saw the fiends stuff feathers from a pillow which they had thrown from the windows into her body."

HUNTINGDON COUNCIL.

Town Hall, Moira, Jan. 8, 1906.

The Council-elect met to-day, and having made and subscribed to the necessary declaration and qualification of office, took their seats.

W. W. Collins, reeve; J. G. Elliott, J. Gay, S. Ray and W. E. Tummon, councillors.

A letter was read from John and Elizabeth Rodgers, asking remuneration for services rendered Rodger Bros.

On motion of W. E. Tummon and J. Gay, $15 was granted for the immediate relief of Rodger Bros; and the Reeve and W. E. Tummon were appointed to expend the same.

The road surveyor reported that he did not sell the timber of road allowance between 9 and 10 con., across 1-2 lot 13, as the parties concerned could not agree as to the true line of road, and advised that no action be taken, which was agreed to by the Council.

By-laws were introduced and passed through their several readings, appointing assessors, auditors, a member of L. B. of Health, and road surveyor.

Assessors — John Fleming and H. L. Mullett.

Auditors — John B. Morton and D. Fleming, jr.

L. B. H.—John Kilpatrick.

Road Surveyor—Wm. Booth.

On motion of W. E. Tummon and S. Ray, Geo. Wright's taxes were reduced from $2.05 to 49c, owing to a mistake in assessing.

On motion of W. E. Tummon and S. Ray, Daniel Collins was remitted $2 for roadwork done by J. Burk, but charged to Collins.

Orders were given as follows;

D Collins, gravel, $3.45; Municipal World, $5.00; Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto, $5; meeting of B. of H., $10.

Deputy Returning Officers — A. Heritz, No. 1 poll, $4.00; Archibald Adams, No. 2 poll, $8; E. Twiddy, No. 3 poll, $8; Wm. Lakey, No. 4 poll, $8.00.

Council adjourned until the first Monday in February, 1906. — Jas. Haggarty, Clerk.

Professionally Considered.

"Public opinion is a great power," remarked the earnest citizen.

"Yes," answered Dustin Stax; "a great deal may be done with it. The trouble is that it is so hard to capitalize."

TALES OUT OF SCHOOL.

More Merry Mistakes Recorded by Henry J. Barker, M. A.

It is a remarkable fact that children rarely or never make use of proverbs or "sayings" in their ordinary talk and conversation. If their teacher or parents happen to use proverbial language it is as much lost on the child as though it were so much Chinese or double Dutch. I came across an amusing example of this whilst I was examining a class of South London boys on the coalfields of England and Wales.

After a certain lad had correctly informed me that one of the most important coalfields of England was that of Northumberland and Durham, I asked the question:

"When you hear people say as regards a certain action that 'it is like carrying coals to Newcastle,' what do they mean?"

Out of a large class of over sixty boys only two put up their hands: and they did, I noticed, with some hesitation and diffidence.

"Well," I said to one of them, "what do people mean by the expression?"

"Why, sir," he answered, "they mean that carrying coals to Newcastle would be very hard work."

The lad had evidently in his mind the picture of a man carrying a sack or scuttle of coals all the way from London to Newcastle.

With a smile, I turned to the other boy, and asked him what he thought was the meaning.

"It means, sir, that you'd most likely be persecuted for cruelty to animals."

This lad, too, had evidently a picture of some poor broken-winded horse drawing a load of coals all that distance, and being urged on by the driver's whip or stick.

The Church's Feminine.

The masculine and feminine genders of nouns and pronouns often prove a great difficulty with children.

A certain inspector, after eliciting from a class of London boys that the feminine of "Jew" was "Jewess"; of "bachelor," "maid"; of "master," "mistress," etc., proceeded to give them some rather harder questions.

"What is the feminine of inspector?" he asked, pointing at a little ragged urchin behind.

"There ain't none," said the lad, thinking, possibly, that the inspector was laying a trap for him.

"Oh, yes, there is," said the gentleman; "lady inspectors are plentiful enough. For instance, I daresay you know there is a lady who inspects the laundry work in the girls' department of this school. Now, what would you call her?"

"Why," answered the urchin, "a washerwoman, of course!"

Another inspector informs me that in dealing with the genders of nouns, he asked (playfully laying a little trap for the boys):—

"Has the word 'church' a feminine?"

After a pause, a thoughtful-looking lad cried out.

"Yes, sir."

"Oh, indeed," said the inspector, with a smile; "pray, what is it?"

"Chapel, sir."

MADE BAD BARGAIN.

Queen Victoria and King Edward Lose on Hereditary Revenues.

When Queen Victoria agreed to place the hereditary revenues of the Crown at the disposal of the nation Her Majesty made a bad bargain for the royal family.

King Edward did the same thing when he came to the throne, accepting a clear yearly sum of £470,000 ($2,350,000). At the present moment the nation is making a profit on the bargain. It amounted to £22,500 ($112,500) last year, and is increasing very rapidly.

Among the properties thus assigned were considerable portions of the West End, including much of Pall Mall and St. James. Rents have risen greatly there in recent years, and as leases fall in the Commissioners of Woods and Forests will naturally raise their demands.

They are doing so now with great success. One instance is the Carlton Hotel, for which the ground-rent was only £763 ($3,816) per annum, but which is now £4,200 ($21,000), an enormous increase.

Several West End clubs have felt the increase in valuation of their premises. One of the most striking examples, however, is that of the land at No. 81 Portland place, which has advanced in rental from £5 ($25), to £125($625). A new lease cost the lessee £900 ($4,500).

Making a Great Speech.

A lawyer, whose eloquence was of the spread-eagle sort, was addressing the jury at great length, and his legal opponent, growing weary, went outside to rest.

"Mr. B.—— is making a great speech," said a countryman to the bored counsel.

"Oh, yes; Mr. B.—— always makes a great speech. If you or I had occasion to announce that two and two are four, we'd be just fools enough to blurt it out. Not so Mr. B.——. He would say, 'If by that particular arithmetical rule known as addition we desire to arrive at the sum of two integers, we would find—and I say it boldly, sir, and without fear of successful contradiction—we, I repeat, should find by the particular arithmetical formula before mentioned—and, sir, I hold myself perfectly responsible for the assertion I am about to make—that the sum of the two given integers added to the other two integers would be four.'"—London Tit-Bits.

The Robber Robbed.

"I remember a long time ago," said a burglar, "going late one night into a room in which there was one man sleeping. His clothes were on a chair near the head of the bed. I was bending over these clothes and about to take them out to the hall when the man suddenly woke up. Without a moment's hesitation he threw his arms around me. I was young then and strong, but this man was four times as strong as I was. I think he could have crushed me to a jelly if he had wanted. As it was he put me out of the house with the greatest ease. But before he did that he carried me over to the table and lit a light. As he looked at me my watch chain caught his eye, and, do you know, that man took my watch and chain and kept them!"—London Tit-Bits.

MR. W. J. GAGE TELLS OF THE GROWTH OF THE CONSUMPTIVE HOSPITALS IN MUSKOKA

Accommodation at Free Hospital Increased by Twenty-five Beds

URGENT CALL FOR FUNDS TO MEET INCREASED BURDEN FOR MAINTENANCE

Dear Friend:—

Contributions from rich and poor, young and old, received by the Free Hospital for Consumptives, tell of the love and charity toward the great work carried on in Muskoka.

Thousands from all parts of Canada not only sent their "God bless the work" but their money also to help to answer their prayers.

The poor widow out of her hard-earned savings, telling how her own heart was made lonely through the dread scourge, as well as the rich insurance companies, have sent their gifts.

2,000 patients have been cared for since the opening of our Homes in Muskoka. 560 of these were treated in the Free Hospital. 150 patients in these two Homes to-day, show how this life-saving work has grown.

Premier Whitney, replying to a large deputation in the interests of the National Sanitarium Association, stated that "personally he thought $100,000 would not be too much for the Government to set apart for this work."

Seventy-five patients to be cared for in the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives means a large weekly outlay. The Trustees accept this obligation, believing the needed money will be forthcoming.

The world is full of good and generous people ready to give. But they want to be sure that their money is wisely spent. In no other place can your money do so much good.

The growing knowledge of the contagious character of the disease has made the lot of the consumptive poor a hard one.

The Muskoka Free Hospital is to-day the only place where a sufferer in the early stages of consumption is admitted free.

Will you not help to save the life of a sick one to whom all other doors are closed?

What greater blessing could crown your giving, than the knowledge that it helps to snatch a fellow-being from the very jaws of death?

$50,000 is wanted for the coming year. Will you join in this greatest of all charities?

Faithfully yours,
W. J. GAGE.

The woman was horribly burned, the flesh just hanging to her face and hands.

Her suffering was ended by death early this morning.

She was an estimable lady, beloved by all who knew her She was an active member of the Methodist church and had always taken an active part in the church work. AN ACT OF KINDNESS BRINGS GIRL A FORTUNE.

A SWISS MAIDEN LEFT $250,000 BY AN OLD MAN WHOM SHE HAD PROBABLY FORGOTTEN.

Geneva, Jan. 10. — The Obwaldner Volksfreund states that Mlle. A. Burch, of Obwald, in the Canton of Uterwald, became one of the richest heiresses in Switzerland yesterday, owing to the generosity of an Englishman.

According to this journal, which does not give the name of the benefactor, Mlle. Burch was waiting in a large crowd before Buckingham Palace in 1886 to see the Queen, when an old gentleman, overcome by the heat, fainted near her and fell on the footpath.

The Swiss girl tended him, and accompanied him home in a cab. He thanked her for her attentions, and asked her for her card before she went away. Some months later she returned to Switzerland, and, apparently, the incident was forgotten.

It is stated by the Volksfreund that she received a letter from a London solicitor yesterday informing her that the old gentleman whom she had aided had died, leaving her a fortune of $250,000.

Spurious Yankee Dollar Gave Magistrate a Job.

FRANK ROBINSON, CHARGED WITH PASSING IT, HONORABLY ACQUITTED IN POLICE COURT THIS MORNING.

At the police court this morning Frank Robinson was charged with uttering spurious coin. It is alleged that the accused passed off an American dollar which proved to be spurious. The accused, it will be remembered, was the party who caused considerable comment about the city last fall by stating that he had been waylaid on the Marshall road and relieved of a sum of money, which story proved to be untrue.

County Attorney Anderson represented the Crown and Mr. McMahon appeared for the accused.

Several witnesses were examined.

Mr. John McFee, jeweller, after being sworn, produced two coins, and gave the weight of each, one genuine and one counterfeit. The genuine coin weighed 409 grains and the spurious coin 307 grains. He tested the metal and found that one was silver and the other was not. The coins were of the issue known as American silver dollar pieces.

Mr. J. Parliament, merchant, testified that he received from the prisoner, on Monday, a coin which proved not to be genuine. The accused asked the witness to change the piece of money which was produced.

Mr. C. M. Stork, manager of the Bank of Commerce, testified that he had no doubt the coin produced was a counterfeit coin.

Officer Hayes testified that the coins produced were the ones he had taken up to Mr. McFee's for testing purposes. Prisoner told the witness that he had received the coin in question from a man named Andrew Edgar, whom he drove to Canifton. Had known the prisoner for some time and would say that he was somewhat imaginative in his manner.

Chief Newton testified that he had received the alleged spurious coin from Mr. Parliament. Had known the prisoner for about two years. He had worked at different places.

Mr. R. McCoy testified that the prisoner worked for him and on Saturday last drove a man out to Canifton, and on his return gave to witness an American coin, which he refused at first to take, as it was not genuine. Prisoner said the man he drove gave it to him. Witness took the coin and in the evening, when he paid Robinson his wages, gave him the coin back again. The prisoner said "you are not again. The prisoner said "You are not

In cross-examination the witness said that he did not at first think it was a good coin, but took it because Robinson said he had received it from the party whom he drove out to Canifton.

A young lady witness testified that on Saturday, about noon, the prisoner came into her mother's shop and gave her an American silver dollar and a quarter. The money was placed in the till. On Monday witness took the $5 worth of silver into a store to exchange it for a bill and amongst the silver was the American coin. The merchant said the coin in question was not good and he gave it back to her. Witness gave the coin back to prisoner and he gave her four quarters for it. He said that Mr. McCoy had given him the coin in question.

The prisoner testified that he was 20 years of age, and it was the first time he had ever been accused of an offence. He had worked for Mr. McCoy for some time until a few days ago. On Saturday last he drove a man out to Canifton and he gave him a coin, similar to the one produced. He had a suspicion that the coin was not all right, but the man said that it was all right. He took the coin and gave it to Mr. McCoy, and the latter gave it to the witness as part of his week's pay. He owed a small account at Mrs. Thomas' and gave the coin in question as part payment, believing that it was a good one. This was on Saturday evening. On Monday the coin was returned to him and he took it to Mr. Parliament and received change for it, after some remarks had been made as to its being genuine. He told Mr. Parliament if the coin was not good to keep it in his possession and he would get a dollar bill and give in exchange for it. He was arrested before he made the exchange. Prisoner stated positively that he had no idea that the coin was spurious, until now. He was willing to give another dollar in exchange.

In cross examination witness admitted that Mr. McCoy had told him that the coin, in his opinion, was not good, and that Miss Thomas had told him that she could not pass it. The coin produced looked very much like the coin he received from the man whom he drove to Canifton. In answer to a question the accused said that he was the party who some time ago told the police that he had been waylaid and robbed. He did not at that time believe he told anything but the truth.

This concluded the evidence.

Mr. McMahon asked for the discharge of the prisoner.

The County Attorney said the question was, did the accused have knowledge that the coin was spurious when he passed it. If he did then he was guilty of the offence charged; if not he should be discharged.

The Magistrate said there was no doubt that the coin was a spurious one, but it was a clever counterfeit. The story the accused told of driving a man to Canifton was true, and there was no denial that the prisoner received the coin in question as pay for the same. Mr. McCoy accepted the coin and gave it back to the accused as part payment of his wages, and the prisoner did not refuse to accept it. He did not consider a case had been made out, and he honorably acquitted the accused.

GOOD MAN GONE WRONG.

HE WON FAME YEARS AGO BY HIS SPEECH.

Marion, Ind., Jan. 10—A. F. Norton has been arrested and charged with passing a worthless cheque and is declared to be insolvent with liabilities of $40,000 and assets of $10,000. If these charges are true they mark the downfall of one of the most picturesque business men in Indiana—or, in the United States, for that matter.

Norton is the man whose fame spread far and wide because of his claim that he was conducting his business as Christ would conduct it were He on earth and engaged in selling goods. Norton opened a small grocery in Marion a few years ago with the announcement;

"I shall run this business as Christ would run it."

This novel announcement attracted instant attention, and Norton did "a land office business" from the start. Soon he had fifteen groceries in active operation in villages around Marion. He refused to sell tobacco in any form, would not deliver goods to anybody, and never allowed an article to leave any of his stores until paid in cash at the price set by himself. He carried grain sacks filled with money to the banks, and appeared to be distressingly prosperous.

One of his ideas was that Christ would sell goods at cost when his expenses were paid. So, each day, after he had received a sum in profits sufficient to cover his expenses and leave a small balance to himself. Norton claimed to sell the goods at cost price. Often he permitted customers to wait on themselves, even to make the change for themselves.

NEW LIBRARY SITE

A CORRESPONDENT MAKES SUGGESTIONS ABOUT IT — THINKS SHOULD BE ON BANKS OF BEAUTIFUL MOIRA.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer;

Dear Sir, — According to request in your valuable paper of last week I beg to offer suggestion as to new library site. In the first place I would ask why not have the library and Y.M.C.A. building together? Would it not be cheaper for both? As for site, we know of no more beautiful spot than on the banks of our Moira river, on the west side of South Front St. on the way to the now much appreciated "Victoria park," between the new laundry and the Temperance House. It would not be far from Bridge street; opposite "Panter's park," in view of the City clock, and convenient for yachting and swimming, races, etc.

Why not have in connection the long talked of public bathing house? It would build up the lower end of Front street and be a desirable spot to look at, and will it not occupy the serious consideration of our City Fathers and those interested.

They were locked up for trespassing.

A DYNAMITE DISASTER

Averted by Soldiers Firing on and Piercing Engine Boiler.

Train Containing Two Carloads of High Explosive Run at Full Speed by Revolutionists to Blow Up the Nicholas Depot—Count Witte, Who is Bitter Against Moderates, Tells a Most Remarkable Story.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 11.—Premier Witte yesterday made a statement to a delegation, headed by the mayor of this city, which requested a relaxation of the orders of the prefect of police against meetings in the interest of the electoral campaign. The Premier could not promise to do anything until after Jan. 22.

The Premier spoke bitterly of the failure of the moderates to give the Government support, saying: "I am determined to save Russia."

While the Emperor wanted the National Assembly to meet as early as possible, Premier Witte said that those charged with the election feared that it will be impossible for it to assemble before April 28.

Remarkable Dynamite Story.

Recounting a remarkable incident that heretofore had escaped notice, the Premier said: "At one time all the stations except the Nicholas Depot were in the hands of the revolutionists. The latter in desperation started a train hauling two cars loaded with dynamite at full speed for the station with the intention of blowing it up. A frightful disaster was averted by a timely warning of the plot, which enabled the authorities to have a military train with steam up ready on a parallel track. As the dynamite train arrived soldiers from the military train running alongside fired at the engine and managed to pierce the boiler of the locomotive, stopping the train before it reached its destination." In St. Petersburg, the Premier further remarked, enough dynamite had been captured to destroy the entire city.

Rebels In Control.

Mitau, Courland, Jan. 11.—Fugitives who have arrived here from the interior recount remarkable stories of the civil administration set up by the revolutionists in the towns and villages they control. They have elected committees, on which one woman always serves, to administer everything, including the courts. The whipping post for theft has been revived, and for certain classes robbery is punishable with death. The spirit shops are closed and preaching the doctrine of the damnation of souls is forbidden. Only civil marriages are legal.

Killed to the Last Man.

A squadron of dragoons which was ambushed recently near Hazenpot, losing two men killed and four wounded, received reinforcements later and surrounded the revolutionists. No quarter was given and the revolutionists, numbering 80 in all, were killed to the last man.

A band of 50 revolutionists made a daring raid on Livenhoff with the object of obtaining medicines and bandages for the revolutionists in the field. They carried off two Jewish merchants and held them for a heavy ransom, which was paid.

Officers In a Plot.

London, Jan. 11.—A despatch from St. Petersburg to a new London paper, The Tribune, reports the arrest of eight artillery officers of the St. Petersburg garrison on the charge of being engaged in a conspiracy to blow up the Troitsky bridge and to capture the fortress.

Rising In Siberia Feared.

Nagasaki, Jan. 11.—The transport Mongolia, which has arrived here from Vladivostock with Russian refugees, reports that a general uprising throughout Siberia is feared.

Leather boots and shoes may be softened and kept from cracking by being rubbed well with castor oil. They should not be used for about twelve hours afterward.

Put a few grains of rice in the salt-cellars to keep the salt from caking. As the cellar is shaken the rice will keep the salt moving.

"Facts are stubborn things" is an aphorism first used by La Sage in "Gil Blas." It has since become proverbial.

HAD BONUSING SYSTEM

Tack Men Worked on Same Lines as Plumbers' Rake-Off.

In One Case Unearthed There Was to Have Been a "Divvy" But the Contract Went Wrong—Only One Firm Was to Get an Order, the Others Were to Get a Bonus—More Plumbers' True Bills.

Toronto, Jan. 11.—That a bonusing system somewhat on the same lines as the plumbers' rake-offs was proposed by James Hardy was revealed at yesterday's hearing of the case against the tack combine. Mr. Tilley, for the combine, repudiated the idea, but Crown Attorney Curry and Magistrate Denison talked him into submission.

On Feb. 16, 1895, R. & T. Jenkins wrote to the Montreal Rolling Mills a letter which reads in part as follows:

"With respect to the order of the Massey-Harris Co., we have heard in an indirect way that Mr. Osborne, the purchasing agent, stated his company would not give an order for these goods (a special class of tacks) to be divided amongst the various members of the association. Our impression is that if it was pointed out to that gentleman that one member of the association was going to manufacture all the goods we might get the order. Of course some arrangement would have to be made by which the member manufacturing the goods would pay something to the other members for the privilege."

Where's the Difference.

"What is the difference between that and the rake-off of the plumbers?" asked the magistrate.

"No difference," said Mr. Curry.

"Yes, there is," asserted Mr. Tilley.

"Whose pocket does the money divided come from?" asked the magistrate.

"The proposal, for it was nothing more, was made for the purpose of trying to get around the objections made by the different parties," said Mr. Tilley. "The contract was not obtained at any rate."

"Because the profits for the others were placed too high," suggested the magistrate.

"They just ran a little too close to the line, and the sale went to United States firms."

The day was consumed in the reading of letters from the minute books, taken from Hardy's office.

More Bills Against Plumbers.

The grand jury yesterday returned true bills against W. J. Storey, William Bush, F. J. Lawlor, Charles Corner, Charles H. Beavis, K. J. Allison, Lemis Legrow and W. J. Mason, charged with conspiracy to injure John B. Reeves and hindering his workmen and employers, and enticing the workmen from his service.

They are also charged with restraining trade, by conspiring with Fred Agmstrong, P. J. Hayes and R. W. Harrison.

Another true bill charges W. J. Stevenson, A. Malcolm, George Clapperton, Joseph Wright, Alexander Purdy, H. Mahoney and R. Mahoney with conspiring and defrauding the Homewood Sanitarium of Guelph of $900 on work done.

These plumbers' cases will be commenced on Friday.

True bills were also brought in against 22 of the plumbers on the original charge of conspiracy, upon which they were sent for trial by Magistrate Denison.

Toronto Civic Inquiry.

David Rogers, in the civic inquiry yesterday, corroborated his brother in the statement that Mr. Lennox had told him that Dr. Lynd said he thought he ought to get something for supporting their contract. Arthur Dinnis testified that Mr. Lennox owed a balance of $365.95 on an account of $1,173.19 for him by them. Lennox had previously testified that he was not a debtor of the firm. The balance was due Nov. 22, 1900, but Mr. Dennis did not think it was judicious to press it as they had so many dealings with Lennox.

PROF. HARPER IS DEAD.

Noted Chicago Educationist Passes Away From Physical Exhaustion.

Chicago, Jan. 11.—Wm. Rainey Harper, LL.D., president of the University of Chicago since its inception in 1891, regarded by many as the foremost Hebrew scholar in America, and equally renowned as educator and business man, died yesterday of cancer of the intestines at his home on the university campus. Although his death was known to be inevitable within a comparatively short time, the end of his life, due to physical exhaustion, came suddenly. He was 49 years old.

Dr. Harper left a statement outlining his wishes for the ceremony of his funeral. A detail which he emphasized, both in writing and in person, was that no regular university exercise should be suspended except during the hours of the funeral services.

The body will remain in charge of the family until Saturday. Then the body will lie in state in Haskell Hall until the funeral on Sunday at 2 o'clock.

Great Hospital Scheme.

New York, Jan. 11.—Details were made known yesterday of plans for a chain of municipal hospitals, which, when fully realized, will, it is declared, give New York the greatest system of free treatment for the sick that the world has seen. An estimate of the total cost is $75,000,000 [illegible] for the development of a central system of hospitals in the five boroughs, the buildings to be of uniform architecture, the service to be organized on a scheme of unity, and all under control of one department of the City Government.

Cassie's Appeal Denied.

Cincinnati, O., Jan. 11.—The motion for the rehearing of the appeal for a new trial on behalf of Mrs. Cassie L. Chadwick of Cleveland was denied in the United States Court of Appeals here yesterday.

$40 AND COSTS FOR ASSAULT.

Hotel Proprietor Who Abused Conductor Heavily Fined.

Toronto, Jan. 11.—Forty dollars and costs or two months in jail is what Magistrate H. R. Frankland calls getting off easy for assaulting a railroad conductor.

That is what he told Capt. W. H. Lumb, manager of the King Edward Hotel at Sudbury, who handed Conductor Story on the northbound train from Toronto to North Bay an overdue ticket on Dec. 7 last. The conductor refused to take it, advising him to pay, and if he didn't like it, to make complaint to the company. Lumb paid, and then became abusive. He fought with the conductor and with everyone who tried to pacify him. He was brought back to Toronto by G. T. R. Detective Hart.

Fighting For Over $1,500,000.

Toronto, Jan. 11.—A fight between the Dominion of Canada and the Province of Ontario is billed to commence in court on Jan. 31. It entails a dispute over a million and a half dollars expended in regard to Indian Treaty No. 3. The trouble is all over the treaty made by the Dominion with the Indians north of the height of land, north of Lake Superior, up to Rat Portage and for some distance eastward. The Dominion filed the claim in 1893 before the arbitrators for the payment of moneys advanced to the Indians, and with interest amounts to something like $1,500,000.

Robbed By Tramps.

St. Thomas, Jan. 11.—Arthur Schonch, in charge of a car of poultry going through on the G.T.R. to New York, was Tuesday night, at the G.T.R. yards, attacked by two tramps, kicked in the body and head, and rendered unconscious. He was robbed of $50 and a gold watch and chain.

One Year In the Central.

Port Hope, Jan. 11.—Thomas Dalton of St. Thomas, a railroad man, was convicted of being concerned with a companion, who is not yet arrested, in the recent burglary at Ben Oliver & Co.'s clothing store. The prisoner pleaded guilty. He was sentenced to one year in Central Prison.

Quebec, Jan. 11.—At a meeting of the City Council the resignation of Hon. S. N. Parent was accepted. A new mayor will be appointed on Friday next to finish Mayor Parent's term of office, which would have expired on March 1 next. Ald. Tanguay will probably be chosen.

Toronto, Jan. 11.—A deal has gone through, according to an announcement made in New York yesterday, by which the four saw factories of the Canada Saw Co., situated at Toronto, Montreal, St. John and Ottawa, will be merged into the Simonds Manufacturing Co. It is understood $250,000 is the price paid for the four Canadian factories. The idea is to operate the four.

Struck With Iron Bar.

Montreal, Jan. 11.—William Reinhardt, cook at the London House, was almost killed yesterday, by his assistant, Jones, an Englishman. There has been bad blood between the two. Early in the morning Jones went to Reinhardt's room and cracked his skull with a bar of iron. He then made his escape. Reinhardt still lives, but is in a serious condition

THE FOREST'S FRIENDS

ceive a forestry-education suited to the needs of our country.

Roosevelt's Greeting.

Gifford Pinchot, chief of the forest service of the United States, brought to the convention a personal message of good-will from President Roosevelt, who added also an expression of his conviction of the good that will result to Canada from the work of this convention.

Hon. James Wilson, United States Secretary of Agriculture, desired also to express his high appreciation of the wisdom that prompted the calling of the Canadian Forestry Convention and his good wishes for the success of its work. Americans and Canadians have both seen enough to realise that the day will come when our extensive forest resources will be exhausted, unless steps are taken to preserve them from extinction. Agriculture is an absolute impossibility in the absence of forests. Moreover the same thing is true of mining and railway building. In the United States forestry was looked upon as a business proposition entirely aside from sentimental feelings, and it was pleasant to learn that by so doing a widespread interest has been developed therein.

Need of Reserves.

Mr. Pinchot outlined the policy that had been adopted in his country of teaching the theoretical value of forestry in schools and of impressing it upon farmers and lumbermen by practical demonstrations and by setting aside forest reserves aggregating 100,000,000 acres. Canada was wise in forming such reserves before the property has passed into the hands of private owners.

Dominion Timber Land.

At the afternoon session a paper was read by E. Stewart, superintendent of forestry, who said the total land area in control of the Dominion Government at 2,656,300 square miles, of which 1,406,200 square miles was of more or less wooded country.

Thomas Southworth, director of forestry for Ontario, was to have spoken on forest reserves, but on account of indisposition his paper was read by Prof. Clarke.

Aubrey White, Deputy Minister of Mines and Lands of Ontario, and Dr. Fernow of Cornell University discussed the papers.

At the night gathering in the Normal School Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. Sydney Fisher delivered addresses, the latter on the necessity of preserving the forests for water power purposes.

C. B. Smith of the Temiskaming Railway read a paper on Water Powers.

BANNERMAN HOWLED DOWN.

John Burns Compels Mr. Chamberlain to Make a Retraction.

London, Jan. 11.—The election fight is daily growing in intensity and the party leaders, with the aid of motor cars, are displaying the greatest energy in addressing many meetings at different places on the same day.

The Premier, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, who spoke at Shrewsbury last night, was howled down by a Chamberlainite minority and was compelled to shorten his speech. Disorderly meetings of this kind are not uncommon.

John Burns, president of the local Government board, made a successful tilt against Joseph Chamberlain, compelling him to publicly retract his statement that a million able-bodied men were being supported in the workhouses of Great Britain. Mr. Burns produced statistics which proved that the workhouses were at present supporting only 214,804 persons, the majority of whom were either sick or disabled.

Prominence is given by The Daily Chronicle this morning to a long letter from Hon. Joe Martin attacking Mr. Chamberlain and his policy.

Recovery of Stolen Furs.

Toronto Jan. 11.—The police have recovered about $4,000 of the furs stolen from Lugsdin & Lugsdin and the goods of Moneypenny Bros. & Co. $2,000 worth of the furs were brought into the Police Court yesterday morning from Hensall, and it was stated that John Lurie, a second-hand dealer of Chatsworth, Ont., had been placed under arrest and would appear in the Police Court here this morning to answer a charge of receiving the stolen property.

Slaves to Rheumatism

Freed by "Fruit-a-tives"

"Fruit-a-tives" cure Rheumatism and Rheumatic pains by removing the poisons which cause the disease. Rheumatism means poisoned blood. Too much urea or tissue waste is retained in the blood, owing to defective action of the bowels, kidneys or skin. The retained urea becomes uric acid, which inflames nerves and joints and thus rheumatism is produced.

Mrs. R. H. Dennis, Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., writes as follows: "I think 'Fruit-a-tives' are fine. I am using them for rheumatism, and have not felt it since I started to take them."

Fruit-a-tives
or Fruit Liver Tablets.

"Fruit-a-tives" cure Rheumatism by greatly stimulating the action of the liver, kidneys and skin. "Fruit-a-tives" make each of these vital organs do its share of nature's work properly. "Fruit-a-tives" rid the system of excessive urea and uric acid—and so purify and enrich the blood and build up the general health, that there can be no rheumatism.

"Fruit-a-tives" are fruit juices, concentrated and combined by our discovered process, which makes them much more powerful medicinally. Then tonics and internal antiseptics are added and the whole compressed into tablets.

If your druggist does not have them, don't take substitutes. Sent prepaid on receipt of price—50c. a box or 6 boxes for $2.50.

Problems Of Our Forests.

Second Day's Discussion at Ottawa Forestry Convention.

Actual Value of Forestry to the Farmers of Ontario—Experimental Farm Forestry and the Work it Has Done in the West—133 Bank Managers Join the Forestry Association—Same Problem in States.

Ottawa, Jan. 12.—The Canadian Forestry Convention was favored yesterday with the presence of His Excellency Earl Grey, together with the Countess Grey. Sir Wilfrid again presided. A telegram was read from Lieut.-Governor Sir Henri Joly de Lotbiniere, of British Columbia, expressing sympathy with the object of the meeting. A message was also read from Byron Walker, stating that the 133 managers of the Canadian Bank of Commerce had been made members of the Canadian Forestry Association.

Experimental Farm Forestry.

The first paper read was, "Forestry on the Experimental Farm," by Dr. Saunders, the Director of Experimental Farms. It was stated that the total number of trees distributed among the settlers in the Canadian Northwest since 1889 was about two millions and the quantity of tree seeds about ten and one-half tons. As each pound of this tree seed with reasonable care might be expected to produce five hundred to eight hundred seedlings it was not surprising that the results of this work were everywhere apparent. As to tree planting at the experimental farms the fact was noted that while the pine planted in 1889 was now 25 feet high and measured 9 1-2 inches in diameter of trunk 4 1-2 feet from the ground, a white spruce planted in 1890 was now 32 feet high and measured 6 3-4 inches in diameter of trunk 4 1-2 feet from the ground. The results of tree-planting in British Columbia were given, showing that some hardwood trees of the east could there be raised and with more rapid growth than was the case here.

Rev. A. E. Burke, Alberton, P. E. I., read a paper on "Farm Forestry for the Eastern Provinces."

Work in the West.

Mr. Norman M. Ross, Assistant Superintendent of Forestry, gave a minute description of the methods of forestation followed in the West. He explained the relations between the settlers and the Government nurseries. Trees and cuttings were sent out as follows: 1901, 52,000; 1902, 468,000; 1903, 920,000; 1904, 1,800,000; 1905, 2,000,000; ready for next spring, 2,100,000; totals, 7,347,700.

This would plant 2,700 acres, and is in plantations from one half to fifteen acres. Planting on the western forest reserves is contemplated.

Prof. Zavitz, lecturer on Forestry in the Ontario Agricultural College, discussed "The Agricultural Forest Problem." He described the reasons for the practice of forestry in an agricultural country like Ontario as depending on (1) aesthetic effects; (2) protective influences; (3) financial investment. Upon the first he spoke briefly, remarking that a treeless waste would be a poor country in which to live. Upon the second he spoke at some length, noting the benefits to field crops by keeping the snow mantle on them longer in spring, the regulation of the flow of streams, the protection of orchards from winds, and the prevention of excessive dryness by arresting the sweep of winds.

The Financial Aspect.

Mr. Zavitz's financial argument was that a farmer's wood lot should yield nearly one cord per acre per annum. If this increment were two-thirds of a cord, and the price were $6 a cord, the return would be $4 a acre. The average rental of farm lands in Ontario is $2.49 a year. Some Saxon forests have produced from $10 to $15 an acre a year, and the prices of wood in Ontario are often higher than in Germany. Upon this point of view Mr. Zavitz based a close examination of Ontario conditions, advocating a rational adaptation of products to soil and conditions.

Same Problem in the States.

A discussion followed, in which Mr. A. C. LaRiviere, ex-M. P., representing the Manitoba Government; Mr. J. D. Allan, president of the Toronto Board of Trade; Hon. Mr. Tessier, Minister of Agriculture for Quebec; Mr. A. P. Stevenson, inspector of Tree Planting in Manitoba; Dr. Shenck of Baltimore, N. C., and Mr. Gifford Pinchot, head of the forestry service of the United States, took part. The last named gentleman said he had been struck with the admirable progress made in tree planting in the Canadian west, and for this Mr. Stewart and his assistants deserved great credit. The United States was dealing with a similar problem, and he hoped to see both countries planting or seeding a million acres every year.

At the afternoon session, Senator Edwards delivered an address in which he took strong ground in favor of preserving the forests. He said the lumbermen are the friends, not the enemies of the forest. The enemy is the bush farmer and the settler, who to produce a few dollars worth of potatoes destroys hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of pine.

J. B. Miller, president of the Ontario Lumbermen's Association also laid the blame for destruction of the forest on others than the lumbermen.

F. C. Whitman read a paper on the forests of Nova Scotia, showing that the climatic conditions are conducive to rapid growth of trees.

Wm. Little, of Westmount, read a paper on the lumber industry and the forest. He urged the appointment of a commission to investigate the lumber resources.

A paper of interest was that read by H. M. Price, president of the Pulpwood Association of the Province of Quebec, on the pulpwood industry. He condemned a proposed tax on pulpwood

The banquet at the Russell House last evening, in connection with the forestry convention, was presided over by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and at the head table were Earl Grey, R. L. Borden, United States Consul-General Foster, Japanese Consul Nossi, Hon. Sydney Fisher, Hon. Mr. Oliver and others. Earl Grey congratulated Sir Wilfrid on the success of the convention, which he trusted would meet the anticipations he had in calling it.

In proposing the health of "Our Guests," Gifford Pinchot, Dr. Schenck and Dr. Ferrow, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, referred to the cordial relations between Canada and the United States, and said he did not despair of seing Canada, the States and Great Britain again united as a race, at the head of civilization.

Mr. Pinchot, chief of the United States forest service, in reply, endorsed the views of Sir Wilfrid, and said the time is inevitably coming when the three countries would set the standard for righteousness, civilization and peace for all the world.

Dr. Fellow said education was the best means to preserve the forest, and he favored such education as would make the French wood-chopper know why he cut timber differently.

R.L. Borden said the question of forestry was one on which there should be no political division. The opposition would be only too glad to support any reasonable measure brought in by the Government.

The British Elections.

When an administration in Great Britain decides upon a dissolution of Parliament the elections follow in short order. The Parliament of the United Kingdom was dissolved on Monday, Jan. 8, and writs were ordered for a general election. On Saturday Jan. 13, polling will commence. It is announced in the despatches that the first polling will take place at Greenwich, but probably some other London boroughs may vote the same day, as there seems to be no reason why other writs would not be received by post as early as the one sent to Greenwich. If the writ is received before a certain hour, the notice is sent out the same day. Otherwise it goes out the next morning. When the notice is issued on Monday, nomination may be as early as Thursday, and election may take place on Friday. It appears that Saturday is to be the first polling day, and by Wednesday of next week the voting will be over in all the ordinary boroughs throughout the kingdom. "County and district" elections require a longer period for preliminaries, and will not begin until next Tuesday, the first nominations having taken place on Friday. Polling in the counties and districts, with the exception of two or three ridings in the Scottish islands, will be over the week after next, but the general result will be known next week.

Two or three weeks ago lists of candidates were printed showing that the selections had then been practically all made. This has been a task of some difficulty, especially on the Conservative side. A number of Liberal Unionists members and several Conservatives had gone into open opposition to the Balfour Government. Others were supporters of Mr. Balfour but opponents of Mr. Chamberlain. In some cases these Free Fooders or other revolters have withdrawn for the time from public life. Some of them are contesting their constituencies without Conservative opposition, and are opposed by Liberals. A few are running a three-cornered fight with Liberal and Conservative opposition. Very few if any have been endorsed by the present Government party. A typical case is that of Greenwich, where the despatches tell us the first poll is to be held. This riding has been represented by Lord Hugh Cecil, son of the late Lord Salisbury. This strong-minded Commoner is a pronounced free trader and has made trouble for the Ministry of which his cousin was the leader and his elder brother a member. While a portion of the local Conservative Association stood by the member who carried the constituency in 1900 by 1,970 majority, a large element broke away to nominate a tariff reformer, Mr. Hamilton Benn. This makes possible the election of Mr. Jackson, a straight Liberal. In Marylebone, another London borough, Lord Hugh's brother, Lord Robert Cecil, is the regular Conservative candidate. He is said to be opposed to Mr. Chamberlain's programme, but not averse to a little retaliation, and as he expresses his views with moderation, he is deemed acceptable. The Liberals have their worst troubles in the intervention of Labor and Radical candidates in ridings heretofore conceded to their party.

Of the 670 members to be elected this month, 284 represent boroughs, of which 226 are in England. There are 377 county members and 9 sit for universities. England now elects 465 members, Wales 30, Scotland 72, and Ireland 103. The House which has just been dissolved was elected in the autumn of 1900.

How is this? The consumers of gas in Halifax have to pay $2 per 1000 net, while consumers in Toronto are charged only 80 cents per 1000 net. This is a puzzle, Halifax being but a few miles from the coal-pits, while Toronto is hundreds of miles from the supply. As the Toronto Gas Company is not losing money by selling gas at the lower rate, the Halifax company must be a gold mine.

It means that the grafters in its employ may, if they have a political pull, steal in safety, and that the honest men, and they are in the great majority, must close their eyes and allow the thieving to go on, under penalty of dismissal.

No women need apply. The Supreme Court of New Brunswick has decided that Miss Mabel French is not a "person" in the eyes of the law when she wants to practice as a lawyer. In this matter the New Brunswick lawyers are more conservative than those of Ontario, who some time ago admitted Miss Martin to their ranks without bringing the heavens down about their ears.

Let Ontario follow the example. A step of interest to advanced agriculturist has been taken in the Bedford district, in the province of Quebec, by the organization of a milk testing association. The purpose is by close observation and test to ascertain the actual value of the milk product of cows, and by comparison of results between different animals of different breeds definitely decide where the greatest profit is to be found. This is a kind of scientific agriculture that pays, both those who carry it on and those who only learn of the results.

A WORD TO BOYS.

(Kansas City Journal.)

If a boy will take his father's advice till he is 20, he will seek it after that, says Frank Jarrell. The trouble with so many boys is that they know it all at 16, and insist upon doing as they please. Of course, there are fathers so worthless that their advice is no good, but generally a father's heart is in the right place when the welfare of his boy is concerned, and the boy should so understand it.

Port Hope has a chief of police who surely trots in the Sherlock Holmes class. There was a robbery in that town the other night, and the burglar, when he left the scene of the crime, left his vest behind, in which was his card, giving his name and address. The Mayor of Denver is credited with the following proclamation, containing advice to the Denver people in respect of their obligations as citizens:

If your store front, residence, or fence is dull or dingy, order it painted.

If your awning is old, torn or faded, get a new one.

If your sidewalk, fence, or gate needs repairing, fix it.

If your advertising sign is old and faded, take it down and paint it.

Destroy the young weeds that are starting on your property, and on your neighbor's property.

Resolve never to throw paper in the streets.

Take all dandelions out of your lawn—they spoil the beauty of it.

Burn all the rubbish possible; allow no one in your house to throw it on the streets, alleys, or vacant lots.

Promise not to spit on the sidewalks.

Organize a block improvement society, and permit no weeds to grow on sidewalk, area or vacant property in your block.

Ask your milkmen, grocerymen and expressmen to have their wagons painted.

Irrespective of the size of your house make your lawn the finest on the street.

Illuminate the front of your store in the business section.

Every effort put forth or dollar spent to improve our city's appearance will be returned twofold.

Belleville men might paste this in their hats for use when the spring-time comes.

The Municipal Act under which Montreal is governed, disqualifies all citizens who have not paid their water rates from voting for mayor or alderman. The result is that one-third of Montreal's voters cannot exercise the franchise this year because they haven't paid their water rates. Query? Is this not a good provision in the law?

TELLS BY THEIR SLEEP

"I can tell by my little ones' sleep when a cold is coming on" said a mother when speaking of the advance symptoms of colds in children. "They toss about, are restless, their breathing is heavy and there are symptoms of night sweats. The next morning I start with Scott's Emulsion. The chances are that in a day or two they are all over it. Their rest is again peaceful and the breathing normal."

Here's a suggestion for all mothers. Scott's Emulsion always has been almost magical in its action when used as the ounce of prevention. Nothing seems to overcome child weakness quite so effectively and quickly as Scott's Emulsion.

ROBBING THE POOR

ORGANIZED SCHEME OF FRAUD RAMPANT IN NEW YORK.

New York, Jan. 11.—Charges that the poor of New York receive as low as 10 1-2 ounces for a pound from dishonest dealers, and that a great, well-organized and systematic scheme of robbery by the use of fraudulent scales and weights is rampant everywhere that the very poor buy the bare necessities of life in small quantities, were made to-day by the Chief of the Bureau of Weights and Measures, Patrick Derry, in his annual report. It is stated that these frauds have spread among butchers, grocers, fish peddlers, poultry dealers, coal dealers and produce merchants. The charges are based upon the examination during the past year of over 50,000 scales, and more than 1[illegible],000 weights.

"The people, attracted by the seemingly low prices charged by the robbers, give them their custom to such an extent that more honest dealers felt almost a diluted kind of justification for imitating the dishonest dealers," says the report.

STOMACH CURE.

An Easy Way from Standpoint of Convenience.

The so-called cures for indigestion are almost as numerous as the victims themselves, and scarcely a day passes without the hopes of thousands of sufferers being raised by the discovery of some novel method of cure for this prevalent disease.

Until a combination of unusual remedies, heretofore but little known in this country, was made in Mi-o-na tablets, no certain cure for indigestion had been found, and it is therefore hardly to be wondered at that our leading druggists who have the Belleville agency are selling large quantities of Mi-o-na.

Mi-o-na is a guaranteed cure for all diseases of the stomach excepting cancer. If you have pains or distress after eating, headache, belching of gases, sour taste in the mouth, dizziness, heartburn, specks before the eyes, furred tongue, sleeplessness, backache, debility or weakness it shows that the stomach needs to be strengthened with Mi-o-na.

Just one little tablet out of 50-cent box before meals for a few days and you will soon regain perfect health and strength.

If you cannot obtain Mi-o-na of your druggist, it will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. Write us for advice on your case from a leading stomach specialist which will be sent free. The R. T. Booth Company, Ithaca, N. Y.

A western merchant named Bill Jones recently went to Kansas City to buy some goods and had them shipped home at once. The boxes arrived at his store before he did, and one of the neighbors heard his wife utter an awful yell when she looked over one. She was rushing around looking for a hammer when the neighbor reached her, and said her husband was dead and had been shipped home by freight. One of the boxes bore the legend, "Bill inside."

Many birds have done duty for quail on the broiler. In San Francisco the other day the game commissioners found a sack of owls on the counters of a commission house. The buyer of a French restaurant was negotiating for their purchase. If the trade had not been interrupted they would have been transferred into "broiled quail" under the hands of an expert chef. One man in Fresno has made a livelihood for several years by shipping owls to tickle the palates of the San Francisco epicures. The ground squirrel, too, is "quail." Many sacks of these are received in San Francisco daily.

Canadian Failures.

Dun's Review: Insolvencies in the Dominion of Canada during the year 1905 were 1,347 in number, with assets of $6,822,005 and liabilities of $9,854,659. This is a straight increase in number, as compared with the 1,246 in 1904, but the amount involved was much larger in the previous year, assets aggregating $8,555,875 and liabilities $11,394,117. Manufacturing returns show a striking improvement, 289 failures for $3,129,262 comparing with 307 defaults and $4,136,908 liabilities in 1904. The increase in number occurred in the trading class, where 1,039 suspensions compared with 914 in the previous year, but liabilities were almost identical, $6,552,821 against $6,577,788. Other commercial defaults, not properly included in the two principal divisions, were 19 in number and $172,576 in amount, against 25 failures for $679,421 in 1904. The only notable increase in liabilities occurred in the banking division, where five banks suspended, owing $709,268, against only two in the preceding year with liabilities of $30,749. The difference was provided by two heavy failures in Ontario and Nova Scotia. The most striking change in commercial failures appeared in the Province of Ontario, where total liabilities of $2,417,549 fell far below the $3,839,695 in 1904. Canadian losses in 1905 were smaller than in any year for over a decade, with the exception of 1903 and 1898.

TO AMEND GAME LAWS

VIEWS OF MANY SPORTSMEN HEARD BY THE COMMISSION.

Ottawa, Jan. 11.—The Ontario Fish and Game Commission to-day heard the views of Ottawa Valley sportsmen upon the fish and game laws of the Province, Hon. Dr. Reaume and Hon. Jean Prevost being also present. A great variety of suggestions were made, including the abolition of the close season for partridges; better enforcement of the game laws, etc. Dr. Reaume announced himself in favor of a conference of Ministers and officials of all the Provinces to arrange for reciprocity in hunting privileges, and Mr. Prevost stated that the bounty on wolves would be increased at the next session of the Quebec Legislature. Mr. Loveday, Local Deputy Game Warden, told of the seizure of thousands of partridges as well as prohibited skins taken in Ontario and Quebec.

The following memorandum was submitted by Messrs. A. Kelly Evans and Oliver Adams, representing the Ontario Fish and Game Protective Association.

"The Association is composed of a headquarters branch at Toronto, together with branches throughout the Province. The constitution provides for a convention meeting to be held when the Exhibition is in progress at Toronto in September, and to be composed of delegates from each branch. We confidently expect by June next to have at least twenty-five branches in various parts of the Province, from Sudbury and Sturgeon Falls in the north to Windsor in the south. Some time about June the bureau in Toronto will take upon itself the responsibility of sending to the branches a list of subjects on which considerable divergence of opinion exists, subjects such as are now before you, with the request that each branch will hold meetings to discuss the same. The result will be that the delegates will come to the convention meeting duly instructed on the views of the branches they severally represent. At this meeting all questions raised by the delegates will be thoroughly and sympathetically considered, and a report will be drawn up setting forth in detail all matters decided upon.

"Recommendations, too, we hope, will be submitted as to the game laws as these now exist, and also as to the methods by which they are now enforced. This report will be submitted to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the Minister of Public Works. The association trusts that this report will be received in the same spirit in which it will be tendered. It will be tendered wholly and solely in the interests of the better protection of fish and game."

Important Legal Decision

A case of much importance to the mercantile community was decided by Judge Chisholm in Galt on the 10th inst. Seeley & Smith, Montreal, shoes, sued on an accepted draft of Mark Mundy, ex-mayor, retail shoe dealer. The defence was that the draft was accepted before the goods were examined at the request of the consignors, who promised to make right any errors. The merchant kept only part of the goods, sending back the balance as not up to sample, and refusing to pay therefor.

The judge held the acceptance of the draft might, purely on legal grounds, compel defendant to pay for all the goods, but the court was one of equity, and therefore the pledge of the plaintiffs to correct errors was sufficient to debar them from recovering the balance, $66. The judge also held that under law the defendants should not have returned the goods, but simply refused to accept and notify the plaintiffs to that effect. They hold goods at their own risk.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Mirrors in Churches.

"I won't name the church," said the architect's young man. "It is one that stood in need of repairs a short while ago. My boss got the job of putting it in order. I attended to most of the preliminary details, and I give you my word that in the list of improvements recommended by the committee was a lot of small mirrors to be put into the backs of all the seats so the ladies could see how their hats looked when they knelt down to pray.

"Before the work was really commenced the rest of the congregation got wind of the contemplated innovation and raised no end of a row. The question 'Looking glasses or no looking glasses' were voted on by the whole church. The conservative "noes" won out by a small majority.

"But it is a question that will bob up again with the building of other churches. Most of the women of the congregations are demanding looking glasses in the churches, either in the pews or set as panels in the walls, and the time will soon come when they will be considered a necessary feature of ecclesiastical architecture." —New York Press.

NATIONAL HYMNS

ONE MELODY SERVED FIVE PEOPLES AT ONE TIME.

The report that Switzerland has decided to change her national anthem owing to the identity of its melody with that of the national anthems of Prussia and of Great Britain, writes the Paris correspondent of the London Globe, reminds me that, although the words of the French national anthem, "La Marseillaise," are by Rouget de l'Isle, very few people are aware that the melody is German and that, as shown by the late Castil Blaze, the most eminent critic of the nineteenth century, the air was borrowed by Rouget de l'Isle from a collection of German religious melodies. The Austrian national hymn was composed toward the latter end of the eighteenth century by Francis Joseph Haydn, though whether on his own initiative or by imperial order is not quite certain. These national anthems, contrary to general belief, are a relatively modern institution, for until the eighteenth century no country possessed a national anthem of any kind. One of the first nations to adopt a national anthem was Great Britain, and considerable pains were taken to emphasize the fact that it was King George I. and not the Jacobite pretender who was meant. A preposterous attempt has been made to prove that the melody of "God Save the King" was a composition of Lord Halifax's illegitimate son, Henry Carey, but the air is a very much older one, of a religious order, and was adopted almost immediately afterward by Prussia and by Russia, Switzerland and America following suit.

At the end of the eighteenth century there were at least five countries—Great Britain, Prussia, the United States, Russia and Switzerland—using identically the same melody for their national anthem. Emperor Nicholas I. at the time of the Crimean war decided to cast aside a national anthem borrowed and imported from the enemy and to substitute for it a genuine national anthem of native composition. The present national anthem of Russia is probably the only one that was ever adopted as a result of an open competition—like the legendary tournaments of the bards of the court of Thuringia, of the master singers of Nuremberg and of the violin makers of Cremona. The musical committee of selection rejected all the anthems sent in but two, the respective merits of which were left for the Emperor to determine. One was by Glinka, the renowned composer of "Life for the Czar." The other was by Lyoff. Glinka's hymn was thoroughly Russian in character and in the form of a march. Lyoff's was more solemn, but less original. He knew, however, that a high military style of instrumentation would appeal to the Imperial ear, and his drums and trumpets decided Nicholas against all claims to recognition on the part of the more artistic Glinka. Nicholas, however, cannot be said to have made a bad choice. Both works were good, and if he preferred the more demonstrative of the two it was probably because he knew so well the tastes of his people.

Voyage of the Drydock Dewey.

(New York Tribune.)

One of the strangest objects ever seen upon waters since the days of Noah's Ark, the mammoth steel floating drydock Dewey, started the other day from the Patuxent River on its long journey of 14,000 miles to Manila. When its strange bulk rises, sharply defined, on the horizon before the eyes of travelers who may not have heard of it, it may readily seem to the more imaginative of them that this great kraken of mythology has become a fact, its appearance being so unlike anything which even the oldest sea captain has seen upon the deep. Reduced to plain facts and figures, the Dewey is a gigantic red box of steel 500 feet long, 134 feet wide with a height above the sea of 42 feet. In its construction 11,000 tons of steel, 2,000,000 rivets and 150 tons of paint were used. It is not only large enough to deck the biggest warships in the American navy, but big enough to hold high and dry above the water the largest yet planned, having a capacity of 20,000 tons. By day its sheer steel walls when seen at a distance and through glasses will be an imposing sight, but at night when aglow with electric lights and its outlines less sharply defined it will allow more play to the imagination, and it will then harmonize with the spirit of wonder and mystery its appearance naturally will excite in the beholder unacquainted with its character and mission.

The reasons for sending this strange craft on the long voyage around the globe are few and simple. At present our ships in the Orient in time of peace can be drydocked at Hong Kong or at Shanghai but in case of war between America and another Power these ports would neutrally be closed to American vessels, and it is to provide against such a contingency that the largest floating dock in the world has been constructed by the government at a cost of $1,250,000. In addition to the advantages of constructing such a dock it will be adapted to all possible contingencies, and upon its safe arrival at the Philippines the American navy will be freed from the advantage at which it is now placed in the Orient. Though of such great size, it will be possible for it to pass through the Suez Canal, instead of having to be sent around the Cape of Good Hope, thereby saving three thousand miles of sea voyage and a month's additional time.

LOST HIS TONGUE, TALKS AND SINGS.

REMARKABLE TRIUMPH OF SURGERY REPORTED FROM CHICAGO.

Chicago, Jan. 11.—Frederick Power, actor and stage manager, who had his tongue cut from his mouth in an operation for cancer five week ago, is again able to talk so as to be understood.

The case is said by physicians to be a remarkably triumph of surgery. All of Mr. Powers' tongue and part of the root had to be removed in the operation. With his tongue gone he is able to articulate, uttering some words quite distinctly.

For several days Mr. Power has been attempting to sing, and the hospital attendants say that while the efforts were not entirely successful, they have encouraged the patient, and made him quite hopeful.

There is still some paralysis in Mr. Powers' lower lip, due to the operation, and there is a heavy gold bridge in his mouth. His jaw is still held in a heavy plaster cast, and when these impediments are removed it is believed he will be able to articulate fairly well.

In Chorus Cried, Give Us Newbro's Herpicide.

This word of late has been in everyone's mouth, and many are wondering what the word signifies, though no one has yet been found, who will deny that NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE does the work. Well, for the information of thousands of people who like to know all about a good thing, we would say that HERPICIDE means, a destroyer or killer of "Herpes." Now "Herpes" is the family name of a disease caused by various vegetable parasites. A similar microbe causes dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair; this is the microbe that NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE promptly destroys; after which the hair grows.

HEART OF LOUIS XIV.

How It Came to Be Buried In Westminster Abbey.

A remarkable story regarding the heart of Louis XIV. and how it came to be buried in Westminster abbey was told in London Truth by Henry Labouchere, who said the story was told to him by the late Colonel Harcourt and was confirmed by his brother, the late Sir William Harcourt. A Harcourt who lived during the first French revolution had many connections in France and invited many of the emigres to visit him. Among them was the canon of St. Denis. On leaving the canon expressed his thanks for the kindly hospitality of his host and produced from his pocket something that looked like a piece of dried leather an inch or so long, which he presented to him. "I was," he said, "in the cathedral when the royal tombs were broken open and the contents scattered to the winds. This heart is that of Louis XIV. It was kept in a separate receptacle, and I managed to get away with it." The heart thus came into the possession of the Harcourt family and was occasionally produced for the inspection of visitors as a curiosity. The late Dr. Buckland, dean of Westminster, was on a visit when it was brought out for his inspection. He was then very old and had some reputation as a man of science, and the scientific spirit moved him to wet his finger and rub it on the heart. He put the finger to his mouth after that, and before he could be stopped he put the heart into his mouth and swallowed it, whether by accident or design will never be known. Very shortly afterward he died and was buried in Westminster abbey. It is impossible he could ever have digested the thing. Consequently the heart of Louis XIV. must now be reposing in Westminster abbey inclosed in the body of an English dean.

SHE HAD HER SAY.

A Girl's Revolt Against an Award of Valedictory Honors.

"I think the greatest shock I ever experienced and the biggest revolt against my discipline occurred when I was teaching in a country high school," said the schoolteacher. "It was in a school where the valedictory honor was awarded by popular vote of the school, a most unjust method, by the way, but one to which I was forced to succumb. The girl who received the most votes was by no means the best scholar, and the pupil who ranked highest in scholarship was plainly indignant.

"Every boy and girl in the class was obliged to write and read a graduation essay, and it was my task to look these essays over and aid in the rewriting of them. The pupil who ranked the highest in the class handed in her essay to me with some defiance, and in it I found some reference to the valedictory honor being rightly hers. I cut it out and told her plainly that nothing of that sort should go into her paper. She agreed to leave it out.

"The graduation exercises were passing off splendidly when it came her turn to read her essay. She had a facile way of writing, and I was proud of her, but when she reached what I knew was the conclusion she stepped forward a little and proceeded to deliver two pages of regulation valedictory. She bade farewell to the class, the school and the teachers, and of course we could not stop her. It took all the sails out of the chosen valedictorian, who followed, and after the exercises there was much wailing and hot words. We couldn't do a thing, as the sinner was now a graduate of the school, and we had no right to punish her, but it took me all summer to get over the effect of such a stunning performance."

Progressive Matrimony.

"You can always tell a young husband from an old one by the way he acts when he goes after a bucket of water," says Uncle Hiram. "Three months married, he swings the pump handle, whistles and casts covert glances at the house as though some one were looking at him from the window. One year married, he swings the pump handle more slowly, smiles occasionally and seems to be annoyed because the meal is late. Two years married, he looks sour and glum, kicks the cat over the coal house and looks at the house as if he would like to choke somebody. Three years married, he sits on the doorstep and smokes while his wife works the pump handle."—Kansas City Journal.

The Great Chain.

The "great chain," the links of which were two and one-half inches square and one foot long, each link weighing 140 pounds, was stretched across the Hudson river at West Point, just below Fort Clinton, May 1, 1778, to prevent the British warships from ascending the river. The total weight of the chain was 180 tons, and its length was 450 yards. Parts of it are still preserved at West Point.

Real Detectives at Work.

"That was a terrible crime committed yesterday."

"It was so. Have the police made any progress toward apprehending the guilty parties?"

"Oh, yes. They've persuaded the newspapers to take the matter up."

Three gas companies in London consume between them 4,000,000 tons of coal per annum.

TO-DAY.

(Anonymous.)

What shall do so much in years to come,
But what have we done to-day?
We shall give our gold in a princely sum,
But what did we give to-day?
We shall lift the heart and dry the tear,
We shall plant a hope in the place of fear,
We shall speak the words of love and cheer;
But what did we speak to-day?

We shall be so kind in the after-a-while,
But what have we been to-day?
We shall bring to each lonely life a smile,
But what have we brought to-day?
We shall give to truth a grander birth,
And to steadfast faith a deeper worth,
We shall feed the hungering souls of earth;
But whom have we fed to-day?

We shall reap such joys in the by-and-by,
But what have we sown to-day?
We shall build us mansions in the sky,
But what have we built to-day?
'Tis sweet in idle dreams to bask,
But here and now do we do our task,
Yes, this is the thing our souls must ask.;
What have we done to-day?

It is wonderful what a lot of advertising is wasted. The woods are full of schemers who sell padded circulation at four times its value, offer an endless variety of cards, stamps, tickets, pretty pictures and what not as advertising. It is probably worth something at some price, but what that price is no one can tell with any degree of certainty. Before investing a dollar in any 'scheme' the advertiser should consider carefully these points: 1. How many people are likely to read the advertisement? 2. Where do they live? 3. Are they purchasers of the goods I desire to advertise? 4. Are they liable to want the goods now? 5. What circulation will the advertisement have and where? When our local advertisers have answered all these questions they will find that the best medium for their advertising is a reliable local paper like The Intelligencer.

Doctors as Empire Builders.

The East India company in their attempts to make headway in India were signally indebted in various stages of their progress to humble practitioners in medicine. It was in consequence of a cure effected on the favorite daughter of one of the Mogul emperors that they had first been allowed a footing in Bengal.

Later still, in the year 1715, a medical man named Hamilton, as a reward for curing the reigning emperor of an illness, obtained for the company a grant of three villages near Madras, a permission to purchase thirty-seven townships in Bengal and the privilege of introducing and conveying their merchandise from Calcutta through Bengal without duty or search.

The footing thus gained and the accompanying patronage and encouragement enabled the East India company to make such progress as to cut out all foreign rivals. So England, through the company, gradually obtained full sway over India.—London Mail.

Modern Greek Fire.

"Marine torches" are the direct descendants of the Greek fire of the ancients, though the modern torch is used for defense rather than offense and prevents the surprise of a fleet through the silent approach of an enemy.

It consists of an aluminium cylinder used as a projectile. On being fired from a gun it produces no result until it falls into the sea. In its interior it contains stores of calcium phosphide and calcium carbide. The former produces phosphureted hydrogen on contact with water, which ignites spontaneously and also ignites the acetylene gas liberated from the carbide through the action of the water. Enough of the chemicals is contained to last for ten hours, and a few of these torches thrown to the points of the compass from which attack might be expected would leave the defenders in obscurity, while not permitting the enemy to approach.

The Great Amazon River.

In South as in North America nature does her work on the grand scale, and one of her noblest achievements is the Amazon river. Rising in the Andes, it flows across the continent and discharges into the Atlantic ocean at the equator. The vastness of the area which it drains, amounting to 2,368,000 square miles, will be evident when it is borne in mind that this is more than the area of Russia in Europe and Austria-Hungary. It has a length of nearly 4,000 miles, is navigable for 2,200 miles from the sea and is fed by numerous streams, which in any other country would be ranked as great rivers. In the wet season, which lasts for about eight months, its width varies from five miles to 400. No wonder the Amazon has been called a gigantic reservoir rather than a river.

Strange Taste In Eating.

Many strange dishes were eaten by Dean Buckland, the English clergyman and geologist. At his dinner parties, which were attended by leaders of science and literature, the menus were often of a most eccentric character. On one occasion pickled horse tongue was greatly relished by the guests until they were told what they had eaten. Alligator was served up as a rare delicacy and puppies occasionally and mice frequently. At other times hedgehogs, tortoises, potted ostrich and sometimes rats, frogs and snails were prepared for the delectation of favored guests. Henry Labouchere said that the dean swallowed the mummified remains of the heart of Louis XIV. of France.

The First Lesson of an Arab Boy.

The very first lesson which an Arab baby learns when he begins to talk is to keep facts to himself. It does not sound very friendly put in that way, but it saves a deal of trouble. Foreigners do not understand Arabs. They ask them pointed questions and receive peculiar answers. They construe the answers to please themselves and come away to tell the world that the Arabs are a nation of liars. They are not a nation of liars. Perhaps if they should tell the foreigners to mind their own affairs and let them and theirs alone the foreigners would understand them better.—Exchange.

Ox Bones.

Ox bones have a considerable value. The four feet of an ordinary ox will make a pint of neat's foot oil. The thigh bone is the most valuable, being useful for cutting into toothbrush handles. The fore leg bones are made into collar buttons and parasol handles. The water in which the bones are boiled is reduced to glue, while the dust which comes from sawing the bones is turned into food for cattle and poultry.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Cables Unchanged—Hogs Weak, Cattle Steady at Chicago.

London, Jan. 11.—Cattle are quoted at 10c to 11½c per lb.; refrigerator, 8½c.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Receipts of live stock since Tuesday, as reported by the railways, were 87 cars, composed of 1033 cattle, 2876 hogs, 1012 sheep and 36 calves.

Outside of a few lots the quality of fat cattle was not good, two-thirds being not more than half finished. One drover said he knew his cattle were not more than half fat, but said the farmers were anxious to sell them, as grain was too dear to feed, and as he got them at a price that he could make a little money, he bought them.

Exporters.

None were offered as such. The nearest approach to what might be called shippers was a load of steers 1200 lbs. each that sold at $4.45 per cwt. Export bulls sold at $3.50 to $3.75 and extra choice might bring $4 per cwt.

Butchers.

There was a fair trade for butchers', considering the quality of those offered. Choice picked lots, and they were few in number, sol dat $4.25 to $4.40 per cwt. We only heard of one lot at the latter price; fair to good at $3.70 to $4; medium, $3.50 to $3.60; good cows, $3.25 to $3.60; medium cows, $2.70 to $3; common cows, $2.25 to $2.60; canners, $1.50 to $2 per cwt.

Feeders and Stockers.

Trade in stockers and feeders was limited. Harry Murby, who bought about 90, reports prices as being steady at following quotations: short-keep feeders, 1100 to 1200 lbs. each, at $3.90 to $4.15; feeders, 900 to 1050 lbs., at $3.40 to $3.80; best yearling steers, 600 to 850 lbs., at $3 to $3.55; common stockers, of which there were few sold, at $2.75 per cwt. Mr. Murby only got about 40 stockers, for which he paid $3.20 to $3.40.

Milch Cows.

About 30 milch cows sold at $30 to $58 each. Had it not been that an outside dealer came upon the scene, cows would have sold at lower prices. The bulk went between $35 and $45 each.

Veal Calves.

Prices for veal calves are still firm at about $3.50 to $7 per cwt., the bulk selling at $5 to $6.25 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Prices for sheep and lambs were firmer as follows: export ewes at $4.25 to $4.50; bucks, $3.50 to $3.75; grain-fed ewes and wethers at $6.25 to $6.60 and one extra choice lot was sold by Drover Strangway to Wesley Dunn, who topped the market at $6.70 per cwt.; mixed lots of lambs sold at $5.50 to $6 per cwt.

Hogs.

Mr. Harris quoted hog prices 15c per cwt. higher as follows: selects, $6.50; lights and fats, $6.25; sows, $4 to $5 per cwt.; stags, $2.50 to $3.50 per cwt.

The Test of His Courage

By FRANK H. SWEET

Copyright, 1906, by E. S. McClure

The general looked pleased.

"I think you are the man I want," he said, "and that you can do more service for the cause than by merely joining the army, as you propose. You say you cannot ride a horse, and have never fired a gun nor seen a drill, but that you can swim all day and go a hundred yards under water if necessary. Do you know any other man who can do the same?"

"Pete Sweeney, who fishes with me, can swim 'bout as well. He's across the street in a market now, sellin' some fish we brought up."

"Would he like to enter the service too?"

"I reckon he would. Pete's always said he'd join if I did."

"And why haven't you joined before?"

The young fisherman hesitated, then looked squarely into the general's face.

"'Cause I haven't wanted to, sir," he answered. "I didn't see the use, and I didn't have any idea of joining today until we—I got right in front of your quarters."

SUDDENLY A GREAT LIGHT FLASHED UP ON THEM.

"You and Pete?"

"N-no, sir. Pete's sister. Pete don't know of my being here yet. Sally came up with us when we brought the fish."

"H'm! Well, you and Pete report to me at dark, for instructions, and, oh, yes, what is your name?"

"Lige Pommery, sir."

On the corner stood a girl, apparently engaged in diligently examining the contents of a window. Lige went straight to her.

"Well, I've 'listed, Sally," he announced briefly, "and 'listed Pete too. It wa'n't that I was afraid, as I told you, but I didn't see the use."

The girl had flashed on him with a startled look at the first words. Now she made a visible effort at self control, biting her lips, with the color coming slowly to her face.

"It isn't much to enlist," she said sharply. "The courage tells when it comes to fighting. You'll back out yet, Lige Pommery. I've never forgot how Ben Peprell slapped your face and you turned and hurried off into the woods."

"Ben Peprell was smaller than me, Sally, and he was an old man and drunk. It—it wa'n't easy for me to go into the woods that day. I had to do it, or—or done something I'd been sorry for afterward."

"You ran off, and there were a hundred people looking, and they hooted," the girl said mercilessly. "Now you say you've 'listed, but it's likely for a month or two of drilling round the camp. When orders come for you to be sent to the front there'll be plenty of time to run off again."

The words were bitter, but there was something behind them which caused Lige to glance at her quickly, only, however, to meet flashing eyes and curling lips.

"From the way the general spoke I think there'll be some front work tonight," he answered slowly. "Only it—it isn't any use for you and me to talk, Sally. We never seem to get anywhere."

The general was writing when Lige and Pete were ushered into his presence by an orderly. Presently he turned from his desk.

"It will be a terrible night," he said. "Do you think you can reach Cane Point through the storm and besieging vessels?"

They started. Cane Point was over a mile downstream and surrounded by such a network of snags and sunken limbs that it was considered perilous even by daylight. The general watched them keenly.

"In addition to natural dangers," he observed significantly, "there are doubtless explosives placed in the river by the enemy. Are you two ready to risk all chances?"

"If you'll let us," they answered.

"Very well. Here are two dispatches exactly alike. If one of you fails, the other may succeed. You will go to the little cabin under the three live oaks and give the papers to a cripple you will find there. If you succeed, show a light from Live Oak hill. A lantern swung in a half circle will answer." He paused a moment, then added in an impressive voice: "The papers must not be seen by the enemy, and, if necessary, you must die yourselves to insure their destruction. Now go."

There was a little of the excitement of battle as they removed their clothing on the wharf and fastened the waterproof bags containing the dispatches more securely about their necks, nothing but the solid wall of blackness around, which was now and then cut by a lightning's flash, showing glimpses of the black hulls of the silent watchdogs which invested the city.

The current was in their favor, but the wind blew against them. However, it served to deaden the sound of the waves against their faces. As they neared the line of gunboats they swam as lightly as possible, keeping all but their faces under water. The darkness was full of ears now. One by one they felt rather than saw the dark hulls glide by. Frequently they had to sink under water as a sudden flash showed sentinel forms within a few yards.

A dozen times they were on the point of being discovered, but escaped by a seeming miracle. Sometimes their hands would encounter the side of a vessel before they were aware of its vicinity. Since leaving the wharf neither had dared to speak. Once or twice Lige fancied from his companion's labored breathing that he was becoming exhausted.

Suddenly, as they were moving along side by side, a great light flashed upon them from the deck of a vessel close by and a dozen stern faces met their gaze. They sank instantly, and a shower of bullets rained upon the water. Second after second passed, and a glimpse of a white face was seen several rods down the river and was met by another patter of bullets. A little to the right a second white face showed for an instant and received a similar welcome. Some minutes passed, and a dark spot appeared still lower down. A perfect storm of bullets almost instantly fell about it.

A few more seconds and then somebody said, "I guess they're done for." The lights disappeared, and the vessel returned to its dark watchfulness.

In his quarters the general paced up and down uneasily. He had reckoned much on the success of this enterprise. It meant much to the cause. In spite of its apparent impossibility he had hopes that the young fishermen might succeed—had almost brought himself to believe that they would.

But as the hours went by he ceased to glance toward Live Oak hill. The enterprise had failed, and the brave boys were at the bottom of the river.

Suddenly, as he passed the window, he uttered an exclamation of surprise. Surely there was a light on Live Oak hill, a lantern swinging to and fro. Even as it moved a brother officer entered the room with beaming face. The two grasped hands.

Meanwhile Lige, alone, was being given some hasty attention by a tall man who seemed to have forgotten his supposed crippled condition as he moved hurriedly about the cabin. Lige was covered with bruises and cuts and blood flowed freely from a dozen or more wounds. Eventually he crawled out, with little injury save the scars.

And a year afterward Sally, in whose eyes the one time scorn had long since turned to love and admiration, declared those same scars were not scars, but decorations.

The Cry of the Owl.

Recently in south Devon, England, a rector was explaining to his Sunday school children the clauses of the "Te Deum" when it occurred to him to ask, "What are cherubim?"

The answer promptly came back, "White owls, sir."

"What are seraphim, then?" asked the astonished rector.

"Brown owls, sir."

"Why do you think so?" he further inquired.

"Because, sir, it says, 'Cherubim and seraphim continually do cry,' and that is owls, sir."

That this belief is not one wholly of the present day the author of "Bird Life and Bird Lore" bears witness, for he quotes from a book published early in the last century, which contains a chapter entitled "Cherubim Shooting."

The book is "Sporting Anecdotes" and tells of two cockney sportsmen who succeeded in bringing down a white owl, a bird they had never seen before. It threw itself against a bank and, drawing up its claws, as its manner is, spread its large wings until it seemed to be all eyes and wings.

One of the sportsmen gazed at it in horror and exclaimed, "Heaven forgive us, we have shot a cherubim!"

Bu-Ju

THE GENTLE KIDNEY CURE

Hundreds of people, who have been cured of Kidney Trouble by Bu-Ju, were first induced to try this wonderful remedy by friends who had themselves been cured. The sales of Bu-Ju are daily increasing, because everyone who takes them is benefitted—and these in turn, tell others. So the good news is spread.

Here is what a Picton man says about Bu-Ju:—

"I have used Bu-Ju with great benefit to myself, and cheerfully recommend to all who, I think, are suffering from Kidney Troubles and Rheumatism.

"I think Bu-Ju the best remedy made."

Yours sincerely,

Moonlight Cure

By DONALD ALLEN

Copyright, 1905, by K. A. Whitehead

Reuben Fenshaw, farmer, or Uncle Reube, as most folks called him, was harnessing a horse to a light wagon in the barnyard after dinner when his wife, who was fat and good tempered and generally referred to as Aunt Hilda, came out of the kitchen.

"Pa," she said, "are you going to drive into the village this afternoon?"

"Got to go in after a new scythe," he replied.

"Well, I want you to go to Snyder's dry goods store and buy one o' them two dollar hammocks."

"A two dollar hammock!" he exclaimed as he suspended work and stood with open mouth.

"You heard what I said, and I want you to be sure to get it."

"But—but who for? When did we get rich enough to have two dollar hammocks around the house? Strikes me you are going crazy."

"I don't care how it strikes you as long as you bring the hammock back. Here's the money. It's change I've saved out of the butter and egg money."

"But who ever heard of such extravagance? What'll the neighbors say? They even giggle when we take a rocking chair out in the grass after supper."

"Then we'll give 'em their fill of giggling. You be sure to bring that hammock back with you, and if you can't possibly stand it perhaps I'll tell you further news after you come home."

Uncle Reube returned an hour before sundown with his new scythe, and he hadn't forgotten the hammock. He flung the bundle on the veranda.

"Looks to me like the first step to the poorhouse," he said, "but there 'tis."

Under Aunt Hilda's directions he put it up, and when all was ready she took him out behind the smokehouse and said:

"Pa, haven't you noticed anything queer about our Mary lately?"

"I dunno that I have," he replied. "She seems to have lost her appetite, and she ain't singing around as much as she was, but I hadn't took much notice."

"SHET UP! NOW HE'S AT THE GATE."

"No, of course not. Fathers never do. I can tell you that Mary is threatened with the decline."

"Do you mean she's pining?"

"Yes, you might call it that. She's lost her appetite; she is mum as a stump; she don't sing or whistle. She don't eat enough in a day to keep a chickadee alive. It's got to be a serious case, pa; very serious."

"Shoo! Shall I send for Dr. Dobbins?"

"Not for a few days yet, not till I try my own cure on her. That's what I wanted that hammock for. I'm going to try the moonlight cure on her."

"I never heard of it."

"There's a good many things you never heard of, Pa Fenshaw. It's moonlight nights now, and Mary will sit out in the hammock till midnight, mebbe."

"For how many nights?"

"No telling, but six or seven will make a cure, I hope. If it don't we shall have to try something else. Now, then, don't you go to pecking around like an old hen and asking a lot of questions. Don't say a word to Mary. When you get ready to go to bed o' nights stir your stumps right along and don't tell her that it's time she was in. I know how to work this cure, and I don't want you to spile it."

"I've lived longer'n you have, and I never knew the moonlight to cure anybody yet," he said in sulky tones.

"Then I may learn you something new. Just do as I tell you and I'll have something more to explain bimeby."

That evening the moon rose as big as a barrel and as bright as a new silver dollar, and the old folks went to bed at 9 o'clock and left their twenty-year-old daughter swinging in the hammock in the moonlight in plain view of anybody passing along the highway.

When Uncle Reube retired, his wife was sitting by the open window facing the road. An hour later, when some noise awoke him, she was still sitting there.

"Ma Fenshaw, have you gone crazy?" he asked as he sat up in bed.

"S-s-s-sh!" she replied.

"Is it any one trying to get into the smokehouse?"

"No; of course not. Didn't you hear him whistling? He saw Molly in her hammock as plain as day, but his pride wouldn't let him stop. He even pretended not to look this way. He'll come to it, though."

"What on earth are you gabbing about?"

"Nothing. I'm coming right to bed. I've been sitting up to let my tired feet cool off."

Uncle Reube was too sleepy to ask further questions. On the following night, however, when he awoke again and found Aunt Hilda carefully crawling out of bed, he became too curious to remain silent longer.

"Now, then," he began, wide awake with interest, "if you don't tell me all about it I'll holler right out! There is some mystery going on here, and I'm going to know what it is."

"Well, you are such an old hen huzzy that I s'pose I've got to tell you. Did you know that Molly and Joe Williams had quarreled?"

"N-o-o. Why, they are engaged."

"That's nothing to do with it. Me and you never quarreled till after we was engaged. Yes, they quarreled about one of them Taylor gals. She went in to cut Molly out."

"Shoo! Come to think of it, Joe hasn't been here in a week."

"Oh, you've just remembered that, have you? No, he hain't been here, and Molly hasn't se[illegible] him any word either. She's standing up for her rights."

"Waal?"

"Waal, a woman don't want to carry her rights too far. She's out there in the hammock to give Joe Williams a chance to see and speak to her if he wants to. If he does want to, she'll call him Mr. Williams and be very dignified until she knows he's real sorry."

"Shoo! What critters women are! So that's your moonlight cure?"

"Yes, that's it, but you needn't tell the whole neighborhood. Joe has been past the house these last two nights, and I'm looking for tomorrer night to effect a cure. If he wasn't conscience stricken and yearning to make up he wouldn't be sneaking around as he is. Now, go to sleep."

Uncle Reuben had forgotten all about love and romance, but when the third night came he couldn't sleep. Aunt Hilda tried to bundle him off to bed, but he stuck by the window.

"I want to see this thing out as much as you do, and I won't budge one inch," he declared obstinately.

He didn't, but there was room for two to watch. They went upstairs promptly at 9 o'clock, and at half past 10 Joe Williams' whistle was heard down the road.

"It's what they calls a crisis, hain't it?" whispered Uncle Reube.

"You keep still and never mind about crisises. He's whistling 'The Old Folks at Home' because he knows it's Molly's favorite. Now I can see him. Now he's walking past, but he is looking this way for all he's worth. Now he's gone on."

"And your moonlight cure has failed!"

"Shet up! Now he's coming back. Now he's at the gate. Now he's coughing. Now he's pushed the gate open and is walking right in. Now—now"—

"Now what?"

"There isn't any more nows to it, but if you don't get up in the morning to find Molly singing about the house like she used to then you can giggle around and say there's nothing in the moonlight cure and that a mother fifty-five years old don't know enough to take care of one daughter."

"I—I guess I'll go down and say howdy to Joe," faltered Uncle Reube. "If I don't he may walk off ag'in."

"I guess you'll do nothing of the kind!" exclaimed Aunt Hilda. "Did you put that hammock up strong?"

"It will hold a cow."

"Well, it's holding a young man and a gal by this time, and you be thankful that you hain't got a fool for a wife—something to match you!"

She Assented.

James Waldron, for several years superintendent of the Albion company's mills, was one day approached by a recently landed daughter of the Emerald Isle, and the following conversation ensued:

"Oh, Misther Waldron, sor, could ye plaze l'ave me have a bit av a rise in me pay, a dollar a wake or the loike av that?"

"No, Katie, I couldn't. Don't you know yourself that you're not worth any more than you're getting already?"

"Oi suppose so. But, Misther Waldron, sor, could ye rise me pay the bit av 75 cents, sor?"

"Couldn't do it, Kate. You're getting all you earn now."

"Oi suppose so. Could ye l'ave me have 50 cents more the wake, Misther Waldron?"

"Not much. The only way for you to get more pay is to earn it."

"Oi suppose so. But, Misther Waldron"—

"Look here! What do you take me for, a blamed fool?"

"Oi suppose so." And Katie walked away discouraged at last.—Boston Herald.

Mocha Coffee.

The raising of Mocha coffee is done by Arabs out in the mountainous country of Arabia, where no white man has ever been and statisticians and crop forecasters are unknown. There are no extensive plantations out there as we know of them in other places, but each Arab has his own few bushes around his little house and raises enough coffee for his own use and a little for trading for other commodities. It thus becomes a difficult and slow process to collect from hundreds of people enough to load a caravan. The markets of Aden and Hodeida are several hundred miles from where the coffee is grown, and the journey to these markets takes several weeks.

Causes of Shipwreck.

"As a representative of one of the insurance underwriters I have taken part in the investigations of more than 400 shipwrecks," said a former sch captain. "The causes of wrecks are drink, fogs, neglect to use the sounding lead and unknown currents.

"The most dangerous waters are off the east coast of England, Cape Ushant and Cape Finistere. In the past the shifting of the cargo caused a good many wrecks, but the adoption of feed pipes has changed all that. Cargoes liable to shift consist of wheat, iron ore, coal and so on. Great feed pipes filled with part of such cargoes now run down into the hold, and if the cargo shifts at all the pipes automatically pour more cargo into the space that has been made vacant.

"Off a wild part of the South American coast a four master loaded with high heeled French shoes was once wrecked. The native Indians stole the shoes, but couldn't wear them. They used them instead for boxing gloves, giving each other terrific taps with the French heels."

Beats Horse Show Driving.

A western man was telling some stories of daring driving, some realistic and some hyperbolic. "There is a story," he said, "of One Eyed Pete McCoy. If this story is true, the four-in-hand drivers of the east are only practicing a decayed and degenerate form of coaching. One Eyed Pete drove a Dakota stagecoach that made a circuit of Deadwood, Carbonate, Spearfish and Bear Gulch. He tore into Carbonate one day on his usual dead run. Like an avalanche, the coach clattered up to the hotel door. There suddenly it stopped, and one of the horses fell stone dead.

"'A very sudden death,' said a bystander.

"'Sudden? Not at all,' said One Eyed Pete. 'That there hoss died at the top of the hill, nine mile back, sir, but I wa'n't goin' to let him down till I got to the reg'lar stoppin' place.'"

The Chinchilla.

Chinchilla is a beautiful soft gray fur. It is not the most durable of furs, and, because of the difficulty of getting the perfect skin, it cannot be said to be among the least expensive. A muff and stole of the real chinchilla cost easily $1,000 or so. The tiny chinchilla itself, not more than twelve inches long, with a plump little body on short, stout legs, thrives only in the tropics. The little beasts have to be killed with the utmost precaution not to injure their fur, that grows on a skin nearly as tender and soft as a web of silk. A perfect skin not larger than a small pocket handkerchief is a revelation in fur growth. The texture of every hair is finer than floss silk, the length of it nearly an inch and the coloring about that of the soft, undyed marabou feathers.

Magic Figures.

"The most remarkable arrangement of numbers that I know of," said a local business college man who takes a delight in solving curious problems and digging up mathematical oddities, "is the combination of the six figures 142,857. Multiply this number by 2, and the answer is 285,714; by 3, and the answer is 428,571; by 4, and the answer is 571,428; by 5, and the answer is 714,285; by 6, and the answer is 857,142. Each answer contains exactly the same digits as the original sum, and, to cap the climax, multiply the number by 7, and up comes the answer 999,999. Try it and see if it is not so."

A Rare Coin.

When Louisiana seceded, Jan. 26, 1861, the new government seized the United States mint at New Orleans and struck $254,820 in double eagles and $1,101,316.50 in silver half dollars, using the United States dies for 1861. The bullion was exhausted in May, 1861, when the coinage ceased and the United States dies were destroyed. A Confederate States die was then made, to be used for silver half dollars, but it was not fit for use in coining press, the relief being too high. Four half dollars were struck with it on a screw press, and these comprise the entire coinage of the Confederate States.

ZANGWILL EPIGRAMS

CLEVER THINGS THE WITTY AUTHOR SAID ABOUT THE JEWS.

The Way He Compared His Coreligionists to United States Bonds—His Illustration of Some of the Striking Hebrew Characteristics.

Some years since Israel Zangwill when on a visit to this country delivered an address in New York city to his own people. A few of the epigrams which he then coined concerning the characteristics of the Hebrews are here offered:

The Jews had no country of their own. They could not possess the land of their fathers in reality. So they made a portable Palestine. They carried it wherever they went. This was a spiritual country. It could not be assailed by their oppressors.

There have been two conceptions of the Jew—one that he lends money and wants it back again, the other that he deals in old clothes. The truth is Jews have been everywhere. They have been everything except pope of Rome, and they have come near to that. If they dealt in old clothes it was because papal decrees forbade them trading in anything else but old clothes and old iron.

Jews in a way were as good as United States bonds, only United States bonds may be converted, but when a Jew was converted he lost his value.

Because Shylock was rich and Jessica beautiful all Jews are rich and all Jewesses are beautiful. I wish it were so.

A good looking Jew was considered the fool of the family, which is consolation for some of us.

The black plague swept over Europe. The Jews escaped by reason of their different hygienic laws. The Christians charged them with poisoning the wells, and thousands of Jews were put to death for not dying of the plague.

Colonel Roosevelt told me that the Jews of his regiment were among his bravest soldiers, and when Hobson had to be kissed it took a Jewess to do it.

Jews not only furnished money for Columbus' expedition, but his first lieutenant was a Jew. This officer discovered tobacco, which is greater than America.

Carlyle said the Jews had no humor, but Carlyle was a Scotchman.

A beggar stole a spoon from a wealthier member of his race who had entertained him. When detected the beggar said: "By taking the spoon I broke the eighth commandment, which says 'Thou shalt not steal.' If I had not taken it I would have broken the tenth, which says, 'Thou shalt not covet.' I saw I had to break one commandment anyhow, so I thought I might as well have the spoon."

It has always been the desire of Jewish fathers, however rich, to have learned sons-in-law, however poor. I do not find this custom prevalent today.

To illustrate why there are no good Jews in fiction Mr. Zangwill related the story of the lion and the cub. The cub had seen a painting of Samson vanquishing the lion, and said to its parent: "I have seen many contests between lions and men, and always the men have been the victors. Why are there no pictures showing lions overpowering men?" "It is because we lions have no painters," was the parent's reply.

The Jews have been scattered to the four winds among all the nations of the earth. They have been of immense service to every country that has harbored them. It reminds me of the story of the crocodile which opened its mouth so that a bird might go into it and eat the leeches which annoyed it. There was mutual benefit from the operation. It is not strange that sometimes the Jews find the crocodile's mouth closing upon them. It was natural that Jews should congregate around their synagogues. They became to some extent isolated from the people among whom they dwelt. This isolation brought with it suspicion, and suspicion caused more isolation for mutual protection.

In mediaeval times the nations of Europe had a conception of the Jewish character compared to which Shakespeare's Shylock was a saint. It was this that brought about the compulsory ghetto.

There are two general types of Jews, the German and the Spanish. The Spanish Jews speak a mixture of Hebrew and Spanish. The German Jews speak Yiddish, a mongrel of bad German and every other language in the world.

The Jews financed the crusades voluntarily and involuntarily. There was nothing they had not financed, not even their own persecutions.

The Difference Between Two Poets.

Claudius on being asked what was the difference between him and Klopstock replied: "Klopstock says, 'Thou who art my inferior and yet my equal, approach hither, and, stooping to the ground, relieve me of the burden of these dust begrimed nether integuments,' whereas I simply say, 'Johann, come and pull off my boots.'"

Nothing In It.

Towne—I never saw a man who was so fond of entertaining as Henpeck is. It's really remarkable. Browne—Oh, that's not so strange. You see, his wife is quite pleasant to him when there's company in the house.

Quite a Difference.

"You won't be able to enjoy the same luxuries after you're married."

"Why not? I'm able to afford them."

"Oh, yes. I just said you wouldn't be able to enjoy them."

The way to the heart is through the senses. Please the eyes and ears and the work is half done.—Chesterfield.

EXPERT DAIRY FARMER.

Miss Margaret Astor Chanler Is a Practical Young Woman.

Acknowledging a hobby, but not a fad, Miss Margaret Astor Chanler of the famous New York house of Astor is devoting herself to practical farming and dairying.

It is not of her aristocratic and wealthy connection that she is proud, but of her farm, her cattle and her pigs.

At Barrytown, N. Y., she may be found three-fourths of the year roaming over her broad acres, directing the farm work and supervising the strictly scientific methods that prevail in her splendid dairy, which has such an enviable reputation that milk from it sells readily above the market price.

No bit of work on the entire farm escapes Miss Chanler's personal supervision. She knows every animal and fowl on the place, from the splendid Jersey cows to the little brood of especially fine Plymouth Rocks and Leghorns.

MISS MARGARET ASTOR CHANLER.

Although all the farm apparatus and everything connected with the work are of the best make and material, there is nothing fancy about them. Miss Chanler is a thorough, old fashioned farmer and will have no fads connected with the work.

"This is a farm," she says, "and not an experimental station or a modernized labor saving agricultural enterprise. We are farming, and in the good, old fashioned way."

In fact, it is a model farm in every way over which Miss Chanler presides, and its productiveness is largely due to the skill of the woman who prefers a farmer's life to the gayeties of the high social set to which she belongs.—Philadelphia North American.

"Good Fellow" Girls.

The "good fellow" girl will lend her money and her clothes to other girls just to show how generous she is.

She will spend her money foolishly and get in debt, so that people will not think her mean.

In time she will get to despise economy, thrift and prudence and will fancy it is old fashioned to care for church or Sunday school.

Cheap, loud people will begin to seem to her the only ones to emulate. The quiet refinement that should mark every woman's dress and manner entirely disappears, says Kate Masterson in the Chicago Inter Ocean.

She doesn't care what people think, not she! She will not take a dare and so becomes known as "one of the boys." What an unpleasant appellation! Almost as hateful as that other name for the "good fellow" girl—"thoroughbred."

Some men's idea of a "thoroughbred" is something exactly opposed to the sort of woman they would choose for a wife.

It means loudness of dress and manner, a bold stare, a slangy mode of speech, a general lack of modesty and good taste.

Don't try to be a thoroughbred or one of the boys, please. Don't be a good fellow. Be a lady.

Old Photographs.

There are very few homes which have not numerous old photographs too precious to be thrown away, yet of interest to few besides the immediate family. These generally take up too much space to be kept where they can be got at conveniently, and so are carefully put in boxes in the storeroom or attic, to be kept from the dust. So when we would gladly spend a few moments looking on the familiar faces and scenes, alas, it is too much trouble to get them out. Here is one solution of the problem: Put the photographs in clear, hot water, and in a short time the pictures can be easily removed from the cards. When dry either trim down the picture (to economize space) or cut away the background entirely. This last requires care, but can be done without destroying the outline. Mount these in a scrapbook or, better still, a book made especially for kodak pictures. This book or these books, if more than one is needed, can be made very interesting by clever arrangement of the pictures, grouping relatives, school friends, army comrades, babes, out of door scenes, etc., in different portions of the book.

The "Gospel of Flannel."

Now as to the great gospel of flannel. Let us clearly understand that the indispensable character of any garment worn next the skin is that it be absorbent. It does not matter where the warm—that is, badly conducting—layer is placed so long as the layer next the skin is absorbent. This property depends not upon the material, but upon its texture, and wool may be woven into a nonabsorbent form, while other fabrics may be woven into perfectly absorbent forms. Different makes of cotton wool vary widely in this regard, as every surgeon knows. There are flannel garments which are totally unfitted for wearing next the skin or anywhere else, since they are almost as incapable of absorbing moisture or of permitting ventilation as is india rubber. These facts are beginning to be recognized, and I could name quite a dozen firms which now make a point of supplying linen, silk and cotton undergarments which are perfectly absorbent and far more comfortable than wool to sensitive skins.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Dressing the Door.

She who has need to keep a door closed which leads from one room to another no longer gazes desparingly at the unfriendly woodwork marring her wall, nor hides it by a portiere for inquisitive hands to push aside. On the contrary, she covers the door on one side with a piece of burlap with a lining of brown paper, tacking the burlap tightly round the cracks between the door and its supports. Then across the little alcove between the joints she inserts shelves for books and bric-a-brac, perhaps running silken curtains across, but often leaving the books exposed to view. At the foot of the now disguised doorway she may place a drop piece of fancy burnt wood, which, opening outward, portfolio-like, holds photographs and prints nicely.

Fevers.

All fevers, simple, severe and deadly, that are met with in this country are strangely alike in their symptoms at the outset; hence, while feverishness should not alarm, it may not be treated with indifference. In all cases the following simple procedures may be adopted: Give the patient a tepid bath, the temperature of the water being about 60 degrees F. When the bath is finished and the patient dry give a saline draft. A seidlitz powder will answer if the dose is proportioned to age. In mild cases this treatment will satisfy all needs.

Using a Depilatory.

"Every genuine depilatory is a caustic, and its first effect is to bite through the hairs just below the skin's surface," says a physician who is not above giving beauty hints to his patients. "But this does not destroy the roots; hence the hairs grow again. By using the depilatory daily for many weeks you may kill the roots, but unless you are careful you are likely to get only one result—namely, a sore face. If the hair is pulled out with tweezers before the depilatory is applied it has a better chance of getting at the roots."

Facial Gymnastics.

Facial gymnastics as a habit are both unbecoming and injurious. They show a lack of repose that is associated with caste, and they affect the good looks of the future. Puckers and frowns, contractions and expansions and distortions too prodigal in youth mean premature wrinkles and crow's feet and furrows. Elasticity of muscles is a thing to be husbanded, not overstrained. No chronic facial mannerism is admired except by the prejudiced.

Work Aprons.

An apron invaluable to the woman who does her own work is the housework apron, made of white rubber sheeting and bound with wash ribbon. This apron is just the thing to slip over one's dress when cooking or when washing dishes. It is cut circular and made slightly full at the waist. Then there is a plain bib, with straps which fasten to the narrow belt at the back.

Bathing a Child.

A child should never be left in a bath to exceed five minutes, and three is better. Some children cannot stand a daily bath, and unless it is discontinued they become weak and exhausted. In such cases a tepid sponging is best, twice a week or oftener, till the child improves. Alcohol or sea salt can be added to the water with good effect.

Gold Furniture.

Gold furniture should only be wiped off with a dry chamois. As the gold is extremely thin, it would be sure to wear off on the edges if rubbed too often with a cloth. Never use any water on gold furniture, for the gold on the burnished parts is liable to come off if it becomes wet.

What She Means.

When a married woman says she has all the rights she wants what she really means is that she has a good husband. In America most men are so much better than the law that most women never find out how bad the law is.—Woman's Journal.

Black oak or Flemish oak and all other furniture finished with what is called a wax finish should not be cleaned with the regular furniture polish, but with a wax polish.

The pure white of china may be preserved if washing blue be added occasionally to the water used for washing it.

Rub kerosene on the zinc under the stove once a day, and it will always look bright.

The Results Will Make Your Own Life Brighter and Nobler.

We must all realize that this life is full of sorrow, and if you personally have had the good luck to escape your share of it you are very fortunate.

But do not on that account allow yourself to grow cold hearted and unsympathetic to others.

Those poor others! Their lot is often so hard, so lonely, so full of misery.

We are here to "heal the wounds and bind the broken heart," and the only way we can do this is by being kind, loving and sympathetic.

A few words of love will do more to help a sufferer than money sometimes, for heartsickness is much harder to help than hunger and poverty. Show interest in others; try to help them; go out of your way to lighten the burden of the heavily laden.

Do not hesitate to whisper your kindly thoughts in their ears. Don't pass by on the "other side." If you are strong, then be merciful, says Woman's Life.

Remember that we all look at life from different standpoints, and what might appear like a grain of mustard seed in your path to you is an almost insurmountable obstacle to your weaker sister.

The more she shrinks the more necessity for you to step in and help her on her way with genuine sympathy and loving sisterly words and acts.

THE BACHELOR GIRL.

Along Certain Lines She Is Indicative of Feminine Progress.

She is not an evil, indicative of race suicide. She is a statutary step. She indicates progress. Marshall Field, twice married, declares that marriage is a good thing if one gets the right woman.

American bachelor girls are applying Mr. Field's theory and waiting for the right one.

In the so called "good old days" they didn't wait; hence the seed of the divorce evil and inferior offspring—the genuine seed of race suicide.

In those days they married the eligible whom parents selected or the substantial one, who offered a good home, in order to escape the awful ignominy of becoming an old maid. And then came unhappiness.

But things are changing. It has been discovered that a man in her life is not to every woman an indispensable attachment.

True, the fullest and best and most fortunate life is that in which the right man is.

But, failing to find the right man, a woman does infinitely better to paddle her own canoe.—Louisville Herald.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

Puncture wounds caused by a pin or black lead pencil should be sucked to extract any poisonous matter.

When the heel becomes blistered it will be remedied by applying a little yellow laundry soap scraped and mixed to a paste with water.

To remove a wart dampen it and rub with a piece of common salt. Do this three or four times a day for a month, and the wart will drop off, leaving no mark on the skin.

A quarter of a teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda taken in a cup of hot water after meals will relieve severe indigestion or without soda it will allay pains in the stomach if drunk at that time.

When a person has accidentally swallowed glass it is a mistake to administer a purgative. Instead allow plenty of crackers to be eaten or thick oatmeal gruel or anything similar, so as to protect the intestines.

See the Funny Side.

Make your husband feel comfortable. That is the wisest thing any wife can do, if she desires to hold her husband's devotion, to say nothing of rendering him happy. Don't be critical at any time, and, above all, don't criticise your husband in public. Cultivate a sense of humor. Everything in life has its funny side, and when you laugh at a worry its sting is gone, says Woman's Life. If you must tell your husband of the mischances of the day, show them to him as a joke. Make light of worries. Encourage him to feel that home is a refuge, not a clearing house for your perplexities. Let him bring his men friends home with him, and don't look distressed if he sometimes expresses a desire to go off and have an evening with the boys.

Drying the Hair.

More important perhaps than the washing is the drying of the hair. This should be done with warm, soft towels. Never use Turkish towels, as they are very apt to tangle the hair and catch it in their meshes, thus pulling it out. They are more apt also to leave lint on the hair than are towels with a smooth surface. Always dry your hair, if possible, in the sun, as this gives a gloss and sheen that can be obtained in no other way. Let the direct rays shine upon it and never put it up until it is as dry as before you washed it. In drying the hair it is well to grasp it by the ends and shake it, as in this way the moisture is more quickly evaporated.

Soiled Woodwork.

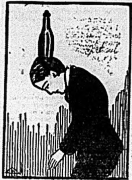
When cleaning finger marks or soiled places from painted woodwork it should always be remembered that the doors, windows, etc., must be dusted or wiped off first with a dry rag and then wet with clear water, beginning at the top and working down to prevent streaks. Scrub clean with a soft rag and good laundry soap or use water and ammonia. Then dry by rubbing from the top down with a flannel rag or chamois.

UP AND DOWN.

A Very Difficult Bottle Trick and How to Perform It.

Here we have the picture of a boy with a bottle standing on the back of his head. You will say, perhaps, that you can easily perform that little feat, and we do not doubt that you can. But that is only the first step in the amusing task that we are going to set for you.

We want you, if you please, to balance a bottle on the back of your head and then to stoop down and pick up a silver quarter from the floor with your lips and rise again, all without letting the bottle fall or touching it with your hand. If you think the experiment might be fatal to the integrity of the bottle—that, in other words, there might be a smashup—use a tin canister or something of that kind instead of the bottle.



HOW THE TRICK LOOKS.

But the use of the bottle makes the feat decidedly more interesting, from the very fact that a smashup is possible. The use of a tin vessel, therefore, would be too tame to suit most boys.

Now, if you will follow our directions closely, you may succeed in the feat and bring the bottle out safe and whole.

First, bend the head forward until the chin rests on the breast; then balance the bottle in its place, on the crown of the head. Be sure to do the beginning well, and the rest will be easier than it looks.

Bend the knees gently, coming to the floor on one knee. Then lower the hands to the floor and, thus supported, push the feet gradually and slowly back until the face is able to reach the quarter.

Resuming the first position is merely going through these movements in reverse order. Slow, steady, even, careful movement is the secret of success in the feat.—New York Mail.

INDOOR SPORT.

The Adverb Game Makes Fun, and Any Number May Play.

This is a simple little game, in which a player wins by noticing the manner in which the other players answer his questions.

The players take seats in a row, and one is sent out of the room, lots having been drawn to see who this one will be. When he is gone the other players agree on an adverb, and when he is called back he must ask each player a question—no matter what—and the answers are to be given in a manner expressive of the adverb.

Let us say that the adverb selected is "crossly;" then every question that the recalled player asks is answered in a cross or snappish manner. If "mildly" be the adverb the answers are given accordingly. "Laughingly," "carelessly," "quickly," are other adverbs that might be used.

The player scores a point when he guesses the adverb, and then some one goes out in his place. If he fails to score he has to go out again, when another adverb is selected, and he comes back and tries a second time.

He continues going out and coming back until he guesses the word.

Atmospheric Pressure.

If you desire to obtain a vivid idea of the force of atmospheric pressure try the following simple experiment:

Place an ordinary wooden ruler on a table in such a manner that half of it will project beyond the edge of the table and then over the table and the portion of the ruler thereon lay a smooth sheet of paper.

Now, if you strike the exposed part of the ruler it will in nine cases out of ten break in half, and yet the sheet of paper on the table will neither be raised nor moved in the slightest from its position. The simple reason is because the atmospheric pressure exerted on the paper is more than sufficient to counterbalance the force of the blow which is struck at the ruler.

By means of simple experiments like these one can learn a great deal of science.

The Best Way.

If I make a face at Billy,
He will make a face at me.
That makes two ugly faces
And a quarrel, don't you see?
And then I double up my fist
And hit him, and he'll pay
Me back by giving me a kick
Unless I run away.

But if I smile at Billy
'Tis sure to make him laugh.
You'd say, if you could see him,
'Twas jollier by half
Than kicks and ugly faces.
I tell you, all the while
It's pleasanter for any boy
(Or girl) to laugh and smile.

THE HOME TELEPHONE.

One Woman Suggests Having Regular Hours For Its Use.

"I received a note from a friend the other morning with instructions to ring her up on the telephone any day from 10 to 11 or evenings from 7 to 8," said the busy woman. "Now, that's what I call common sense, if somewhat proscribing. Questioned about her plan she gave her reasons succinctly. 'I have to regulate telephone hours or I should live on the stairs. It is disagreeable to be disturbed at breakfast and dinner. I am attending to the day's affairs from 10 to 11 and downstairs, so I do not mind being called up at that time, but I do mind being called downstairs. After dinner I am willing to be rung up for an hour. Of course if something of importance has happened I do not scold about being called to the phone at other times, but women don't wait to have something to say always, as most of us know. After rushing downstairs in answer to its summons I used to find that some sentimental woman friend wanted to know how I felt, or some gossip desired to tell me all she knew and drain me of all my information over the wire for twenty minutes or so. It would have been insanity for me if I hadn't put the embargo on promiscuous ringing up. I belong to organizations, I have a family, I am a churchwoman—all these duties are absorbing, so I am not one of those with nothing to do but to ceaselessly ring up women without mental occupations. Recommend my plan. It gives the rest of the day a liberty we all knew before we simply had to have telephones to help us cope with our increasingly complex lives.'"—New York Mail.

CUSHIONS AND PILLOWS.

They Should Be Comfortable, Homelike and Cozy Objects.

One must agree with a writer in the House Beautiful that the popularity of tomahawks and war paint as sofa pillow decorations is difficult to understand. "A pillow," remarks this sensible writer, "is, or should be, a comfortable, homelike and rather cozy object. A savage bristling with paint and feathers does not invite companionship. The Gibson pillow is almost as atrocious as the Indian pillow, and with it should be classed the portrait pillow and the pillow etched with the poker. A plain pillow, 20 by 20, made of linen or some other washable material, is a joy to the eye after the fussy, dressed up pillows of the shops. Against a brown or green wall pillows in plain linen, the colors ranging through the nasturtium shades, make an extremely agreeable color effect. When decoration is desired excellent results are obtained by cross stitch. Canvas makes a good foundation for pillows of this sort." Java prints, India calicoes, Japanese printed crape and many other inexpensive cottons are to be had and make very attractive pillows. For a bedroom flowered chintz cushions are delightful. If handsomer fabrics are desired, there are plenty of soft toned liberty silks, by which any color scheme can be secured. Any of these are to be preferred to the Indian, Gibson and college atrocities one sees only too often.

CULINARY CONCEITS.

The white leaves of celery dried and added to soups give a delicious flavor.

If an apple or onion is put in a duck to be roasted it gives a better flavor to the meat.

You should never use paper of any kind in the cooking. Thin cheesecloth or old muslin can always take its place.

Potatoes may be deliciously baked on an asbestus mat on top of the range. Cover them with a tin pan and give them about one hour.

Stewed prunes will taste much nicer if a few minutes before they are done a very little corn flour is mixed with cold water and stirred in. It thickens the sirup slightly and greatly improves it.

Suet puddings are most nourishing if the suet is chopped as fine as possible and the whole thoroughly well boiled. Any suet left over will keep good for weeks if melted down in a saucepan, strained and stored in a covered pot.

The Women of Egypt.

It is difficult for English speaking women to realize the blankness of mind resulting from the seclusion of women in Egypt. It is true of most that they have never even seen a book and rarely an Arabic newspaper. Practically none can read. They have not even picture books. Anything like serious conversation is unknown. They can talk about their babies or their trinkets, but nothing else. Their needlework is mechanical embroidery. They cannot make their own clothes. They know nothing of what is passing in the outer world, nor do they even realize that there is an outer world. In the country the peasant women are not secluded. They are acquainted with the ordinary operations of agriculture, but in the towns they know nothing of this. They have no idea or wish to know where a potato comes from or how it grows.

To Clean Wall Paper.

All the dust must first be brushed from the walls. Then wipe carefully with clean dusters. Then divide a loaf of stale bread, take the crust in your hand and, beginning at the top of the paper, wipe it downward in the lightest manner with the crumb. Do not cross or go upward. The dirt of the paper and the crumbs will fall together. Do not wipe above half a yard at a stroke, and after doing all the upper part go round again, beginning a little above where you left off. If you do not do it extremely lightly the dirt will adhere to the paper.

ARTISTIC DINING ROOM.

One That Was Evolved by Use of a Simple Color Scheme.

A commonplace dining room was transformed by a scheme that depended neither on furniture nor new things. It was simply a color idea that has proved as satisfactory as anything one could have, be he rich or poor.

The room that was so changed was itself unmitigatedly plain, with "grained" woodwork, a pine floor and wall paper colorless and characterless. The furniture was ordinary, neither good nor bad.

When Venetian red paper was put on the walls the possibilities for distinction began. This discerning woman had long determined to have only blue and white dishes. Because they are cheap and a variety of designs and qualities may be harmonious and because she believed that color managed with judicious determination makes an effect she bought nothing else. So with a red background she actually achieved an effect—that subtle disposition of things that are good and appropriate whether they are cheap or costly. The good colors on the walls and the pine floor stained and rubbed with paraffin and turpentine made the essentials; the nonessentials did the rest.

On a shelf was a row of Japanese teapots. Two plain racks held blue and white plates. Two photos in flat black frames were the only wall decorations. On the sideboard were candelabra of black iron and blue and white porcelain; a punch bowl of Japanese ware, the usual silver and more blue and some red clay teapots on the top shelf.

Blue and white figured denim curtains hung straight at the sides of the windows from top to sill. All the table's dishes were blue and white, some Japanese, some willow pattern, and all of them cheap.

GIRL'S DESK.

Simple Design For One That May Be Easily Made at Home.

A useful, roomy and good design for a desk for a young girl is shown. The drawers and handy compartments show for themselves, and the maker may choose his material from the many varieties of wood and coloring. The design is very simple, and the desk may be made at a small cost, there being no outlay required for expensive hardware fixtures. A small drawer could be set in under the lid if desired.—Ladies' Home Journal.
